This effectively checked the budding general strike movement and left the valiant shopmen to make the fight alone against the combined power of the companies and the nine non-striking unions.

Lee had added one more act of treason to his long and unsavory record.

A Battling Rank and File

The one relieving feature of the great shopmen's strike is the wonderful spirit being shown by the strikers.

Seldom have a body of rebellious workers been more harassed than they, and never have any stood up better under persecution.

The shopmen's struggle will go down in labor history as the most militant fight ever waged by the American working class up till this time.

It is an inspiration to all who one day hope to see the workers strike the shackles from their limbs and become freemen.

Of all the difficulties faced by the strikers there were few except of Organized Labor's own making.

Chief of these was the incompetent leadership of railroad unionism in general. Had the high-paid officialdom been worth its salt the workers would have been lined up in such a solid phalanx as to convince the companies from the beginning that their ranks were unbreakable.

But as it was, with the leaders keeping the unions apart from each other and thereby destroying all possibility of united action, the companies were directly encouraged to go ahead with the fight.

They knew that they could depend upon at least half of the organized workers to stay on the job and to co-operate with the scabs in keeping the roads in operation.

Leadership Obstacle to Victory

The greatest obstacle that the shopmen had to contend with in the strike was the leadership of the railroad unions.

This was so utterly unfitted for the situation as to make the fight an almost impossible one.

Another towering handicap against the workers winning the strike was the raw attitude of opposition assumed by the Government and the courts everywhere.

Troops were sent any place any time that the companies wanted them to overawe the strikers; injunctions were issued by the score all over the country and the railroad property everywhere plastered white with them.

The crowning infamy of this anti-union campaign was the Wilkerson injunction outlawing at one blow 400,000 peaceful strikers. All of which official tyranny is to be blamed upon no one but Labor itself.

For many years Mr. Gompers, backed by weak-kneed henchmen, has forced upon the labor movement his absurd political policy of rewarding friends and punishing enemies, and he has fought down every attempt to found an independent working-class political party.

The result is that the working class has been reduced to a political zero. The governmental power has passed directly into the hands of the great employers.

And who can blame them for using in the shopmen's strike this power which a reactionary labor leadership has given them? The shopmen have paid a bitter price for the A. F. of L. leadership's political stupidity.

Recruit Giant Army of Scabs

Still another obstacle of tremendous importance that the shopmen had to contend against was the gigantic armies of scabs recruited by the companies. Never has the country seen the like before.

Scabs by hundreds of thousands were gathered from the ends of the country and thrown into the railroad shops to take the places of the strikers. It was a veritable deluge of rats.

And for this condition, when the employers can so easily assemble such multitudes of strikebreakers, Organized Labor itself must take the blame.

Because of the sterile leadership of Mr. Gompers and the coterie of reactionaries gathered around him; because they have desperately and successfully resisted every effort to modernize the labor movement and to make it capable of combating a militant capitalism, the big industries of the country have remained unorganized.

They are great reservoirs of industrial rats, perpetuated by our leadership's desperate clinging to an obsolete craft unionism. In the great shopmen's struggle the employers simply drew upon these reservoirs.

The enormous armies of scabs used in the strike, like the craft betrayal and the raw opposition of the government and courts, were but shameful monuments to the incapacity of the Gompers regime to lead American Labor.

The Work Before Us

As the Labor Herald goes to press a settlement is being negotiated on a number of the roads, including the Baltimore & Ohio, New York Central Lines, Chicago & Northwestern, etc., while the strike is going ahead on the rest, which make up at least three-fourths of the total mileage in the country.

Such a partial settlement bodes no good for the railroad shopmen. Even if it can be widened out and made to include great numbers of railroads that are yet refusing to adopt it, it will mark a long step backward for the organizations.

Almost certainly many of the larger and more strategically situated systems will be lost to the shop unions.

The mere fact that such a settlement has to be entered into is a defeat in itself. It would have been entirely unnecessary had the many unions understood to stand together in a united front. Then a clean-cut national settlement covering all the trades and all the roads could have been secured. More, victory could have been won without a strike at all. But we will revert back to the strike settlement in later issues of the Labor Herald.

In the meantime in addition to bending every effort towards winning the strike, we must go ahead more determinedly than ever with our campaign for a general amalgamation of all the railroad unions.

Must Consolidate Organizations

This is the solemn duty of every militant in the railroad industry. Only by consolidating our organizations into one can we prevent a repetition of the disastrous mistakes made in the shopmen's strike.

Already the overwhelming mass of the rank and file of railroad workers are convinced of the necessity for amalgamation.

What must be done now is to crystallize this sentiment into definite action. The boycott of our union journals must be broken and the subject of amalgamation discussed in their columns.

Active steps must be taken to get all the unions to call a general amalgamation convention.

If we will do these things; if we will profit by the experiences of the shopmen and bring all our organizations under one head, then the great struggle of the past three months will well repay the bitter suffering and heartrending effort that it cost.

Let us make a reality of the long-dreamed of industrial union of all railroad men.

Communist Party Issues Survey of the Present Political Situation in America

states. These events and the development of the industrial and political situation generally have shown that our analysis of these events was correct. Two features stand out in this development: the workers of America stand before bitter struggles, since only a truce has been agreed upon between them and their exploiters; but, on the other hand, the workers are manifesting great determination to meet these struggles and fight them out to the end.

2. One of the significant events was the meeting of the Executive Council of the A. F. L. The Council meeting was called at a time of keen struggle; the railroad workers were on strike and the Daugherty injunction was in force.

Large numbers of workers in all parts of the country had demanded that the A. F. of L. call a General Strike in support of the striking shopmen. More than 200 central labor bodies had sent resolutions to this effect to the Executive Council which denied its power even "to advise a general strike."

Despite Gompers' flamboyant statements immediately after the issuance of the Daugherty injunction, in which he glibly spoke of a General Strike, at the Council meeting he declared himself against the General Strike. The Council even denounced a twenty-four hour strike as "un-American."

3. The Executive Council also took a decided stand against the formation of an independent labor party. Continuing its policy of "rewarding its friends and punishing its enemies," the Federation's Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee in endorsing certain capitalist candidates, promised organised labor that labor's active part had "brought about the nomination of a considerable number of true and tried believers in democracy and government by the people and for the people."

These are the same promises that are made to the workers at each election, which have brought the workers to that pass in the United States that they now witness the government in all its branches acting openly in behalf of the capitalists against the workers.

4. The Executive Council also confirmed the expulsion of the Bookkeepers, Stenographers and Accountants' Union of New York, for alleged radical activities.

The Council denounced the "borers from within" and promised similar action wherever and whenever radical workers show themselves.

The head of another union, who hitherto has been regarded as progressive, William H. Johnston of the International Association of Machinists, has also declared war on the radicals in his union.

At a time when solidarity and unity of labor's ranks should be fostered, in order that the fight against the employers may be conducted with concentrated energy, the A. F. of L. acts to split the ranks of the workers.

5. The Executive Council also decided that nation-wide demonstrations should be held on October 1, in protest against the Daugherty injunction and in support of the then striking shopmen.

The Council requested that resolutions be passed and sent to the Executive Offices of the A. F. of L. and to members of Congress.

It is obvious that this is all that the Council intends doing in this crisis. How seriously even this decision is taken may be gleaned from the fact that the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City, which was to hold the largest and most important demonstration on that day, has left the matter in the hands of its Executive Committee—which means its sabotage if not complete rejection.

Wherever such demonstrations are held, Communists must turn out en masse. They must induce all radical and progressive workers to be present, to offer and pass resolutions demanding militant action on the part of the organized workers in defense of their rights and interests.

6. The termination or partial termination of the railway shopmen's strike signifies a defeat of the open shop movement on the part of the employers.

Using the reduction of wages as the excuse for a fight against the shopmen, their real intention was to break up the unions, since they know that the shopmen would not accept a cut in wages without a strike.

In coming to an agreement with the workers, they have been compelled to recognise the union, even though they refused to make a national agreement.

They were forced to make this agreement first because of the heroic fight that the shopmen waged—a fight against the worst odds that the workers of this country have faced, from the brutal attacks of the capitalists, their thugs, gunmen and guards, to the courts and federal troops.

On the other hand, altho the open shop movement did not win, the workers lost all of their concrete demands. During the course of the strike, they made counter-demands, none of which, however, was granted in the settlement.

The grave matter of seniority, which acted as a stumbling-block in the negotiations between the workers and the capitalists, was left unsettled.

Several roads completely ignored this provision, it obviously being left to their discretion whether the strikers will be restored with full rights of seniority or be reinstated as new men.

This defeat of the workers, in the loss of their demands, was due to the treachery of the labor leaders, to the refusal of organized labor to stand by them with something more than words, but particularly to the Railroad Brotherhoods showing complete lack of solidarity.

This solidarity and unity of action must be prepared and built up if the workers are not to be defeated in all future battles.

7. National defense is the reason generally given to the gullible "public" for the maintenance of a standing army. Many months ago, General Pershing worked out a plan whereby an army of 3,000,000 would be available within a very short period. Since the standing army was reduced to 115,000 by act of Congress, there has been considerable criticism.

The convention of the Military Order of the World War, which was attended by generals and high officers of the American army, was told the real reason for the existence of a standing army.

In addition to criticizing the manner in which army matters are conducted, so that, as Major-General Reilly of New York stated, "if things continue to go on as they have been recently, we can expect to see Miss Jane Adams as President at the White House and William Z. Foster as Vice-President or Secretary of War," we are told that a minimum of 150,000 men and 13,000 officers is required to safeguard the country. Not to protect the country from external enemies, but from "disorders within."

"If there had been trouble during the recent coal and rail strikes, we should not have had sufficient men to guard the bridges and culverts," stated Major Gen. Harries, Commander-in-Chief of the Military Order of the World War. This frank declaration requires no comment.

8. The United Front idea as advocated by the three Internationals at the Berlin conference, which was speedily betrayed by the Second International with the Social-Democrats of Germany at its head, was recently again betrayed by the Socialist Party of America.

In Rhode Island, the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, Socialist Labor Party and some labor unions decided a few months ago to conduct a united campaign during the coming elections, in order that labor's vote might not be split up. A common program and action had been determined; candidates were nominated.

After this agreement had been reached, the National Executive Committee of the S. P., true to form, withdrew the members of the S. P. who had been nominated on the joint ticket and refused to co-operate. In doing so, it denounced the Workers Party.

Thus, once more, the Socialists break the united front of the working class, in this way acting as the henchmen of capitalism. The workers and socialists of Rhode Island, and of the whole country, will doubtless learn the lessons of this new treachery of the S. P.

9. The recent elections and primaries that have been held reveal positive tendencies that Communists must account with. The most striking feature is the vast and intense radicalization of the farmers, workers and petty-bourgeois elements in the country.

The usual opposition that confronts every administration this time was one with a definite radical tendency. A ferment is progressing in the Republican Party. Not only do we find large numbers of Republicans entering the Democratic ranks—as took place in the Maine elections in which the Democrats won 3,000 votes, while the Republicans lost more than 30,000—; not only has a powerful left wing within the Republican Party been formed,—witness the landslide in favor of La Follette, who, although a Republican, fought the Administration on all its important measures; but we find also the formation of a Progressive Party with a radical program.

A Progressive Party has been formed before in America. It is a product of conditions in America that have not yet matured. The demand for a change has become insistent. The farmers, especially of the Non-Partisan League, have already demonstrated their will to change and are lending great impetus to the general demand for the protection of the rights of the workers of the country.

The workers, furthermore, also are voicing a demand for independent political action. The betrayal of the capitalist parties has become apparent. The futility of the Gompers policy of endorsing "good" men was emphasized during the recent labor struggles. The necessity of having labor represented in legislative and executive offices is gaining round. Up to the present, many large bodies of workers have endorsed independent political action, the more prominent being the "Big Four" railroad brotherhoods, the Rail Crafts of the A. F. of L., the United Mine Workers, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the International Association of Machinists, the Women's Trade Union League, the Chicago, Tennessee and Pennsylvania State Federations of Labor. Recently the International Typographical Union endorsed such action, and will advocate the formation of an independen labor party at the next A. F. of L. convention.

Even the fake "Labor Party" organized in New York City by the Socialist Party and the Farmer Labor Party for the coming election campaign, is a manifestation of the demand for independent labor action in the political field. It is obvious, however, that a real Labor Party would regard election campaigns as but one feature, a secondary feature, of its tasks.

10. With this labor momentum behind the idea of a Labor Party, the conference which is to be held in Chicago in December becomes one of the most important events in the life of labor in America. Should a genuine Labor Party be formed of these organized labor bodies, a new factor of great vigor and tremendous possibilities would enter the American political arena.

Communists must prepare to meet the eventualities of this conference—whether such a party be regarded as an advantage or a drawback to the Communist movement. Should a Labor Party result, it will represent an organization of more than 1,500,000 workers acting on class lines. The potentialities of this mass organization are gigantic.

The Coming World Revolution

When Trotsky granted an interview to various foreign correspondents in Moscow, the representative of the Giornale d'Italia, asked Trotsky whether he believed in the imminent outbreak of the world revolution. Trotsky replied:

By LEON TROTZKY

I hope to be able to answer this great and complicated question in the course of the Fourth Congress of the Communist International. Here I will merely mention one thing. It goes without saying that I believe the social revolution to be inevitable. Its date and its form, however, depend to a large extend on the attitude of the ruling classes and their governments. Thruout the last year the European governments have unwittingly done their utmost to accelerate the outbreak of the revolution and to intensify its vigor. The world situation can in a schematic manner be summarized thus: the recent imperialist war was proof of the utter impotence of capitalism to develop mankind any further, while at the critical hour the working class has shown itself incapable of taking over the heritage of the bourgeoisie.

SEATTLE.—If pressure is put on congress to attempt to run the railroads with an armed force, all organized labor will resist to the utmost any efforts to legalize involuntary servitude, striking shop crafts here announced.

Michigan Labor Shows Militant Spirit in State Convention Resolutions

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE
(Special to The Worker.)

CHICAGO. — Two resolutions were passed by the Michigan State Federation of Labor with one dissenting vote that indicate the militant turn taken by the rank and file of the organized workers.

The first resolution dealing with the raids and arrests of labor men in Berrien County, Mich., by the agents of the Department of Justice is as follows:

"Resolution on constitutional rights adopted by the Michigan Federation of Labor at convention at Battle Creek, Sept. 19 to 22, 1922.

"Whereas, the constitutional right of free assemblage was denied trade unionists by their recent arrest and incarceration at Bridgeman, Mich., and

"Whereas, they were brutally beaten and abused, humiliated by being treated as hardened criminals and paraded hand-cuffed under armed guard before the people of Bridgeman, denied the right to communicate with friends and held under prohibitive bail, and

"Whereas, such treatment was purposely premeditated for the purpose of prejudicing the residents of Bridgeman, twelve of whom will later serve as jurors in their cases, against those held in custody, and

"Whereas, the whole farcical proceeding is a campaign of the Burns Detective Agency to shake down the credulous employers, and

"Whereas, it is manifestly unfair to saddle the enormous expense on the trial of these people on the citizens of Berrien County, and

"Whereas, no possible good can come of their persecution under wartime legislation, therefore

"Be it resolved, that the Michigan State Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, appeal to the governor and prosecutor to nolle prosse these cases."

The other resolution demands the repeal of the criminal syndicalism law which Wm. Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg, William Dunne and the others are charged with violating. This resolution we give below.

"Resolution for repeal of the criminal syndicalist law.

"Whereas, the Federal Government has repealed its war-time legislation, and

"Whereas, the criminal syndicalist law of the state of Michigan is war-time legislation, which denies the inalienable right of free speech, free press and free assemblage to the workers, and

"Whereas there have been no convictions under this law and it is held over the heads of the workers to harrass, embarrass and intimidate anyone who champions the cause of labor, therefore be it

"Resolved, that the Michigan State Federation of Labor in annual convention assembled, call upon the incoming legislature to repeal the criminal syndicalist law, and be it further

"Resolved, that the executive board of the Michigan State Federation of Labor be instructed to use its best efforts to have this law repealed."

Greed

Broad continents grew green beneath an April sun,
The yellow harvest came when the August days were done;
Unnumbered bales of fleecy wool were stored away;
The coals were brought from out the ancient terrene gray.
Enough for all, but Greed said "Wait,
Till I am paid no child shall eat,
No worthless script shall pay the bill,
But gold, good gold shall fill my till!
These things that nature gives so free
Were only made to fatten me;
I work my will while nations pray,
There are no laws that I obey
'Tis profits due to me I claim,
If any are wronged I'm not to blame
I own the earth and always have,
Let Charity apply her salve.
I have the right to get and save
Let humanitarians rant and rave.
There is no Justice, she is dead
And they who prate of her are "red."
I claim what is a sacred right,
For me, the Nations clash and fight.
I hate the Brotherhood of man,
And always have since time began.
I live on profits, interest, rent,
(The trinity whom hell hath sent)
So what care I though children die
There'll be more children by and by."

—Charles E. Wheelock.

DEMOCRACY"

Leon Trotzky

This book is without question the most valuable book of the revolutionary movement published in America this year. 200 pages.

Cloth, $1.00, Paper 50 cents.

Make it your first book of Fall reading.

WORKERS PARTY

Make These Four Weeks Count!

Make Every Week Red Letter Week in "Sub" Campaign

The next four weeks, ending October 25th, must be made "red letter" weeks in THE WORKER subscription campaign.

The present "20 weeks for 50 cents" subscription campaign will close on the above date. NO SUBSCRIPTION WILL BE RECEIVED AT THIS RATE AFTER THAT DATE.

This means that every comrade and WORKER reader must sell all cards they hold by that date if possible. All unsold cards remaining in hand after that date must be returned to THE WORKER office.

And now, to make the next four weeks count the biggest! This is what all comrades must do. This is the job before us. When we look about us in the shops and mills we realise that there are many thousands of workers who would become readers of THE WORKER if they were encouraged to become so.

Our job is to do the encouraging, that is, show them copies of THE WORKER, ask them to subscribe, see that they sign up on sub card or sub blank. Until this is done in every shop where there is a WORKER reader, some one is not doing all he or she can and should do for the revolutionary movement.

On October 25th THE WORKER will launch another subscription campaign. It will be a different campaign than the present one. It will comprise a book and subscription offer that will interest every subscription agent as well as every subscriber. It will be a campaign which will mean the placing of many thousands of copies of Communist books in the hands of workers who have not heretofore read such books. But we are not going to tell you all the secrets now.

What you as well as we are interested in right now is to make these next four weeks count bigger than any in this campaign. To do so you must see that your Party Branch and Local works 100 per cent for subscriptions. Every meeting must be used to get subscriptions. Every Party member not a subscriber must subscribe. Every Party member must sell subscription cards in his place of employment. Every effort to place THE WORKER in the hands of workers must be made.

The slogan of all WORKER readers must be "I'll make the next four weeks count big in this campaign." And then DO IT!

325 Subscriptions were received last week.

GET MORE THIS WEEK! MAKE EVERY WEEK COUNT!

Capt. Robert Fay, of the late Imperial German Secret Service, has been turned loose and smuggled out of the country, with the permission of President Harding, but hundreds of labor prisoners still lie rotting in the steel cells of practically every prison of any size in the country. The dead arm of German imperialism is more powerful in Washington than the protest of labor, because dollar rule recognizes its international kinship.

We pass along the appeal of the oppressed workers and peasants of Haiti that Americans do not subscribe to a $14,000,000 issue of bonds forced upon the islanders by United States financiers. The "loan" is being handled by Lee, Higginson and Co. of New York City. Boycott it! If the Haitians ever come into their own the chances are they'll never pay it. And they ought not to.

The American Committee for Armenian Independence is urging that the state department at Washington urge the imperialist powers to create an "Independent Armenia." We beg to notify the Armenian Committee that there is an independent Armenian Soviet Republic, that is on harmonious relations with all its neighbors. Thank you.

The Standard Oil Trust admits it pays to be busted. Since it was smashed by the governments during the reign of "William the Fat" Taft, in 1911, it has distributed more than $1,000,000,000 to stockholders in the form of dividends. The exact amount is $1,010,703,594.

If there is any more fighting to be done by the United States in aid of British imperialism, we are afraid it will have to be done by the much abused "flappers." The boys who battled for democracy are exhausted fighting for the bonus and need a rest.

In passing let us note that the Soviet Passenger Airplanes in the Moscow-Berlin service, carry the Soviet emblem, the crossed hammer and sickle, on their right wings. Just a tip to the German workers.

Lithuanian Section of Workers Party Fights Reactionary Decree

BY [illegible]

Prior to the great Russian Revolution, the Lithuanian people were groaned under the iron heel of the czaristic regime. They were persecuted by the "nagaika" of the czar's Cossacks. With the establishment of Soviet Rule in Russia, Lithuania acquired its independence.

The present Lithuania is governed by the most conservative reactionaries, the Roman Catholic Church which functions politically thru the Christian Democratic Party.

The big land owners and the petty bourgeoise in Lithuania are reaping big profits. But the condition of the working class is heart-rending. Peasants having just enough land on which to support their families, must pay enormous taxes to the government.

The condition of the workers in the cities is deplorable. Wages are exceptionally low and the cost of living is high. Labor unions are persecuted: To strike is to violate the law. Labor leaders are court-martialled and sentenced to long prison terms at hard labor. Labor publications are suppressed. In the last three years 15 different labor publications were forced to suspend publication by order from the government. The Lithuanian labor periodicals published in the United States are barred from Lithuania by the Lithuanian government as illegal papers. The Communist Party is an illegal organization in Lithuania. Its members are court-martialled and shot.

It is worth mentioning that there are seven so-called Social-Democrats in the Constituent Assembly of Lithuania. These seven "Socialists" not only vote for all measures against the Communists but also betray the working class of Lithuania by the traitorous position they take while in the Constituent Assembly.

On June 9, 1922, the Constituent Assembly of Lithuania issued a decree according to which all Lithuanian citizens residing in foreign countries must register not later than December 9, 1922, and pay a registration fee the amount of which will be determined by the respective representative of Lithuania in the different countries. One who fails to register or pay the fee by December 9, will forfeit Lithuanian citizenship, and all his property and land that he may own in Lithuania will be confiscated by the government.

Lithuanians residing in the United States and intending to leave for Lithuania this year will have to pay a registration fee of $15. Others will have to pay $10 and $5 every year thereafter.

This decree created an antagonism toward the Lithuanian government among the Lithuanian workers in the United States. Voices of protest are being heard even from the ranks of the nationalist and Catholic workers.

The Lithuanian Section of the Workers' Party is fanning this flame of protest against the paying of the fee. It endeavors to reach the mass of Lithuanian workers in the United States with messages and slogans of the Workers' Party by taking advantage of this opportunity. It will arrange protest mass meetings jointly with the nationalist groups (liberals) in order to get in contact with the mass of Lithuanian workers it could not otherwise reach. (The Lithuanian nationalists are striving for the control of the government in Lithuania, therefore they oppose every action of the present clerical government provided, that such opposition does not tend to lessen the patriotism of the Lithuanian workers.)

Altho the majority of the Lithuanian workers in the United States may register because they are under the influence of the Catholic priests who are agitating for the registration, nevertheless they are opposed to paying the fee and will come to our mass meetings when we raise such slogans as:

Down with the registration!

Not a cent to the government that is torturing our brothers and sisters in Lithuania!

The Lithuanian Section of the Workers' Party published the first leaflets urging the Lithuanian workers not to register and not to pay the fee.

The leaflet unmasks the Lithuanian government as an enemy of the working class and urges the Lithuanian workers to contribute to the relief of their fellow-workmen, political prisoners who are in the hell-holes of the Lithuanian prisons, rather than give their money to the Lithuanian government.

This leaflet is circulated by the various Lithuanian organizations. These organizations are sending in their contributions for the printing of more of these leaflets.

[illegible] Soviet Embassy at Berlin replies to this decision by stating that all the members of the central executive committee of the Social Revolutionary Party under sentence are still alive.

Estimates of Russian Harvest Is Call for Continued Relief Aid

It is estimated that the six cereal crops of the Ukraine and Russia harvested this year will be in the neighborhood of 39,250,000 tons, compared with 26,789,000 in 1921, with 28,966,000 in 1920 and with 65,930,000 tons in 1916.

The prediction is made that on the basis of the estimated crop of 1922, deducting the amount required for seed, animal consumption and reserves, a living provision for the Russian population is barely made possible.

Even on the assumption of efficient distribution, the food provisions will be on a much restricted scale.

Since the number of horses and cattle had in 1920 decreased some 25 per cent from 1916 and since the reduction of the two ensuing years was very large—more than 50 per cent—the farmers must be assisted with working animals, with seed and with tractors and ploughs, unless the harvest of 1923 is to fall necessarily below that of 1922.

Relief to Continue

The agricultural and industrial situation in Soviet Russia to-day, in spite of the general improvement over last fall and this spring, is such that requires the continuation, intensification and development of the efforts of the relief organizations hitherto assisting in the fight against the famine. The following must be continued:

(a) the shipment of winter seed, agricultural machinery, implements and live stock;

(b) the furnishing of sufficient quantities of foodstuffs for certain regions and groups of the population, such as children and the sick, whose nourishment can only be considered assured in case of an exceptionally favorable harvest.

The famine relief requires, however, a further extension for the complete elimination of the catastrophal misery thru the shipment of

a) Medicaments and equipment for hospitals, children homes, schools and institutes for technical education.

b) Tools and material necessary for the recommencement of home work and local workers' associations and co-operatives.

Broms S. T. A. S. R. Lectures

Dec. 7: Education and To-Morrow.

While the above lectures will not be illustrated thruout, there will be introduced frequent stereopticon illustrations in the latter part of the course to render the discussion clearer and more vivid.

[illegible] Worcester, Mass., [illegible]

Workingmen and Women of Worcester, Mass.! The products of your own creation are known and used in every corner of the world. Your Machinery, Tools, Looms, Carpets, Leather Goods, Hardware, Grinding Wheels, Electric and Steam Cars, Wrenches, Steel and Wire Goods, and countless other products are made possible by your toil.

When Graton and Knight's factories were closed tight by the Leather Workers' strike, leather ceased to be tanned and converted into the various kinds of leather goods. When Whittall's men struck, not a carpet or rug was made.

All the power in the world is in your hands, Workingmen and Women; yet, when one inquires as to the condition of labor in Worcester, the reply is most shocking.

In spite of the power of labor to run or stop the wheels of industry, the most tyrannical organization of the Industrial Lords, The Metal Trades Association, holds Worcester completely in its grip, and with the aid of the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, Kiwanis Club, and other associations of the Master Class, the workers of Worcester are kept divided.

Why the Bosses are so well organized, Don Tulloch, Head of the local Metal Trades Association well knows. The boss is organized because he KNOWS that in union is strength.

Likewise, the unions and other workingmen's organizations function in the interests of Labor. As an individual, you are helpless—a powerful organization of labor is all-powerful.

In looking back about 20 years and following the development of Worcester, we see that the workingclass population has increased by leaps and bounds, and the conditions of the worker are getting from bad to worse day by day.

On the other hand, we find that the population of the owning class has not increased in proportion to that of the workingclass, and what is more, they are commencing to decrease. Only a few years ago, "The Boston American" ran a series of articles under the title, "Who Owns Worcester? Ask Dewey, He Knows!"

We see every day how the industries in Worcester are being concentrated into fewer hands and formed into trusts as witness the growth of the Spencer-Wickwire Steel Corporation, the merging of the local banks and Trust companies, etc. The Bosses are girding themselves for the final struggle with labor, even the newspapers have consolidated as did the two local anti-labor sheets, "The Telegram" and "Gazette."

"The Rich Are Getting Richer and The Poor Are Getting Poorer." But what is to be done? The Workers Party of America offers you the solution and the Workers Party of Worcester asks you local workers to make the first step toward solving this problem. We ask you to do either one or two of these things: Join any union of your trade or calling, and Join the Workers Party of Worcester.

You should join the union because most of your time (if you're lucky to have a job) is spent in trying to eke out a bare existence. The shop is your daily life's concern. Just as you demand a voice and vote in the running of the country, still more emphatic should your voice be in the running of industry in which you toil away your whole life.

You should join the Workers Party because it is the only expression of the true interests of the Working class. Everywhere and always, the Workers Party voices the hopes and aspirations of the laboring masses and carries forward the banner of working class solidarity.

The Workers Party fights both on the industrial and political field for the class it represents—The Working Class. Our tasks are manifold, and we call you workingmen and women to come join the ranks of enlightened labor.

Don't put off for some other time, but come up and listen in on the discussions and the study-classes on topics of vital interest to you as a worker.

To better understand each other we have various language speaking branches and clubs. If you speak English, we want you to come up to the American branch where you will be cordially welcomed.

Any information you may seek will be given you. The American branch conducts its meetings and educational classes every Saturday night at 8 o'clock, at rooms 224 and 225 Day Building, 4 Walnut Street, corner of Main Street. On Sunday afternoons The Workers Party of Worcester conducts its open air meetings on the rear steps of the City Hall, on the Commons, at 1.30 o'clock, with good speakers.

At the Workers Party club rooms you will find just the kind of comrades you will want to associate with. Let's get together, brother workers, and put Worcester on the Labor Movement Map.

U. S. Deputy Marshal Caught Placing Bomb

WASHINGTON.—That a U. S. deputy marshal was caught redhanded while placing a bomb near the Santa Fe shops at San Bernardino, Calif., is charged by H. D. Pendleton, of the strikers' publicity committee at that point. He reports that strike pickets, watching the man, insisted that [illegible] they go with them and dig up the parcel the man had concealed, which proved to be a bomb. Previously a number of harmless explosions near the shops had been blamed on the strikers. Now the Santa Fe management and the U. S. marshal are declared by the strike committee to be trying to hush up the scandal of the deputy's exposure. No arrest appears thus far to have been made.

RIVERSIDE, Cal.—John Hollis, alleged I. W. W. organizer, is serving 90 days in the county jail here, having been arrested when he tried to rent a room for the night in Indio. He had just finished a similar sentence in El Centro because of his labor activities, and the district defense committee is investigating charges that Hollis is being persecuted by the authorities of southern California. Letters to the justice of the peace who sentenced him have gone unanswered.

PHILADELPHIA.—That a new famine or at least a continuance of the old one is now a fact in more than half of the 18 volosts in the American fed territory in Russia is the statement issued by the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers). Feeding on a famine scale will have to continue thruout the coming winter. There is no other way of saving the population.

SAN QUENTIN, Cal.—The strike of the I. W. W. prisoners here is over for the present, and the men have won their point. The jute mill is closed, ostensibly for repairs, and all the men who have been serving time in the dungeons and in solitary are out, and at work, some outside the walls. They will stand firm on the point at chief issue and if later they are ordered to the jute mill again they are all ready to return to the bread and water and the unspeakable sanitary conditons of "the hole."

With the present wage scale expiring on October 1, negotiations have been begun between the International Longshoremen's Union and a standing committee of managing agents representing 38 operators of Shipping Board vessels for a renewal of the agreement.

ABERDEEN, S. D.—Conscription of labor is being practiced openly in Brown county. It is part of the drive to hold wages down. Men who follow the harvests must either go to work at the set wage or be deported by the county authorities.

NEEDLES, Cal.—Mayor Kennedy has sent a telegram of protest to Governor Stephens against the sending of state troops to this town because of the railroad strike. The mayor states that no soldiers are needed or wanted.

Fear Radical Legislation

ST. LOUIS.—A group of open shop employers of this city have organized among themselves a legislative committee to see that no radical measures are enacted by the next session of the Missouri legislature.

The Soviet Government has issued a decree concerning copyright, stating that the Government has the right to claim all written matter of great importance as State property. Russian publishers are permitted to do what they like with the works of foreign authors.

SAN FRANCISCO.—A group of liberals will make a final appeal to Governor Stephens before his term is finished to perform several progressive acts, one of which will be the pardon of Richard Ford and Irving Suhr, serving life sentences in Folsom because of the Wheatland hop riots in 1913. It is felt that Stephens, conservative as he is, is less reactionary than either Richardson or Woolwine, one of whom will be the next governor, and that there is hope of his granting such a request.

The Illinois Chamber of Commerce has got its $25,000 worth of indictments at Herrin, Ill. Acting thru its tool, Attorney General Brundage, it has secured charges against 214 workers, not one indictment being returned against a mine owner or any of his retinue.

The total result of this direct attack on the Illinois miners' union is 44 murder indictments, 58 for conspiracy to murder, 58 for rioting and 54 for assault with intent to commit murder.

It is typical of this prosecution that Brundage took the occasion to launch an attack against Governor Small, of Illinois, belonging to a different faction of the Republican party. Brundage no doubt is using this opportunity to launch his own "big business" candidacy for governor.

The best that this prostitute grand jury could do was to include in its report a mild slap at the mine owners for bringing in scabs and thugs, monopolizing the public highways and killing three union miners, the immediate causes of the struggle that came later.

No effort was made by the grand jury to investigate the charge that the United States Steel Corporation stood back of the owner of the Lester Strip Mine, aiding him in his war for the open shop. No move was made against the scab herding employment agencies. All this was not included in the "bought and paid for" jury investigation.

The result is that the mine owners and their lackeys will continue to profiteer at the expense of the people and to exploit the workers. Their families will be kept in luxury.

At the same time we cannot forget that all but four of the 26 workers already under arrest are fathers. Two others are the sole support of young orphan brothers and sisters. Four of the indicted men were supporting widowed mothers.

Fifty children nightly go to their slumbers suffering the absence of fathers or brothers. Thus early do these children experience the struggles of the miners' union. They will not forget. It will make them firmer in the faith as they grow up. The Illinois Chamber of Commerce bought 214 indictments with its $25,000, but at the same time it is giving to the labor movement a host of good fighters for the big struggle for the abolition of all bosses and the emancipation of all who suffer and toil.

The divided "Socialists" in Germany unite to keep capitalism in power and continue their fight against Communism. But this will drive the masses of the workers into the Communist Party.

Give the Turks Constantinople

Organized British labor, which came to the aid of its capitalism in the war against Central Europe, is having a hard time trying to find itself as a result of Turkish Nationalist victories over the Greeks.

Yet the Daily Herald, now the official organ of the British trade unions, reaches the same conclusion as the Russian Soviet Republic, "Let the Turks have Constantinople." They come to that goal, however, along very different roads.

The Russian Communists knew that the czardom would never give Constantinople to the Turks. In fact, the old Russia fought the Turks for possession of Constantinople, and was opposed in that struggle by Great Britain. The English wanted the Russians bottled up in the Black Sea. English imperialism backed the Turk and all Christendom rang with the British cry, "The Russians shall not have Constantinople."

Following the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia we find the Russian Communists putting their program into effect, and pledging their support to the Turks in their claims to Constantinople, which results in England now opposing both Soviet Russia and Turkey.

The London Daily Herald (Labor) does not use the demand of "Constantinople to the Turks" as a slogan for an aggressive attack upon British Imperialism. It rather urges it as a protection for British rule, to get it out of "the muddle in the Near East."

"Clearly the order ought to be sent out that no men shall be landed from our ships," warns The Daily Herald, fearful evidently for British supremacy. "To help the Greeks would not only be futile, it would inflame the irritation of our Moslem fellow-subjects in India and elsewhere. We must not take sides at all now, and we must admit that there is nothing for it but to let the Turks have Constantinople as before."

This was written while the Kemalist cavalry was still knocking at the gates of Smyrna. Since then the British Trade Union Congress has met and considered the war peril. Its delegation has waited on Premier Lloyd George and has been assured that the Empire is safe.

J. H. Thomas, supreme jingo of the late war and one of the betrayers of British Labor's Triple Alliance, member of the delegation to the prime minister, feels humiliated because the British Empire had to send out a hurry-up plea for help to its colonies. Thomas declared:

"To me that appeal was humiliating because it presupposed, contrary to fact and all experience, that if there was any real danger to the empire, if the menace was so grave as they anticipated, they had not exhausted their call to the people at home."

The jingo politicians of the British Trade Union Congress and the Labor Party parliamentary faction betray themselves as loyal to British imperialism.

The masses of the British workers must still put a leadership in power that will place British labor on the side of the oppressed nationalities in all the colonies of the Empire, for the overthrow of British imperialist rule.

Then, and then only, will British labor be able to carry out its claim that it stands for "self-determination in its broadest and best sense," now merely empty words issuing from the mouth of the labor misleader, Thomas.

Rote Fahne, official organ of the German Communists, devotes one page each week to workers' athletics. More than a million German workers are now organized in athletic clubs that are strictly of a working-class nature. The workers of America still prefer to hand over their money to baseball kings, prize-fight promoters and other professional sport profiteers.

Debs Is Eager to Help

Eugene V. Debs, from the sanitarium where he is regaining his health, has written William Z. Foster that "when I have recovered my strength sufficiently to take up my work again I shall be with you shoulder to shoulder in your stand for the working class and industrial freedom."

That pledge of support from Debs came after Foster had been deported from Colorado and Wyoming, and the offices of the Trade Union Educational League, in Chicago, had been raided.

Debs has now made good on his pledge by accepting a position as one of the members of the National Labor Defense Committee, that will put up the battle for the victims of the Michigan raids, and similar persecutions of workers and working-class organizations.

Debs will find a great field of activity for his efforts in the struggle for labor's prisoners. It is hoped that in time, in the very near future, an appeal can be made to all labor to put up a concerted struggle for all the prisoners, and those spokesmen of labor facing court prosecution.

The Atlantic City gathering of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor declared that the 24-hour strike is un-American. It is declared that radical labor organizations and militants in the labor movement are also un-American. It would, therefore, not be out of order to invoke an un-American institution in aid of those charged with un-Americanism.

The first effort at a general strike was linked with the name of Debs and the American Railway Union, nearly thirty years ago. It would be fitting that Debs, today, should raise the standard for a 24-hour strike for the release of all the Class War prisoners, from Ford and Suhr, who have now served nearly ten years in a California bastille, to the latest victims taken in the Michigan "red raids."

This is a big fight. A big effort will win. Stop all industry for one day and we believe affrighted capitalism will speedily release its victims.

The annual conference of the British Communist Party will take place starting Saturday, October 7. The British Communists expect to discuss all subjects that are in such disfavor with the Harding-Daugherty-Burns regime in this country.

Aliens—Good and Bad

If the alien workers in this country wish to escape the persecution of the Department of Justice and be looked upon as equal to the standard set by our sound native citizenry all they have to do is to support one of the capitalist parties.

This thought is suggested by the following item culled from the columns of the Daily News of Chicago:

> At a nonpartisan meeting of editors of Foreign Language Newspapers, held at Hotel LaSalle Sunday, the candidacy of John R. Palandech for a member of the county board, on the republican ticket, was indorsed. The following comittee was appointed to conduct Mr. Palandech's campaign: Hector Durante of the L'Italia, Miles Geringer of the Bohemian Svornost, G. Boberg of Swedish Tribune, P. S. Lambros of Greek Star, Philip Asyoki of Polish Zgoda, Isaac Schapiro of Jewish Record, F. S. Anderson of Daily Skandinaven, L. H. Lund of Norwegian Polkvennen, J. J. van Pernis of Hollandish Onze Toekomst, John I. Bagdziunas of Lithuanian Press, Louis Nagy of Magyar Tribune, Dr. Paul Newy of Assyrian American Liberator, J. Novak of Slovenian Voice, Paul Tomi of Roumanian Herald, C. Salopoulos of Greek Soloniki, I. F. Lupis of Croatian Herald, J. Chudatsik of Slovak Daily, and V. Kersch of Free Russia.

It will be noted that this gathering of foreign language-speaking politicians met in the LaSalle, one of Chicago's exclusive hotels, and that it was not bothered by the bomb squad.

It was certainly a cosmopolitan crowd and only for its servile support of one of the political machines of patriotic American capitalism would undoubtedly have been raided to the accompaniment of lurid headlines emphasizing the menace of the alien hordes that are over-running our shores—which hordes continue to publish newspapers in their own tongues and do not even trouble to learn the language of the great-hearted nation that gives the haven, etc., etc., ad nauseam.

As long as the alien worker is content to accept the servitude to which American capitalism condemns him he is allowed to do as he pleases within the narrow margin which it gives him.

Let him throw off the leadership of those of his own race who profit from his ignorance and his fears and he becomes the target for every stoolpigeon and cheap, notoriety seeking prosecutor in this land.

Moral: Be good (for nothing) and you will be happy in America.

J. O. Bentall, editor of The Truth, now at Leavenworth Prison as a war political, was one of 600 recently called before the parole board. Some were granted paroles. Bentall was not. If he had been a murderer or a thief it would have been different.

When the Thieves Laugh

It is pointed out that Ali Fethi Bey, Turkish Kemalist envoy to Western European Governments, claims everything possible was done by the Turks to settle Near-East problems peacefully.

Fethi Bey was in London and sought an interview with Lloyd George but was refused. British foreign office officials, says the Kemalist envoy, laughed when he suggested that unless peace could be arranged quickly the Kemalists would turn the Greeks out of Asia Minor.

We then have it, on the authority of the Associated Press, that the Kemalist diplomat told the British officials soberly:

"I am sorry that you have laughed. Turkey has lost 2,000,000 of her people by war and there are too many orphans for us to join in the laughing at the idea of another war. I feel very sad."

The Greeks have been driven out of Asia Minor. But at what cost! Let every agony be laid at the door of that greatest of all thieves, British Imperialism.

The British diplomats have now been forced to agree to the peace conference that the Turks demanded.

Similarly, we find Soviet Russia regretting that the capitalist United States refused to take seriously her demand for an interchange of economic missions.

The Washington diplomats and the kept press laughed to think that the Russians should have the audacity to counter America's demands for an investigating tour of the Workers' Republic.

Izvestia, official publication of the Soviet Government, points out that the United States is now better acquainted with Russian affairs than any other goverment.

Soviet Russia is making rapid progress on the road to complete recuperation. It will not be long, we believe, before the diplomats and their bosses in this country will be down on their knees begging for some of the Russian trade that is rapidly going to other countries.

The thieving capitalists of the world, in this and other countries, have had their laughs. But the exploited workers and oppressed peoples are everywhere rising against them. The old saying is again very appropriate, "He who laughs last laughs best."

The impeachment proceedings against Attorney General Daugherty have been put off until after the election. Anything to save a few much needed votes for the republican candidates.

An Attack on All Labor

"[illegible]" is the title of a pamphlet that comes to our desk telling "The Truth About Centralia," including the sworn [illegible] who declare that the convicted men are [illegible].

This pamphlet by Walker C. Smith is sent out by the Northwest [illegible] Defense Committee, P. O. Box [illegible], Seattle, Wash.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee, Box 37, Hanover Station, Boston, Mass., sends us a press service including the editorial of the Boston American, that says if the latest revelations in that case, as published recently in THE WORKER, are true, [illegible] in the district attorney's office ought to be arrested and tried for attempted murder."

The Mooney Defense Committee continues on the job at San Francisco, altho it seems that it must have knocked away every prop of the prosecution that succeeded in sending Tom Mooney and Warren Billings to prison for life instead of to the gallows.

California labor also continues the battle demanding the release by Governor Stephens of Richard Ford and Irving Suhr, serving life sentences as a result of the outbreak among the Wheatland hop picking slaves in 1913.

And while these efforts go on, the National Labor Defense Council is organized to combat the instigators of the recent "red raids" in Michigan and Chicago.

Truly we live in a land of no compromise in the class struggle. Let that fact burn itself into the mind of every working man and woman in this country.

In the Centralia pamphlet we find a line by Ernest Crosby that reads, "Woe to the cause that hath not passed thru a prison!"

Which brings from us the response, "Woe to the working class that does not recognize as its own the cause that goes thru prison for its sake."

We believe that even the American working class, rousing from its stupor brought on by an overdose of 100 percent Americanism, is becoming conscious of the fact that its emancipation is to be found at the end of the road that passes thru prison hells. This is so because the present ruling class, like all its predecessors, is able to legalize its campaigns of murder and suppression against the working class.

Let every worker study the words of The New Majority, official organ of Chicago's militant toilers, that:

"Now, more than ever, it is plain that the cause of the victims of Daugherty's raids is the concern of the labor movement and that an attack on a 'red' is a covert attack on unionism."

Having grasped the full meaning of these words let every worker act accordingly.

The republican congress has been very kind to the "poor" millionaires. It has abolished the excess profits levy, which means that a plutocrat like Henry Ford, will pay only $16,000,000 in Federal taxes instead of $50,000,000 as in 1921. Henry can thus add $34,000,000 to his "savings account" this year from this source alone. At the same time the Harding administration forced workers to remain on strike, which meant into the hands of the loan sharks, at 3½ percent per month for loans of a paltry $300 and under. If you don't like this system then join the Workers Party and help abolish it.

Help get those 25,000 new readers.

In the Grip of the Loan Sharks

The "loan shark" business is thriving. It is being operated on a huge scale. It is organized nationally, like all other exploiters' efforts, under the name of American Industrial Lenders' Association with 421 members thruout the United States doing a business annually of $140,000,000 affecting 300,000 persons.

Because of all these attributes indicating success the "loan shark" has become "respectable," and when he meets in convention assembled with his fellow "loan sharks" at the luxurious Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City, he is welcomed by none other than a special representative of the Merchants' Association of New York.

The main topic of discussion among these money lenders was how to handle the big amount of business that had come to them because of the big strikes this year of the miners, the textile workers and railroad shopmen.

They talked about workers' poverty, not prosperity. They didn't wax eloquent over the number of workers having savings bank deposits, Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, because they knew different. They gloated over the fact that millions of workers were dangerously near the poverty mark, and when strikes are declared the number of worker-debtors greatly increases.

They were happy that this condition made it possible for them to charge 3½ percent interest per month, whereas when workers put their savings into banks they get only 3 percent per year. The worker, when he wishes to use the bankers' money is charged more than 12 times as much as when he magnanimously allows the banker to use his money. And the worker wants the money to buy the necessities of life, whereas the banker uses it in "financial transactions" to make more money.

This is only one condition that will stimulate the growth of huge workers' co-operative banks, quite a number of which are already in existence. It will be the duty of those organizations to help finance workers, as well as workers' organizations during strikes as well as peace times.

Not only the handling but the possession of huge sums of money will tend to keep workers' organizations enslaved by reactionary ideas. Thus we find a high official of the British co-operatives accepting knighthood from England's king.

We find the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, with its bank at Cleveland, Ohio, that showed assets at the close of business on August 29, 1922, of $17,547,402.35, refusing to send its members into the strike with the railroad shopmen.

This should not cause the Communists, however, to oppose the co-operative, whether it is a bank or some other enterprise. It should result in making every Communist all the more anxious and eager to transform the co-operative into an instrument of the revolutionary class struggle.

Hundreds of thousands of workers, a majority of them no doubt the best fighters in the ranks of organized labor, are now in the grip of the money lenders. These workers have lost all because they have stood at the head of the workers' struggle.

These hundreds of thousands can be freed from the tentacles of the "loan sharks" thru the aid that can be given them by workers' co-operative banks.

Labor unions, that have gone bankrupt because of some strike, can be placed on their feet, financially, with the least possible difficulty. Usually these are the most revolutionary unions in the labor movement.

All thinking workers, therefore, should be interested in fighting the millionaire "loan sharks" and help fortify the labor unions with workers' co-operative banks. At the same time, however, no effort should be spared to win the entire co-operative movement away from its bourgeois elements and develop it into an effective factor in the revolutionary struggle of labor.

It is to the discredit of labor that an appeal must be made at this late date by Plebs, a revolutionary magazine, for funds to restore the neglected grave of Karl Marx, in Highgate Cemetery, London, England. It is declared the sum of five pounds ($25) is required immediately to restore the lettering of the inscription on the headstone and to put the grave in order, and an annual sum of 30 shillings for its permanent care. If our British comrades cannot attend to this small undertaking, surely we shall come to their rescue.

BOLCOMS

Edited by I. D. W. TALMADGE

AN OPEN LETTER TO ATTORNEY-GENERAL DAUGHERTY

Dear Fellow-Worker:—Shaken with sorrow and blinded with tears, we've read of the campaign for your impeachment. What ungrateful creatures we mortals be?! After all these years of faithful service to humanity and to the working class in particular this is the gratitude you get. Yours is not the only case in history. All great thinkers and idealists were unappreciated in their age; it took hundreds of years to esteem their greatness. Similarly, posterity alone will be able to favorably estimate the full worth of your injunctions. Only they will comprehensively conceive your profound love for the proletariat. Only they will thoroughly realize how purely altruistic all your legislative measures were. As Confucius once said: "Chop suey chamain gefilte fish andsomorebull" — we don't know how good a man is until he's dead. That, of course, does not imply that you should commit self-murder. With Spinoza, Tolstoy, Nietzsche, Hegel and Spencer dead, we can't afford to lose you too. Console yourself, your career is not ruined yet. We are with you! Should you be impeached don't let that worry your intellectual little head. You can always depend upon a job as errand boy at the Worker office!

Afaketionately yours,
Editorial Staff of the BOLCOMS.

Red Raiders Fail to Get Ed Lindgren

Michigan's red raiders met de[illegible] in their second effort before Governor Miller to have Edward I. Lindgren, New York City, Organizer, District No. 2, Workers Party, extradited to the western state.

After the second hearing in the executive chambers at Albany, on Monday, Gov. Miller rejected the demand of the Michigan authorities that they be allowed to take Lindgren back with them to [illegible] alleged convention of the Communist Party at Bridgeman.

In a last effort to win the decision of Governor Miller, the prosecution charged that all Lindgren's witnesses were radical and therefore not reliable.

Governor Miller said regarding this testimony, that it was only natural that Lindgren's friends should be radicals and that the additional testimony of the prosecution carried no weight at all.

"The question," Miller said: "is to decide whether Lindgren is a fugitive from justice and only hard facts will be accepted as testimony."

District Attorney Roland, of Albany, representing the Michigan authorities, said, in summing up the case for the prosecution, "I will not

Three More Released From St. Joseph Jail While Nine Remain

T. R. Sullivan, Caleb Harrison and Charles Krumbein, who have been in the county jail at St. Joseph, Mich., for the five weeks since the "red raid" at Bridgeman, have now been released on bail.

Sullivan immediately returned to his headquarters at St. Louis to take up his work as District Organizer of the Workers Party. Harrison went back to Cleveland to resume his work there, and Krumbein enters party activity again at Chicago.

The release of these three men still leaves nine of the prisoners at St. Joseph. Of these it is expected that Thomas O'Flaherty and Phillip Aronberg will be released within a few days.

Bail is still required for the remaining seven men, including Seth Nordling, of Portland, Ore.; Norman Tallentire, Eugene McMillen, A. Mihillis, Charles Erickson, Eugene Bechtold and Joseph Zack.

Treachery of Labor Bureaucrats Is Unmasked in Appeal for United Battlefront in Germany

The Communist International has issued the accompanying manifesto showing that not only the Scheidemann Social-Democrats in Germany, but also the Independent "Socialists," thru their actions, have proved themselves the aides of the Monarchistic reaction. The case against the labor bureaucrats in Germany is so clear that even the most ignorant worker can understand it, if he will but read. Here it is:—

TO THE INTERNATIONAL PROLETARIAT!
TO THE GERMAN WORKERS!

Events are taking place in Germany which not only make severe demands upon the German proletariat, but which require the greatest attention and closest interest of the workers of all countries.

Philip Scheidemann, the leader of the German Social Democracy, the man whose name is indissolubly connected with the betrayal of that same Social-Democracy, wrote recently in the Vorwärts:

"As on the 4th of August 1914, Germany has come to a turning point in its history."

And this time the German Social-Democracy and with it the Second International, again break down.

Once more they reveal themselves as the parties which shamelessly betray the interests of the working class.

They crippled international Socialism for years when, in 1914, they

Events in Near East Very Instructive to the World's Workers

By ARTHUR ROSENBURG

Written Especially for the International Press Correspondence and THE WORKER

Present events in Turkey are instructive to the world proletariat, because they prove the absolute futility of the peace making of 1919.

And yet 1919 still continues to exercise a serious influence upon the mind of the proletariat. Quite apart from the fulfillment policy of the German Social Democrats, 1919 created the League of Nations.

The League of Nations is intimately connected with the Amsterdam Trade Union International; and the whole policy of capitalist reconstruction which the workers are forced to support,—this Evangel of Reform Socialism,—is the spirit of 1919.

The workers should therefore attentively read the telegrams reporting the battles in Smyrna and the commotion in Athens.

For what is falling in Athens is not

Foster and Ruthenberg Are Cheered at Huge Gatherings

William Z. Foster, secretary of the Trade Union Educational League, and C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, both out on bail following arrest incidental to the Michigan and Chicago raids, battered their way eastwards during the past week speaking in every city where they had been scheduled to appear.

Definite declarations had been made by the steel trust-owned city officials of both Youngstown, Ohio, and Pittsburgh, Pa., that Foster and Ruthenberg would not be allowed to speak.

But the local party workers and their sympathizers in these two cities stood by their guns. Every threat of the officials was countered with new demands that the meetings be permitted.

Foster and Ruthenberg, therefore, come to the Central Opera House, in New York City, for their meeting Friday night, with a 100 per cent record against the allies of the Burns-Daugherty regime at Washington.

The determination of the opposition to the meetings planned in aid of the defense of the raid victims is shown in an early [illegible] by Mayor W. G. [illegible], of Youngstown, Ohio, notorious for its succesful efforts in suppressing radical workers. He said:

"W. Z. Foster will not be permitted to speak in Youngstown. Not only will we refuse to let him speak here, but I have given orders to Chief of Police James Watkins to watch for his arrival, put him on a train as soon as he lands and tell him to get out of the city.

"I do this because Foster is a dangerous radical. If we want radical speeches in Youngstown we have enough speakers of that kind already in the city. We do not need to import any. Foster has already caused enough trouble in Youngstown. He will not be permitted to stop here again."

Mayor Executes Retreat.

The mayor was forced to make a complete retreat from this position as the result of pressure brought to bear by the organized workers.

Great interest was aroused as the result of press notoriety and an enthusiastic audience greeted Foster on his return to this steel city after an absence of three years.

In his speech Foster predicted that another steel strike would come and that the steel workers then would have an organization that would win.

Placards on Walls

Placards were tacked to the walls and stage sides which bore the following words: "The workers want Foster to organize the steel workers." "Down with government by injunction." "Repeal the anti-syndicalist and sedition laws." "Down

Seven Organizations of Shoe Workers Unite in Amalgamated Union

By S. ZARCHIN

Special to the Worker

BOSTON, Mass.—The Shoe Workers' Amalgamation Convention is in session here with 100 delegates present representing seven independent unions, the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, the United Shoe Workers of America, Allied Shoe Workers' Union, Children's Shoe Workers of New York; Amalgamated Shoe Workers of New York, Shoe Pattern Makers' Union and Edge Makers' Union of Salem, Mass.

There is also a delegation of a newly organized body of Chelsea, Mass., Shoe Workers, which has decided to join the new united organization that will hereafter be known as the Amalgamated Shoe Workers of America.

A committee has been chosen to secure historic Faneuil Hall for Friday night for a big mass meeting of shoe workers to celebrate the united front established among the workers in the shoe industry.

The Elore, Hungarian organ of the Workers Party, has been endorsed as the mouthpiece of the Hungarian shoe workers.

The convention will move, for one day, to Haverhill, Mass., upon the invitation of the Haverhill shoe workers. The convention may last a week.

Organized Labor Is Now Demanding Industrial Unionism

By EARL R. BROWDER

Associate Editor, The Labor Herald.

Written especially for The Labor Herald (October) and released for simultaneous publication in The Worker.

When a few months ago the Trade Union Educational League launched its campaign for amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions not even the most optimistic could have foreseen the tremendous response on the part of Organized Labor.

The situation is more than ripe for industrial unionism, and the workers realize that readily when the program of the League is laid before them.

State federations, city central bodies, local unions, independent unions, and international craft unions galore have gone on record for amalgamation since our campaign started.

It has been a veritable landslide towards consolidation of the workers' ranks.

The State Federations Act

The amalgamation movement has gone particularly strong among the state federations. Almost every one of them that has met since the inauguration of the campaign has gone on record in favor of industrial unionism thru amalgamation.

The movement has taken on such impetus that it has run far beyond the immediate membership of the League. Consequently many organizations may have adopted the proposition without our getting to hear of it.

So far reports have come into our office from League militants of seven important state federations that have endorsed amalgamation. These are Washington, Wisconsin, Indiana, Nebraska, Utah, Michigan and Minnesota.

Long one of the most progressive state federations in the country, the Washington State Federation of Labor went on record at its recent convention in Bremerton in favor of consolidating all the craft unions in the respective industries.

This was due primarily to the activity of militant League members. Shortly afterward the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, another progressive body of long standing, also adopted a similar resolution at its regular convention.

And now comes the Indiana State Federation of Labor and does the same thing at its convention, which was held early in September in Marion, Indiana.

The amalgamation resolution was submitted by the Indiana State Conference of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America.

The Only Way Out

It declared "the only solution for the situation is the development of a united front by the workers thru the amalgamation of the various crafts so that there will only remain one union for each industry."

The reactionaries fought the proposition, submitting a minority committee report against it.

But after a sharp fight they were defeated, and the majority, for amalgamation, report was adopted.

Not to be outdone by its five sister Federations in other states, the Nebraska State Federation of Labor also adopted the amalgamation plan at its convention in the early part of September.

Again the reactionaries, supporters of Sam Gompers, were on hand to block progress, but to no avail.

The proposition was adopted unanimously, except for one vote. One of the resolves reads:

"That the Nebraska State Federation of Labor, in Convention assembled, hereby urge the American Federation of Labor and the various international unions in each industry into conference for the purpose of devising ways and means of so amalgamating the unions that there will

[illegible] Campaign of Activity

After the recent congress of the International Workers' Relief, a conference of all bourgeois relief bodies and representatives of governments that had sent famine relief to Soviet Russia, was held. In this conference the delegates to the IWRC constituted the "left."

It was presided over by Krestinsk, finance minister of Soviet Russia. This conference (at which Red Cross societies from various countries, Nansen's Committee, other bourgeois relief organizations and governmental representatives reported) also decided that contributions for famine relief must continue and that relief which aimed at economic reconstruction was preferable.

A commission of five went into immediate session after the adjournment of the IWRC congress. The concrete results to date are these:

1.—The International Corporation has been organized. The People's Commissaries of Soviet Russia has guaranteed a three million dollar loan to be issued by this corporation, with interest at five per cent, repayable in ten years in gold.

2.—Permission has been granted the FSR to organize an American corporation based upon the concessions of the IWRC, which are: (a) Three estates in Kazan; (b) Estates in Chelabinsk and Moscow; (c) Agricultural undertakings in the Urals and elsewhere (this includes our agricultural unit at Perm); (d) Industrial factories and technical workshops in Moscow and Petrograd, shoe factory in Moscow, repair establishments in Moscow and Petrograd, cooperage in Kazan, soap factory in Petrograd; (e) Forest concessions in Kazan (giving employment to 3,000 workers); (f) Fisheries in Astrakhan and Tsaritsin (employing 15,000 workers when fully equipped; (g) Exploitation of the motion picture film monopody; (h) Participation in the exploitation of the manganese mines in the Black Sea district as soon as arrangements with regard to these are completed with the Soviet Government.—(NOTE: Whereas a corporation organized for the purpose of assisting Soviet Russia in economic reconstruction, namely, the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, already has been formed, the FSR intends making its concessions contract and the contracts of this corporation the property of one corporation, namely of that above named and has decided to campaign jointly with the RAIC for the sale of stock in America.)

3.—Campaign for the support of the thousands of orphans and homeless children, resulting from the famine. Individuals, families, unions, other organizations and groups will be solicited to adopt one or more orphans at a cost of $2.00 per month per child, plus an initial cost of $5.00 per child to be used to provide the children's homes with linen, clothes, medicines, books, cooking utensils, etc.

4.—Food drafts, which will enable individuals, unions and other organizations to provide food to needy Soviet Government workers, unions and individuals in Soviet Russia. Price per draft $2.50.

5.—Shipment of $15,000 worth of toys, woodenware, artistically carved and decorative wooden utensils, embroideries, has reached the FSR. It is intended to encourage a steady importation of these Russian home products. FSR conferences will be requested to open shops to organize bazaars from time to time, to dispose of these articles.

6.—Art films, which Russia's first artists, such as Gorki, have helped to produce, are being shipped to the FSR. We have the monopoly for America for their distribution and sale. FSR conferences should make inquiries to ascertain what authority is necessary to show these films under FSR direction in the cities in which we have FSR conferences.

7.—Also the International Workers' Relief Commission is engaged in import and export. There are now stored in Germany many shiploads of flax, awaiting buyers. An immense quantity of pig iron has just been exported from Soviet Russia by the IWRC and sold to a French steel corporation. The IWRC offers for sale thousands upon thousands of feet of logs, felled by woodsmen at Kazan. The exportation of caviar, cured and salt fish is already taking place.

We feel assured that every friend of Soviet Russia will see in the above activities of the International Workers Relief Committee (in which the FSR must take part) work sufficient to keep him warm, now that the chilly days are here. We must again marshall our forces, permeate workers' homes and workers organizations, tell them of Soviet Russia's needs and problems, inculcate class solidarity, inspire them to act in support of their class brothers in Russia.

Debs [illegible]

[illegible] a political [illegible] ruling classes. He carried [illegible] one ex-prisoner talking about another. Haessler tells of a little [illegible] Edith Chaplin, the heroic wife of [illegible] now serving a 20-year sentence at Leavenworth. [illegible] in the capitalist war [illegible] at the Leavenworth Prison. So it is [illegible] for Debs at the home of [illegible] Chaplin, the revolutionary poet [illegible]

Debs is convalescing in a Chicago suburb near the Chaplin home, and most of the friends came out from the big city on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Seymour Stedman, the Chicago "Socialist" lawyer, famous for his share in expelling foreign language and state organizations from the Socialist Party in 1919, and later on for his "Red Raid" on the Communist House of the Masses in Detroit, Mich., was there. Stedman was one of the lawyers defending Debs at his Cleveland trial.

Stedman made a short talk at this gathering at the Chaplin home and argued that, in Debs case, the United States Supreme Court might have reversed the "guilty" jury verdict if it had not interpreted opposition to the war as OBSTRUCTION.

Then one of those irrepressible young Reds, according to Haessler's report, broke in with, "But opposition without obstruction is piffle."

"Exactly," was Deb's swift assent, we are told.

Which shows that Debs still stands by his revolutionary phrases with at least a demand for revolutionary action, while the "Socialist" Party, thru its actions and spokesmen puts aside both phrases and action. While Debs still calls himself a Socialist, it is difficult to reach any other conclusion than that the breach between Debs and the "Socialist" Party continually widens.

Debs has repeatedly endorsed the Friends of Soviet Russia. The "Socialist" Party and its press has attempted to cripple the F.S.R. from the beginning and lately launched against a malicious fake exposure.

Debs is enlisted as a member of the executive committee of the Labor Defense Council. This organization will have to defend the victims of the Michigan raids, militant workers that the "Socialist" Party officialdom and press have helped, to the utmost of their petty strivings to betray into the hungry grip of the Burns-Daugherty department of justice.

In this connection it might be well to point out that altho Debs protested the sentences meted out to the social (counter) revolutionaries in Soviet Russia, nevertheless, he approached his conclusions from an entirely different viewpoint than the spokesmen of the Socialist Party.

Debs admitted that the indictment of the social (counter) revolutionaries was complete. Debs did not defend the acts of these betrayers.

It is different with James Oneal, in the New York Call, Sept. 10, when he took up much valuable space to justify the Social (Counter) Revolutionary Party. Only the shell of a party remains with its counter-revolutionary cliques in the different capitols of Europe and here in the United States. Most of its previous worth while members have either gone over to or become ardent sympathizers with the Communist cause.

The Social (Counter) Revolutionary Party is outlawed because of the crimes it has committed and, contrary to Oneal, the Russian Communists were not compelled to go back to 1917 to make out a case.

Oneal would probably like to forget that his social (counter) revolutionary friends are faced with new evidence, showing that as late as June 1921 they were in the pay of French imperialism.

In the statments recently published by the foreign delegation of the social revolutionaries, and by Kerensky and Brushvit representing the Administrative Center, these worthies swear themselves black and blue that no money was ever received by them from the allies, points out Karl Radek, in the International Press Correspondence, Aug. 30, 1922, recently arrived in this country.

Brushvit and Kerensky were indeed very careful in their statements, says Radek. They declared that they did in fact receive moneys, but that these moneys were "of Russian origin." But Kerensky lied. Kerensky had evidently forgotten about a letter that fell into the hands of the Russian Soviet Government, a photographic reproduction of which was given out by the International Press Correspondence. It reads:

(Translation)

Ministry for Foreign Affairs,
Political and Commercial Dept.

Mr. President:—In reference to your request for a money advance, I am informed by Mr. Berthelet, with whom you have already discussed this matter, that the president of the council deeply regrets not to be able to advance such a large sum, for the manner in which the French budget is voted does not permit a large sum to be expended for a definite item, without the previous sanction of parliament. Moreover, I believe that the General Secretary will answer you directly on the various questions which you have addressed to him.

Permit me, sir, to assure you of my highest esteem and sincerest respect.

Radek then goes on to point out the meaning of this document, addressed to Avksentiev, the dearest comrade of Kerensky in the Administrative Center, the man from whom the Administrative Center received 500,000 francs in cash, between February and June, 1921.

This document proves: Firstly, that Avksentiev had already received various sums of money from the French Foreign Offices, for otherwise, he would not write as if the request were a matter of course.

Secondly, this document proves that in June, 1921, Avksentiev asked the French government for a large sum of money.

Thirdly, this document shows that the sum in question was to come from French pockets (not only thru French hands), for otherwise it would not have been necessary for this money to be drawn from the French budget. Such are the contents of this document found in the archives of the Social (Counter) Revolutionary Administrative Center in Paris.

Radek urges that the whole world see this document which is nothing less than the prostitution certificate of Messers Avksentiev and Kerensky, Tchernov and Co.

It was this Tchernov that cabled to Eugene V. Debs from Berlin, urging him to raise his voice on behalf of the worthless lives of the convicted social (counter) revolutionaries.

From now on the Social (Counter) Revolutionary Party is branded as the courtesan of French imperialism, charge our Rusian comrades. No denial will help them any more.

The Second and the 2½ "Socialist" Internationals are to be congratulated on their support of such an aggregation. The New York Call and the American "Socialist" Party are no doubt content with these associations.

When Frank P. Walsh returned to this country from Soviet Russia he brought with him the news that the social (counter) revolutionaries had received $25,000 from Boris Bahkmetiev, the Kerensky social revolutionary "ambassador" in this country, to help them foment the Kronstadt revolt against Soviet Rule.

Oneal points out that many social (counter) revolutionaries had suffered exile under the czar, had gone to prison and to death for the cause.

We can remember not so long ago when the "Socialist" Party stood squarely against selling its body and soul to the old political parties. But it is not now above prostituting itself at the beck and call of these handmaidens of capitalism.

How times do change. Oneal knows that the social revolutionary party that was in Russia is now basking in the favor of French imperialism, just as the American "Socialist" Party is reclining in the lap of the Republican Party, in Wisconsin, and elsewhere. Oneal likes it well enough to defend it. We do not believe this condition is to the liking of Eugene V. Debs. That is why we believe there is developing the case of "Debs vs. the Socialist Party," that has not yet come to a verdict.

only the Government of the lanky King Tino, who in the shadow of the Acropolis, wished to imitate his brother-in-law, Kaiser Wilhelm, but the structure of illusions created in 1919.

The great illusion regarding the solution of the Orient problem, as it was attempted three years ago, consisted in the fact that the people of the Near East were regarded as stupid enough to permit themselves to be enslaved by the Anglo-Grecian Banking Kings.

English capitalism in the East has peculiar connections. For many decades intimate connections existed between British, Indian, Oriental-Jewish, and Greek banking and commercial houses.

A close chain of capitalist combinations stretches from Bombay over Bagdad and Alexandria, over Smyrna and Athens to London and Manchester.

At the central point of these combinations there stand two families: the Indo-Jewish family of Sassoon, which occupies a preeminent position in the commercial and banking business of the East, and the Anglicised Greek family of Rallis.

Both are multi-millionaire families. The house of Sassoon stands in the closest relationship to the English dynasty and to the most influential London politicians. The house of Rallis is through its connections as mighty in Athens as in London. The actual ones who were defeated in the fighting in Smyrna are not Lloyd George and Constantine, but Sassoon and Rallis.

Wish Access to Mespot

It was hoped by means of the Greek offensive policy to win the whole of Asia Minor. Then direct access would be [illegible] to Mesopotamia.

There existed the Arabian comic-opera kingdom of [illegible]k, but the real ruler in Bagdad [illegible]t King Feisul, but the English [illegible]eum Trust, i. e. the House of [illegible]

And via B[illegible] ring could be linked to Ind[illegible] for the moment there sits [illegible] Reading as Viceroy of the King [illegible] England. But Lord Reading was [illegible]rmerly known to the world as the great capitalist Rufus Isaacs.

The English capitalists pursued far reaching plans in the district captured by Greece. Petroleum concessions in Macedonia followed the establishing of banks in Asia Minor.

Then came the Council of the Ottoman Debt with its seat in Constantinople. This is the committee of foreign creditors who had lent money to the Sultan's Government, and received Turkey's revenues as security.

The Council of the Ottoman Debt is at present under English control. And if it had had its way the peasants of Asia Minor would have had to pay the debts of their Sultan down to the last farthing.

Refuse to Pay Debts

Things turned out otherwise however. In Angora and Asia Minor was formed the National Turkish Government of Kemal Pasha, which, up to now, has refused all payment to the Council.

Whilst the Greek army was given over more and more to the conviction that it was only there in order to win fresh millions of profits for a limited clique of Anglo-Grecian capitalists the morale of the Turkish army was essentially different.

The Government of Kemal Pasha is by no means a Communist Government. But it embodies the resistance of the masses of the Turkish people against the capitalist robbers of the West.

The concession treaty which Kemal Pasha concluded with the French capitalists in order to split the front of the Entente, leaves the right of self-determination of Turkey, both politically and economically, undisturbed. The Turk, who fought against his debt enslavement has now beaten the Greek slaves of capital.

Kemal Pasha is at present the undisputed master of Asia Minor. But the Turks are not satisfied with this. The National Government of Angora demands the surrender of Constantinople and the return of the European province of Thrace with Adrianople.

The English must, willy-nilly, bury the hope of capturing Asia Minor, but they will sacrifice everything to retain the important position of Constantinople and the Dardanelles.

English Oriental Policy Bankrupt

The French capitalists, on their side, will also do everything in their power to manoeuver the English out of Constantinople. The position of Lloyd George's Ministry is extremely endangered through the bankruptcy of its oriental policy.

The English capitalists are determined to retain Constantinople. But it is very questionable as to what power there is at present behind this will. But should the Turkish troops come to Europe again (even if the English retain certain privileges in the Dardanelles) the effects for the Balkans would be incalculable.

The Cinderella of the Balkan States at present, is Bulgaria, whose governing circles, in all the crises of the last decade, have managed to back the wrong horse with unfailing certainty. If the Turkish Army again occupies Adrianople, Bulgaria will find in it a protection in her rear. The Macedonian question will then again come up, and Bulgarian nationalism will mobilize the "suppressed brethren" against the alien domination of Greece and Jugoslavia.

The real solution of the Balkan question will only be brought about by the victory of the Workers' and Peasants' Revolution in all the Balkan countries. The revolutionizing of the East has no doubt been accelerated by the recent Turkish victories.

In Athens the capitalist and military clique which up to now had control of the helm of state is breaking down under the burden of its responsibilities. The cruelly persecuted Communist Party of Greece now stands before the masses as the only body which correctly judged the course of development. How far the left movement will develop in Athens, cannot be predicted.

The radicalization of Greece will also strengthen the revolutionary wing of the Bulgarian workers and peasants. Under the new circumstances it will be more and more difficult for the governing cliques in Roumania and Jugoslavia to maintain the white terror.

Hence the stimulating influence which the Turkish victories exercise on the rebellious peoples in the whole of the Orient. In Egypt as well as in Palestine and Mesopotamia the opposition against England is growing.

In India, after a long period of apathy, a new uprising of the revolutionary movement is noticeable [illegible] the last few weeks.

The Orient is no longer as beautifully cut up into spheres of influence as it was in 1919. It was [illegible] easy matter to draw the map of the Treaty of Sevres.

But the human beings whom every stroke on the map affected, offered resistance. The national movement of the Orientals bids fair to erase the lines of Sevres. The lines of Versailles will likewise fade when the resistance of the bartered proletarian masses of central Europe sets [illegible] with full force.

[illegible] Rally in Support of Victims of Michigan Raids

[illegible] Labor Defense Council launched to fight for the [illegible] Michigan "Red" raid and to carry on a [illegible] workers' rights is meeting with [illegible] from all elements of the labor movement. This is [illegible] meetings which W. Z. Foster and C. E. Ruthenberg [illegible] during the last week. The audiences which have greeted the speakers have not been made up only of the radical element, but in each city there has been a goodly number of progressive trade unionists. These trade unionists have not only attended the meetings but have shown their willingness to become members of local groups of the Labor Defense Council.

Toledo Hears Foster's Story

In Toledo an audience which filled the Labor Temple was on hand. Sprinkled thru this audience was a goodly number of trade union officials of the city.

Foster drew a picture of the way craft unionism worked in the example of seven railroad unions on strike while nine unions remained at work which drove home the lesson.

He pointed out that it was because the "reds" were fighting against such conditions in the labor movement that the effort was being made to railroad them to prison.

Ruthenberg told the story of the organization of the Communist Party and its participation in the industrial conflicts of 1919 and 1922 and the resulting attacks upon the movement. The audience contributed $104 for the defense fund. The work of organizing a local branch of the Labor Defense Council is under way.

Most Enthusiasm at Cleveland

The Cleveland meeting was held under the auspices of the local Labor Defense Council, which has already been provisionally organized.

The meeting was held in the B. L. E. Auditorium which was filled by the largest and most enthusiastic audience of the tour so far.

Foster took advantage of the fact that he was speaking in the twelve story building which is the headquarters of the most conservative of the railroad unions to outline the program of amalgamation of the railroad unions.

"What would you think," he asked, "of an army which sent its infantry into battle while the cavalry and artillery, the air service and other branches stayed out? And then when the infantry had got 'leaned up' sent in the cavalry to fight alone and get its licking?

"That is what we are doing on the railroads. We are sending in our men in single divisions to fight the whole power of the enemy. When we learn some common sense we will send in our whole army at one time. We will make one army, one big industrial union of the workers in each industry and then a tin-horn politician like Daugherty won't dare have an injunction issued against us."

"The answer to the Michigan raids and the Daugherty injunction must be a united stand by labor to make real the right of free speech, free press and freedom of assemblage, the right to organize and strike in the only way that these rights can become a reality for the worker, thru the organized power of labor."

David S. Williams of North Church presided at the meeting. The audience contributed $447 to the defense fund in addition to paying 25 cents admission.

Pittsburgh Hates Foster

Pittsburgh does not love Foster. The memory of the great steel strike is still to fresh in the minds of the steel bosses. The Pittsburgh police first decided that Foster could not speak in the city but backed up when they saw there was going to be a fight.

A good crowd came out to the Labor Lyceum, the only hall which could be secured for the meeting. The defense contribution amounted to $280. After the meeting the local branch of the Labor Defense Council was organized through the election of a provisional executive committee which will issue a general call to the labor bodies of the city. On this committee are three or four of the most active members of the Pittsburgh Federation of Labor.

Youngstown Mayor Backs Down

The mayor of Youngstown prohibited the defense meeting in that city, but Wallace Metcalfe, acting in the name of the Labor Defense Council and the Civil Liberties Union, stirred up such a hornets' nest of protest that the mayor was compelled to back down.

Metcalfe lined up behind him the Private Soldier organization, the Central Labor Body and the liberal forces of the city and demanded to know whether the mayor was bigger than the constitution. The result of the advertising given the meeting was one of the biggest meetings held in Youngstown in recent years.

The Central Labor Union had planned a meeting in the afternoon to protest against the Daugherty injunction but called off the meeting and decided to support the Foster-Ruthenberg meeting. This brought many of the union men of the city to the meeting.

Foster recalled some of the incidents of the steel strike. Most of those in the audience were steel workers. Foster's suggestion that the time was coming when there would be a new campaign of organization in the steel mills and that the the next strike would not be lost was received with cheers.

"When the next strike in the steel industry comes," he said, "we will be organized to win. We will have united with the miners so that there will be no coal for scab mills, and with the railroad men, so there will be no trains to bring in raw material or take out finished goods. That is the kind of unionism which will win."

By a unanimous rising vote the audience adopted the Workers Party resolution calling for a Labor Defense Council, the General Strike and independent working-class political action thru a working-class political party.

Undoubtedly Youngstown will have one of the strongest local groups of the Labor Defense Council, organization of which is already under way.

The Youngstown audience contributed $170 to the defense fund, to which there was added $50 collected by the workers in the nearby town of Girard and added to the collection.

with the authority of the courts to issue injunctions." "Demand freedom of speech and assemblage for all workers and their organizations."

Foster's introduction, which followed an address by Ruthenberg, was the signal for prolonged applause. He said in part:

"This is the first time I have spoken here since before the beginning of the steel strike. We gave the steel barons a great fight in 1919 but that will be nothing compared to the fight we will give them again.

"We lost the strike because the steel barons were too strong for us. During the time it was in effect in the United States they killed 22 men and threw into jail 20,000. When next we tie up the steel plants with a strike we will have with us the miners and the railroad men.

"If a strike of the steel workers, miners and railroad workers does not win we will then arrange for a strike of the entire working class. If Campbell had his way this meeting would not have been held. When we came here before we could not hold meetings in East Youngstown.

"We have been told that the men arrested in Michigan were holding an under-ground and under-cover meeting. If it was a secret assemblage it is only proof of the fact that free speech no longer prevails in America.

Big Meeting in Pittsburgh

Foster and Ruthenberg addressed a huge gathering in Pittsburgh in spite of the fact that Safety Director George W. McCandless had declared that if they attempted to speak they would be arrested.

Local workers carried their appeal from the safety director, who has outlawed Workers Party meetings during the past year, to Mayor W. A. Magee. The mayor finally weakened and vetoed the decision of his safety director and allowed the meeting.

Police and secret service sleuths were scattered in and around the Labor Lyceum, where the meeting was held.

This Week!

William Z. Foster and C. E. R[illegible] thenberg ought to be given the [illegible] ception of their lives when they [illegible] out on the platform at the C[illegible] Opera House, 47th St., near [illegible] Ave., this Friday evening.

They have come east covering [illegible] ficult ground in the working [illegible] struggle. They spoke at meetings in the big steel towns of P[illegible] and Youngstown, after these gatherings had been forbidden.

It should be unnecessary to re[illegible] to the workers of New York the [illegible] mendous demonstration held in Chi[illegible] cago, Sept. 17.

One way to measure the spirit [illegible] the Chicago meeting is to state th[illegible] the collection raised in aid of [illegible] victims of the Michigan and Chi[illegible] raids netted $2,596.70 for defense.

This collection was taken up by Jack Carney, the militant editor of the Voice of Labor, and must be recorded as an extraordinary achievement.

One of the magnificent responses to Carney's appeal came from the local branches of the Czecho-Slovak Federation that recently affiliated with the Workers Party. Watch Chicago and follow its example.

LET'S SEE WHO IS CRAZY?

The Portland Conference of the Episcopal Church quickly dropped the question of ousting Bishop William Montgomery Brown.

Bishop Brown isn't willing to let the matter rest here. He has written the House of Bishops stating that "According to the Arkansas Gazette the movement looking towards my trial and deposition has failed, and according to the Oregonian its failure is due to your belief that my mental condition is such as to prevent me from being held responsible for the heretical representations of the booklet 'Communism and Christianism.'"

Bishop Brown then continues as follows:

"On the one hand, I can not consistently blame you for this conviction, because during the many years of my active ministry, I would have entertained it towards any one among you who had left, as I have, the orthodox way and traveled as far in the heterodox one.

"On the other hand, you cannot blame my human nature being what it is for feeling that the real reason for stopping the movement is your inability to frame charges from the booklet and to proceed against me with them without discrediting your own orthodoxy more than my heterodoxy.

"But to make sure that I am not in error as to this feeling, I will offer and hereby do offer, myself to the House of Bishops for a thorogoing mental examination by the Professors of Psychology in Yale, Columbia and John Hopkins Universities. They are not personally known to me but I am willing to trust them.

"If you accept this challenge and arrange for the examination, it should take place at Galion; for, in the present condition of my health I could not go to one of the universities for it and have strength enough left for the requisite sittings.

"If the members of the House of Bishops will place themselves on record as believing the representations of the Bible, literally interpreted, concerning the creation of Adam and Eve, the planting of the Garden of Eden, the fall of Adam and Eve and its effects, the birth of Jesus, his death and descent into hell, his resurrection and ascension into heaven, and his second coming to raise all deceased men, women and children from the dead and to judge and send them to heaven or hell, I will resign and do hereby agree to resign my seat in the House.

"If you do not accept the first of these offers, I shall ask that you should not reflect upon my mental condition in public or private, but rather appoint a competent artist to illustrate the situation with a picture of a big, barking, snapping dog and a little curling, bristling porcupine with these explanatory inscriptions: (1) under the dog—"The House of Bishops," and (2) under the porcupine—"Bishop Brown," and (3) under the picture—"Nothing that can safely be taken hold of."

We await developments.

JOHANNESBURG, S. Africa.—[illegible] J. Brown, a Communist, was sentenced to five months at hard labor on a charge of inciting to violence. His alleged offense consisted [illegible] warning an audience in the town ha[illegible] to be prepared for violence on the part of the authorities.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD REA[illegible] THIS COPY OF THE WORKE[illegible] KEEP IT IN CIRCULATIO[illegible]

…vention of …od Workers …ss Advance

The second convention of the International Workers in the Amalgamated Food Industries was held Sept. 30, and Oct. 1, in the Hotel Workers Hall, 133 West 51st Street, New York City.

Since its formation in 1920 the organization has grown from 12 locals and branches with a combined membership of about 8,000 to 22 locals and branches with a total membership of 12,000. The organization was established thru the amalgamation of the Federation of Hotel and Restaurant Workers with the Journeymen Bakers organization of Greater New York, an independent organization.

The initial convention, however, clearly defined the purpose of the new organization to be the uniting of all workers in the food industry irrespective of crafts and trades, into one industrial organization.

This line has consistantly been adhered to since the inception of the organization. Attempts have been made time and again to draw other workers in other lines in the food industry into the organization. Owing mostly to the great "back to normalcy" movement, conducted by the employing interests, progress in these lines has not been as rapid as might have been desired, but already butcher and slaughterhouse workers, Maccaroni makers and others have been added to the list of food workers trades represented in the organization.

It is significant, that during a period of such widespread and disastrous industrial depression and reaction as the one just past, under which many of the most powerful organizations went down to almost complete disaster, the new organization was able not only to increase and consolidate its membership, but also to repulse almost all attacks of the employing interests, against the wage standards and the working conditions enjoyed by its members since the inauguration of the organization.

The financial report of the general secretary showed that the finances of the organization are on a sound basis, altho considerable expenses had to be made for organizing, defense and other purposes.

The convention decided to change the name of the organization to The Amalgamate Food Workers and gave instructions to its executive board to establish affiliation with the International Food Workers Federation in Zurich, Switzerland.

The delegate sent by the United Labor Council to the Second Congress of the Red Trade Union International in Moscow received credentials from the Convention to represent the Food Workers and the delegates instructions from the United Labor Council were approved and indorsed.

Several changes to the constitution were made by the convention all of which will have to be sanctioned by the members before they become law.

An urgent appeal made by Comrade Fred Biedenkapp for financial aid in the Sacco-Vanzetti defense case was granted without much discussion and on a collection taken up among the 45 delegates $55.00 were added to the donation.

In a resolution the release of all political and class war prisoners was demanded and the organization pledged to assist in any movement to attain this end.

Changes in the constitution include the raising of the P. C. Tax to the general organization to 25c per month and the elimination of the [illegible]00 annual assessment for the official organ.

In a resolution presented by the Chicago Hotel Workers branch, the organization pledges itself to the amalgamation of all food workers into one industrial organization under progressive leadership.

It reads as follows:

"Whereas, the ravages wrought by the "open shop" campaign have made it imperative that the workers of the respective industries consolidate their forces so as to create a [illegible] front against the enemy [illegible], and

"Whereas, the need for solidarity in the food industry is one that must result in a determined and decisive action, therefore be it

"Resolved, that this National Convention of the Amalgamated Food Workers endorses the general principles of amalgamation and instructs its National Executive Officers to initiate an intensified campaign of education, looking towards the fusion of all existing organizations in the food industries into one industrial union under progressive leadership."

Michigan Labor Endorses Amalgamation

Demands Repeal of Criminal Syndicalism Law—Daugherty Flagged

(Special to Daily Worker)

Battle Creek, Mich.—Michigan labor in Convention assembled hurled its defiance in the teeth of Attorney-General Daugherty, head of the Department of Injustice, when resolutions were unanimously adopted denouncing the raid on labor unionists in Berrien County, Michigan, demanding the repeal of the State Criminal Syndicalism Law under which those labor leaders are held and with only one dissenting vote passed a resolution favoring the amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions.

This movement which is fostered by William Z. Foster has gotten under the hide of Samuel Gompers, the "Old Man of the Sea," who has kept his seat in the back of the American Labor for almost half a century.

The identity of the troglodyte who cast the solitary vote against the "amalgamation" resolution is not known to the editorial staff of the DAILY WORKER at this time.

We feel, however, that his name will be enshrined in the pages of history with specimens of animal life that have persisted in living after all excuses for their existance had passed.

Perhaps he is a candidate for the presidency of the A. F. of L. to succeed the "Old Man of the Sea." At any rate he is what is known in Gaelic as a Rara Avis,—in other words "Michiganer."

The political prisoners in Bergien County jail appreciate the stand taken by the Michigan Federation of Labor, a stand which is in harmony with the progressive movement among the rank and file of organized labor in every part of the country.

That the labor movement notes with growing concern the fact that the capitalists and their servants in high places make no fine distinctions between labor leaders who conduct their activity along strictly trade union lines and those who combine political with trade union activity is a significant indication of the growing spirit of class consciousness among the American Workers.

Gompers may fume and his Grand Dukes from the Crown Prince Matthew Woll to the oldest barnacle on the rusty bottom of his Sinking Ship—may rage over the insurgent movement among the workers, against the Trade Union Educational League and against Foster in particular, but the "DAILY WORKER", with the largest circulation of any English daily communist organ in the United States pledges itself to fight the separation of the workers on the industrial field and press the issue of amalgamation until the workers are brought to see the fact that united on the industrial and political fields they can bring about a condition under which they can establish themselves in power under the Workers' Soviet Republic of America.

MUTINY QUELLED

An attempted coup d'etat on the part of a small und unrepresentative fraction of the committee which publishes this organ of undiluted communism was nipped in the bud when Elmer MacMillan, the leader of the revolt was placed in solitary confinement for two days and his first lieutenant Bud Reynolds dishonorably discharged from the County Jail.

The other malcontent Gene Bechtold did not take an active part in the fighting that took place when his two comrades attempted to kidnap the editor.

He was dealt with leniently for this reason. His daily allowance of coffee was limited to three quarts.

Details of the revolt will be found on another page. Suffice it to say here, that the present administration will not tolerate any interference from demagogues who pretend to speak for the rank and file. If the rank and file need to voice their feelings they can do so thru the columns of the Daily Worker.

The fate of these misguided comrades should serve as a lesson to others who may desire power without passing thru the probation period to test their fitness.

CONSTANTINOPLE.— Another world war, deadlier than the last, threatens to devour what was left of civilization when the dove of peace replaced Mars on the gory battlefields of Europe on November 11, 1918.

This time the slogan will not be "Make the World Safe for Democracy" but "Save Christianity from the Terrible Turk!" England as usual leads the movement for salvation.

England is mobilizing all her fighting forces, even Miss Gorey Booth, Commander-in-Chief of the American Section of the Salvation Army was ordered to report at once to headquarters in London.

Kemal Pasha and his armies are chasing the Greeks, but the latter are moving so rapidly that the Turks can barely see their dust in the distance. Telegrams of congratulations were received at Turkish headquarters from the Soviet Foreign minister and from Eamonn De Valera, President of the Irish Republic. Chicherin, the Soviet Foreign Minister, notified Kemal Pasha that he would send him a train load of paper rubles if necessary, but the latter replied that he had not yet exhausted his supply of note paper.

De Valera offered Kemal an option on the next crop of Irish policemen. Kemal thanked him for his kind offer but replied that he did not care just now to risk complications with the United States government.

The good will of Ireland and Russia has raised the morale of the Turks considerably. It is generally believed here that a military economic agreement between these powers is as good as concluded.

The motto of the Irish is "The Best Way to Prepare for Peace is to be always at war." They have fought now for nearly 800 years against England and apparently they are only beginning to like it.

If Ireland threatened to stop fighting just now it is feared that in the present state of nervousness from which Europe is suffering a world cataclysm would result.

Such a rupture with tradition would not alone embarrass the Friends of Irish Freedom in America but would also strike terror into the heart of England.

The latter would fear that Ireland found a new weapon, more dangerous than any hitherto known and might prove deadlier in peace than in war.

The Greeks were heartened by the Mire Lundon resolution calling on Harding to offer mediation in the Tufco-Greco mutual annihilation game. The Sultan has issued orders to the Turkish voters in America to support the Anti-Saloon League in the next election, thus punishing Milwaukee, the only remaining stronghold of the Socialist Party in America.

The revolution in the Sultan's harem is spreading rapidly. The eunuchs have organized and accuse the Sultan of retaining his youth at their expense. They marched to the Sultan's throne carrying banners bearing the Legends "No more glands for the Sultan."

It is rumored that Bolshevist propaganda is back of this attack on the Sultan as part of their attempt to break up the home and destroy religion.

In the meantime moving picture operators are trying to "shoot" the Greek Army but only succeed in snapping a cloud of dust. The Greeks are preparing a proclamation calling on the Ku Klux Klan and the Mormon church to rally their forces against the Turks and save the world from lawlessness and polygamy.

NOTICE TO OUR PATRONS

A. Bail, our former advertising manager has resigned his position to accept an offer from a Philadelphia daily of international repute. We wish Mr. Bail success. He was a painstaking employee and during his short term of service on the staff of the Daily Worker achieved splendid results. HERRIN, Ill.—Constant [illegible] comment, lying feature stories, incendiary cartoons and parrot editorials in the commercial press against Williamson County, steadily kept up since the bloodshed at the Lester strip mine near here June 22 is having an inflammatory result equal only to the late wartime hysteria which was brought about by the same machinery.

Residents here deplore the false light in which they have been placed before the reading public, but those who have ventured away from home have felt the effect of the poison propaganda in another way.

A member of the local cooks and waiters' union writing from Pueblo, Colo., says: "If you want to keep out of jail don't leave the county. I got three days in the lockup here after my union card revealed the fact that I had come from Herrin."

A banker here had the automobile name plate which bore the name Herrin, Ill., battered into an unreadable condition in front of the Statler hotel, St. Louis. Another resident, while automobiling outside the county, got his car stuck in the mud. A nearby farm was appealed to for help. The driver of the muleteam, sent to rescue the submerged car, upon approaching it, saw the word Herrin printed on the name plate, turned tail and fled.

A colored member of the Culp miners' local union had the same reception when he entered the colored section of St. Louis and was introduced as a miner "from Herrin." In relating the incident to me the miner said, "They backed away from me as though they expected me to explode."

Residents here bitterly resent the almost invariable omission in metropolitan press accounts of the mine trouble, of the fact that two union men were murdered in cold blood by imported gunmen 24 hours before the alleged massacre occurred.

Amalgamation!

Defeating the opponents of "Amalgamation", the delegates to the recent convention of the Indiana State Federation of Labor adopted resolutions demanding the solidarity of all labor so essential for the welfare of the toiling masses. The resolution was submitted by the State Conference of the Painters' Union. The extract from the minutes showing the action of the convention is as follows

Resolution on Amalgamation

The Committee on Organization had referred to it the following resolution

"To the Officers and Delegates of the Indiana State Federation of Labor:

"Whereas, The strikes of the miners, railroad shop crafts and textile workers have proven that the employers thruout the nation are solidly united by identity of interest and welfare which leaves no room for divided action, and in conjunction they are being supported by the government, the courts, and public press in any union-destroying act they want to engage in, and

Whereas, The employers are making a vicious attack upon the labor movement, singling out various crafts and forcing them to struggle to maintain their organization, and

Whereas, The unions split up in various crafts are unable to make a united resistance against the employers, hence are separately defeated and forced to accept reductions in wages and lower their standard of living, and

Whereas, The only solution for the situation is the development of a united front by the workers thru amalgamation of the various crafts so that there will only remain one union for each industry, therefore be it

Resolved, that the Indiana State Federation of Labor call upon all local unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. to take steps to bring about amalgamation by instructing their International, state and central organizations to call a conference of their respective bodies to bring about this required solidarity that is so essential for the welfare of the toiling masses, and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be sent to all State Federations, Internationals and the A. F. of L.

Fraternally submitted by the Indiana State Conference Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paper Hangers of America.

Signed:

CARL MULLEN, President.
F. H. DETRICH, Sec'y.-Treas.

The majority of the committee recommended concurrence in the resolution, and the minority, Charles Donald and Thomas Moore, recommended non-concurrence.

The minority report was defeated after some discussion, and the majority report of the committee adopted.

Just Words, Words, Words

Conservative labor officials in Great Britain have let loose a blare of oratory and a storm of manifestoes against the threatened war in the Near East. The Labor Herald, now the official organ of the British labor unions, proclaims, "Not a man, not a gun, not a ship!" across the top of its first page, issue of Sept. 19.

So was it before hell broke loose over Europe in the summer days of 1914, sweeping these same labor officials into the flames. These officials have not learned, or will not learn, probably both.

Thus Arthur Henderson, most franctic of the jingoes in 1914, now makes a speech at the opening of a new labor hall at Wimbledon, England, and utters words as follows:

> "The latest steps demanding that the Turks withdraw from the neutral zone are not calculated to lessen the tension in the Near East.
> "At any moment the British troops may find themselves under orders to expel the Turks, and this would kindle the flames of war likely to set the whole Moslem world ablaze. This would precipitate a calamity as dreadful as the great war.
> "I fear it must be said that the war party in the cabinet has gained the upper hand. The policy now pursued is inconsistent with the spirit of the recent note of the Allies to Kemal, and the government's duty is to avoid any action likely to provoke a conflict.
> "WE SHALL OPPOSE BY ALL MEANS WITHIN OUR POWER THE WAR THAT IS NOW THREATENED."

Henderson admits that the disturbing factor is the presence of British troops in the Dardanelles, where they have no business from labor's point of view. Then why doesn't British labor demand the withdrawal of these troops instead of making hypocritical anti-war speeches.

Australian labor is getting nearer reality thru issuing a manifesto denouncing the attitude of Premier Hughes (Labor) on the Near East question, and threatening a general strike in the event of war, so as to prevent the manufacture of munitions or the transport of troops.

It must ruffle the feelings of labor conservatives in England to hear of this action by the workers in one of the Empire's most important colonies, especially in protest against the "labor" premier who sent Australia's workers into the war in 1917, and served the King loyally thruout the conflict.

All that Turkey wants is what Great Britain has confessed she ought to have. Then let British labor call a general strike and stop all industry until the troops are ordered home. If this doesn't help, then let British labor take over all power and run the country itself, and itself order the troops back to England.

Instead of talking anti-war let British labor act anti-war. And let those conservative officials of British labor who talk about winning the government in the next election, show that labor has a mailed fist to smash in the face of the present government NOW.

La Guardia, regular republican nominee for congress in the 20th (New York) District, has discovered the issue as between himself and Karlin, the "Socialist" candidate. La Guardia says: "Mr. Karlin is a conservative running on a radical ticket. I am a radical running on a conservative ticket." And they are going to have a debate to fight it out. No wonder the voters sometimes get so dizzy they can't find the polling booth. La Guardia has not attempted to compare himself to the candidates of the Workers Party, or "steal" any of its Communist principles.

Washington has decided to keep out of England's troubles in the Near East by sending a squadron of twelve destroyers to the troubled waters of the Mediterranean. It will be remembered that the Spanish-American war was fanned into flames with the slogan of "Remember the Maine," the battleship Maine having been blown up in Havana (Cuba) Harbor, where it had gone to "protect American interests."

Henry Ford announces that he is going to invest his profits to make more work for the workers. But he forgot to add, more profits for Henry Ford. The workers work harder and Ford grows richer, until the time that the workers decide to quit working for Ford and begin working for themselves. Labor shouldn't force Ford to worry about how best to re-invest his profits.

A conference of delegates of the Red International of Labor Unions for the London, England, district recently adopted resolutions demanding the release of all class war prisoners in America and South Africa, the two spots in the English-speaking world where the reactionists are making their most bitter attacks on labor.

Great Britain seems to be having an awful time trying to postpone the war in the Near East. We say "postpone," because British imperialism shows no inclination to wipe out the causes of war in the Mediterranean.

The British Labor Party is still issuing "statements" on the war danger in the Near East. But, as usual, nothing definite is done to halt such a calamity with the mailed fist of the organized British working class.

The number of stockholders in the United States Steel Corporation has decreased by 3,205 during the last three months. The little fellows must be selling out to raise funds to keep body and soul together.

Dr. Josiah H. Penniman, acting provost of the University of Pennsylvania, endorses college education for the masses. But he carefully steers shy of any suggestions as to how this is to be accomplished.

U. S. Senator William E. Borah, addressing the Chicago Press Club recently, demanded U. S. recognition of the Russian Soviet Republic. It still sounds like a voice in the wilderness. But Borah should at least be given credit for keeping at it.

We have another recruit for the army that feels all Europe [illegible]. Not Europe, but imperialism in Europe, is tottering to [illegible]. Ex-King Constantine now professes to [illegible]. That's what makes ex-King Constantine feel so badly.

Great Britain has already recognized the new Greek king. It is taken for granted that the Greek revolution didn't even dent capitalism locally.

Ex-King Constantine of Greece is now Prince [illegible]. It beats all how royalty sticks by its titles. But it is to be hoped the revolution in Greece develops into more than a fluke.

France and England are getting ready to swallow their pride and invite Soviet Russia to the Dardanelles Peace Conference. Another victory for Soviet diplomacy.

(By The Federated Press)

OMAHA.—Except for one dissenting vote the Nebraska State Federation of Labor in convention here unanimously adopted a resolution demanding that craft unions be amalgamated into industrial unions, one for each industry. The Nebraska resolution follows substantially the one adopted by the Minnesota and Wisconsin state federations at their conventions.

It reads: "Whereas, The employers are solidly united in an effort to crush all Labor Unions in America, as shown by their present attempt to break up the organizations of the workers in the railroad shop crafts and by their successful destruction of the packing house workers' unions; and

"Whereas, The present organizations of the workers on a craft basis tends to keep the forces of labor divided so that we cannot exert our full power in defense of our rights; and

"Whereas, The employers are supported by the full power of the government, including the courts, injunction judges and troops in their efforts to impose a slavery standard of living upon the American workers;

"Therefore, Be it Resolved: That the Nebraska State Federation of Labor in convention assembled hereby urge the American Federation of Labor and the various international unions to call all the unions in each industry into conference for the purpose of devising ways and means of so amalgamating the unions that there will remain but one union for each industry."

Message from Miners in Vanguard of the Struggle

In spite of injunctions, in spite of the Chamber of Commerce's (capitalists' union) effort to bring about "justice" for themselves by indicting mine workers for crimes provoked by the bosses and committed by the bosses, in spite of the capitalist broadcasting a nation-wide cry, calling on all those who fight for their rights and true justice "un-American" and "Red," the spirit of workers everywhere surges up from the depths of misery and oppression.

Here is part of a letter from a striking miner which, in spite of general depression, shows that undaunted spirit that will lead the workers to victory, and the exploiters to their doom.

The letter is in part as follows:

"I wish to inform you that the Workers Party Local South Zeigler, Illinois is getting on fine.

"Our members have just gone thru a five-months-strike and they have assessed themselves with their first pay, which is to be used for the defense of the comrades arrested at the Michigan Raid.

"The Miners Union at its last district convention voted 1 per cent of its total earnings for defending miners indicted for the Herrin Massacre.

"Local Union No. 992 has already two of its members indicted.

"Our Local Union No. 992, called a general meeting for nomination of international and state officers. John L. Lewis didn't even get a single vote in Zeigler and Frank Farrington only got one from our Local, which has a membership of 1100.

"We send you, comrades, fraternal greetings from battling miners in the for front of the class struggle, at Southern Illinois."

Understanding the need of amalgamation, the Federation adopted a straight amalgamation resolution calling for the complete industrialization of the whole labor movement. Copies were ordered sent to all affiliated organizations.

The Fight in Minnesota

Important as the foregoing victories for amalgamation were, they pale beside that one at the convention of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor held in Crookston in the latter part of July.

Organized Labor thruout the State knew that the proposition was going to come up. Hence both reactionaries and progressives mustered in force at the Convention.

Sam Gompers had his henchmen there to see to it that nothing was done that might modernize the labor movement.

Defenders of his reactionary principles were Secretary-Treasurer Hays of the Typographical Union, President Manning of the Label Trades Department, and Organizer Paul Smith.

Chief among the fighters for amalgamation were the militants from Minneapolis and St. Paul, and the shopmen's delegates from the various railroad centers.

From the beginning of the Convention the gathering quivered with expectancy anent the coming struggle over amalgamation. And when finally the resolution came before the house the battle began in earnest.

They Paint It "Red"

The reactionaries, following out their usual tactics, tried to discredit the proposition by smearing it all over with "red."

Organizer Smith, in particular, viciously assailed the project as the work of the Trade Union Educational League, and threw against it all the thunder of the American Federation of Labor. But it did him little good, and the reactionaries who lined up with him.

The amalgamationists were able to so completely carry the Convention that when the aye vote on the resolution was taken it fairly shook the building.

And it shook all the fight out of the reactionaries, because not a single one dared to vote against it. It was a victory to cheer the heart of every militant worker and to give him renewed faith in the labor movement. The last part of the resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas, the manifest solution for this problem is to develop a united front of the workers in each industry by the organization of industrial unions having full jurisdiction over all crafts employed in any industry; and

"Whereas, this change involves serious re-arrangements of the workers along new lines, a process of national education must be carried on in order that interested unions may effect this transformation voluntarily, and without contention or friction, therefore be it

"Resolved, by the 40th Convention of the State Federation of Labor, [illegible] developing a method of [illegible] this change.

The Michigan State Federation of Labor adopted the amalgamation plan, in Battle Creek, Sept. 21, at its convention. The vote was almost unanimous, only two delegates voting against it. The resolution was the one known as the Chicago Resolution, and calls for the complete industrialization of the labor movement. That makes seven State Federations that have endorsed the resolution in the past three months.

Central Councils for Amalgamation

If the state federations are awake to the necessities for amalgamation in this hour of bitter crisis for the labor movement, the central labor councils are no less keen to realize that Labor must consolidate its forces if it is to withstand the crushing drive of the employers.

Several score of them have endorsed amalgamation since the League's campaign began, including Minneapolis, Omaha, Milwaukee, Chicago, Lincoln, Joliet, St. Paul, Seattle, Tacoma, Belleville, Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Ogden, Salt Lake, etc., etc.

The biggest fight with the reactionaries was had in Chicago at the very opening of the campaign.

The amalgamationists presented a resolution, which has since been adopted in whole or in part by labor bodies all over the country. The reactionaries fought this resolution tooth and nail. But their efforts availed nothing, because it was adopted by a vote of 114 to 37.

This alarmed the reactionaries exceedingly and they declared they would clean up on the "reds" at the next meeting of the Federation. When this came about the assemblage was packed to the doors and the battle began.

It was not long until it was seen that the craft unionists were overwhelmingly beaten. So evident was their downfall that the crowd did not wait for the vote, which this time went 103 for amalgamation to 14 against it.

Alarmed still more by this renewed defeat, the reactionaries made another attempt to defeat the amalgamationists.

Mr. Gompers himself came to Chicago, denounced the Federation, the League, and amalgamation generally.

His supporters immediately got into action and it was quite evident that they were determined to reorganize the Federation and to seize control of it.

But prudence stayed their hand from such rash action. The amalgamation sentiment was too strong for them, many of the largest and most influential trade unions in the city voting hearty endorsement of it.

The Chicago labor movement as a whole went squarely on record for industrial unionism in the industries generally.

Among the Independent Unions

One of the most remarkable features of the League's amalgamation campaign is the favorable response [illegible] and they are [illegible] movement.

No industry has suffered more from dual unionism than the textile industry. Now, however, the many unions are awakening to the folly of warring upon each other and are proposing a general consolidation all around.

One of the first steps in this inevitable merging of the many textile union fragments was the formation of the American Federation of Textile Operatives, which joined together several of them.

Likewise in the boot and shoe industry, another that has been cursed with secessionism, the amalgamation tendency in it is showing strongly since the League began its propaganda.

In a convention held in Boston in the early part of June, this year, several of the independent unions joined forces and called themselves the Amalgamated Shoe Workers of America.

In this industry, too, the goal, ever becoming clearer to the workers, is a complete consolidation of all the existing unions.

The old time policy of constant splitting away and warring to the knife against each other is a thing of the past. The new idea of solidarity, as presented by the League, is the dominant program.

Another striking illustration of the spread of amalgamation sentiment is the project on foot between the American Federation of Railroad Workers and the United Association of Railway Employees.

The first of these organizations was the old-time International Association of Car Workers, which seceded from the A. F. of L. many years ago, and the second was an outcome of the so-called "outlaw" railroad strike of 1920.

These two organizations are now in negotiations with each other looking towards a fusion.

Undoubtedly it will be consummated. This movement has been directly influenced by the general amalgamation propaganda carried on by the League.

So far the two organizations, which in the past have been noted for their bitter hostility towards the old unions, have not yet become reconciled to an amalgamation with the railroad craft unions. But this will soon come, as the amalgamation program gains ground in the railroad industry generally.

The Montreal Labor World recently reported another consolidation movement that has been greatly stimulated by the League's activity.

This is an amalgamation of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees, and the International Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks. Conferences will be held between the executives of these organizations as soon as the strike difficulties in the United States are over.

The elimination, by amalgamation, of the first of these two unions will [illegible] trades are to [illegible] any organization at all.

A number of years ago the Machinists' Union awoke to this need and went on record for a general amalgamation of the metal trades unions. But because of the unresponsiveness of the other organizations and the prosperity brought about by the war period, the agitation was dropped.

The League, however, has succeeded in reviving it again. In his whirlwind campaign for International President of the I. A. of M. Wm. Ross Knudsen stirred the whole organization to the imperative need for amalgamation. Consequently the militants everywhere are demanding it. Even the official journal of the Machinists' Union has been compelled to make propaganda for the plan.

A stumbling block in the way of all progressive movements in the metal trades in the past was the Molders' Union.

The League has aroused this old-fogey-ridden organization also. Just now its militants are making a big issue of amalgamation for the whole metal trades.

A referendum is now being taken on the subject of "Shall there be an amalgamation of metal trades national and international unions, thereby forming an industrial organization of all metal workers of the nation?"

As never before the live spirits among the Molders are determined and organized to modernize and industrialize their organization. It is safe to prophesy that the amalgamation movement in the metal trades will soon take on such size and impetus as to be irresistible.

In the clothing trades the League's influence for amalgamation is strong and unquestioned. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers have officially endorsed the proposition, and the Needle Trades Section of the T. U. E. L. is fighting to make it prevail in the other organizations of the industry.

Tremendous headway is being made in the various clothing centers, and one union for the needle trades may be confidently looked forward to as an achievement of the near future.

The International Typographical Union is the standard bearer for amalgamation in the printing trades.

At its Quebec Convention a year ago it declared for one union in the industry. The League militants in all the printing organizations are agitating to realize this program.

Likewise they are seeing to it that the officials of the I. T. U. are kept moving in the spirit of the Quebec resolution.

The Bookbinders' Union has already been won over to the proposition. The chief obstacles now are the personal interests of Matthew Woll, President of the Photo Engravers' Union, and George Berry, President of the Pressmens' Union, two prize reactionaries.

Amalgamation and the Trade Union Educational League are living movements in the printing industry. [illegible] not only the railroad trades, but of the craft unions in all other industries as well.

Likewise the coming together in one union of the Engineers and Firemen is symptomatic of the rapid spread of amalgamation sentiment.

But the real amalgamation movement has centered around the Minnesota Shop Crafts Legislative Committee of which Otto Mangerin is Secretary.

This Body adopted a comprehensive and scientific plan of amalgamation and scattered it broadcast among the many thousand local railroad unions, asking their endorsement.

The response was overwhelming. Many hundreds of locals, of all crafts, have declared their support to the project of joining the 16 standard railroad unions into one united organization.

It is safe to say that an overwhelming majority of the rank and file of railroad workers are now in favor of amalgamation.

The big job is to register this sentiment in concrete achievement, and the Minnesota Shop Crafts Legislative Committee has dedicated itself to this task.

Steps are now being taken to publish an amalgamation bulletin, which will carry the message of solidarity to railroad workers everywhere. In addition, amalgamation committees will be organized in all the principal railroad centers so as to intensify and crystallize the already existing sentiment.

Before long amalgamation will be an actual achievement in the railroad industry, despite the active opposition of the Gompers type of labor leaders.

From the foregoing necessarily brief sketch of the amalgamation movement that has developed since the League started its work, it is strikingly evident that the American labor movement is ready for industrial unionism.

A curious illustration of this fact, and a typical example of the materialistic viewpoint our labor leaders hold towards the unions, is the case of a certain wellknown President of an International Union, who recently said to a group of his organizers, "Save your money, boys, amalgamation's coming." And the one thing needed to make it come is a determined effort on the part of the Trade Union Educational League militants.

In these critical days for Labor the worker who has not put his union on record for amalgamation is asleep at the switch.

By that very fact he proves his inefficiency as a militant rebel. Amalgamation is the great issue now before the American labor movement. To the League belongs the credit.

Treachery of Bureaucrats Unmasked in Appeal for United Front in Germany decided to take their place alongside of the German bourgeoisie, of German imperialism.

The result of this action was to destroy the belief of the international working class in Socialism, in the international solidarity of the proletariat which allowed itself to be driven from one battlefield to the other, to be butchered like cattle.

Thanks to the policy of the Social Democracy, the bourgeoisie was able to fight the war to an end, shedding seas of blood, without any revolt on the part of the proletarian masses.

German Workers Misled

Then came peace, a peace of iniquity, a peace of exploitation, a peace which keeps the world armed to the teeth, ready for a new war.

And the German working class, weakened and misled by the Social Democrats, was not even capable of etaining the power which had fallen nto its hands without a struggle.

It could not resist the bourgeoisie, ltho the latter was weak and disoranized.

Once again the Scheidemanns have elped the bourgeoisie. They have ganized White Guards to shoot down the vanguard of the German proletariat, so the German bourgeoisie might be able to erect its power anew upon their corpses.

Just as during the war, the Social Democracy excused its criminal tactics on the ground of the necessity to protect German Independence, without which there can be no Democracy and no progress of the working class.

Similarly they stabbed the November Revolution in the back on the ground that it was necessary to suppress all attempts at a proletarian dictatorship, which "only leads to misery and slavery", while the Republic and Democracy represent the smooth roads to Socialism.

They have made a god of their bourgeois democracy, this excellent instrument of capitalistic exploitation, this democracy under which millions of workers in France and in America lead a life of slavery; they have sacrificed on its altars the most elemental interests of the proletariat.

Betray Republic to Monarchists

And now we see the German Social Democracy ready to betray its bourgeois Republic into the hands of the monarchist, Hohenzollern Restoration.

It has prepared this action thru three years that followed the overthrow of the November Revolution.

It has prepared it when it left unpunished the criminal German officer caste.

It has prepared it when it did not dare make any change in the system of oppression of the imperial bureaucracy.

It has prepared it when it threw the masses of the petty bourgeoisie into the arms of the counter-revolution, by making them the prey of Big Capital.

It has prepared it when it left the organizers of the Kapp-Putsch go scott-free, and threw the revolutionary workers into prison.

It has prepared it when it suppressed the spontaneous movement of the proletariat after the murder of Erzberger.

And now this preparatory work is ended: The German Social Democracy capitulated before the monarchists, who, after they had shaken the Government so rudely by the assassination of Rathenau, now dart a direct attack upon the Republic.

Surrender Their Demands

And this happens after the whole German proletariat, in a rousing protest, shouted "Enough!" to the murderous monarchists.

This happens after the workers had forced the leaders of the Social Democracy and the Trade Unions to formulate their minimum demands:—a special law against the monarchists, which would break up their murder organizations, curb the monarchistic propaganda, cleanse the republican administration and army of the monarchists.

Yesterday, they put up and signed their demands, together with the Communists. Twice they have led out the workers in great demonstrations thruout Germany as proof that they were willing to fight for their demands. And what happened? How did they keep their solemn promises?

At the same time that they were prattling about a united front, and the Communists had renounced all separate action, they were negotiating behind the scenes with the bourgeoisie, so-called democratic parties and surrendered half their demands!

They have made the Protective Laws into a farce, till they lost all effectiveness! They have not freed our revolutionary fighters, still languishing in prisons!

Cowardice Gives Reaction Courage

They have refused to exile the members of the old dynasties, even when they openly and cynically advocated the overthrow of the Republic!

They have refused to direct the Extraordinary Laws against the monarchists, and, most important of all, they have refused to chase from the police and the army the monarchistic scoundrels who reign there!

Furthermore, they have helped to create an Extraordinary Law which monarchistic judges will be able to apply against the revolutionary workers fighting for the transformation of the bourgeois republic into a proletarian one.

Their cowardice has given the counter-revolution such courage, that an openly monarchistic party—the financier of the monarchistic reaction—Stinnes' Party dares to demand admission into the Government.

The monarchists have the audacity to defy the Republic from the grave of one of its ministers whom they have murdered.

The monarchist counter-revolution entrenched in Bavaria, has already passed from the defensive to the offensive.

It openly declares war against the national government, and declares null and void the Laws for the Protection of the Republic.

Executes Cowardly Retreat

The German Government again retreats before these provocations without a fight.

The bureaucracy of the Social Democracy and of the trade unions, after calling upon the workers to defeat this monarchistic counter-revolution, now hushes up its cowardly retreat.

The German Social Democrats and the German trade union leaders have demonstrated thereby that they are not able to defend even the bourgeois democracy, this limited field of the class struggle, to say nothing of having it fight for Socialism.

This cowardly behaviour of the Social Democrats and of the trade union leaders will bring about the overthrow of the German bourgeois Republic, unless the working-class arises to the defense of its interests.

And at this moment, when the Social Democracy fails in its duty not only as a Socialistic, but even as a purely democratic party, at this moment, the Independent Socialists are laying down their arms!

This party, in whose program we read: "Proletarian Dictatorship and Soviet Republic," this party which has declared a thousand times that the interests of the working-class against the bourgeoisie can be defended by the class-war only; which has stigmatized a thousand times the coalition policy of the Social Democrats; this party declares itself ready to enter into a bourgeois coalition.

The protection of the bourgeois democracy,—that is the excuse of the Independent Social Democrats for their betrayal of the cause.

The ink with which they wrote this excuse is not yet dry, and already this policy bears its fruits. It has helped the reaction in the Reichstag to defeat the Extraordinary Laws which were to protect the Republic against the monarchists.

A block, including all shades of politicians from Helfferich to Crispien and Dittmann, is being formed to prevent the passage of the Extra- [illegible] every.

[illegible] in Treachery

The Majority Socialists belong to the Second International, the Independent Socialists to the 2½ International.

Just as on the 4th of August, Haase, the later founder of the Independent Social Democracy, and Kautsky, its chief theoretician, adopted the same policy as the Scheidemanns and the Eberts, and betrayed the proletariat; just as in November 1918, these same Independents and Social-Democrats, betrayed the November Revolution to the bourgeoisie.

To crown their treacherous work they united again now, at this deciding turning point in the history of the German proletariat.

When the monarchy of the Hohenzollerns, when the savage rule of capital and militarism will have been restored again, the Moor will have done his work; the Moor can then die.

The bourgeoisie will throw them out of the Government; and this glorious era when the workers will be bound hand and foot, and the "liberators of the people," the Social Democrats, will protest with hollow phrases against the rule of capital which they themselves have helped to restore, these magnificent times will return.

The Second and 2½ Internationals, the heroes of Amsterdam, accompany this tragedy with their clownish dancing. They promise their help to the cowardly German Social Democrats of both shades and to the trade union bureaucrats.

When the Scheidemanns and the Dittmanns are forced to flee the country by monarchistic, anti-Socialistic laws, Henderson in London, and Renaudel in Paris, will receive them with open arms.

In its proclamation of July 23rd, the Amsterdam Trade Union Federation pronounced its blessings upon the Second and 2½ Internationals.

The Unashamed Internationals

For the salvation of Europe these heroes recommend propaganda for the League of Nations, a tearful appeal to the rich uncle in America, that he remit France's and England's war debts, so that they, in turn, will be pleased to reduce their extortions, and plunder Germany not wholly, but only half or three quarters.

These three Internationals are not ashamed to call upon you, workers, to become propagandists for the Entente bourgeoisie.

At the Conference of the Executives of the three political Internationals, the speakers of the 2½ International united with the Communists against the Treaty of Versailles.

And now they call upon you, together with the Second and the Amsterdam Internationals, to make propaganda for Lloyd George.

Working men and women!

If you allow these demagogues to mislead you in this struggle in remembrance of a better past, and in the name of order and discipline, then you are lost!

The German Communists knew very well that this bourgeois Republic was not a proletarian weapon, but in spite of this, they were the only ones to call upon you for an effective defense of the Republic because they see that it gives them at least a certain freedom of movement in their fight for the Soviet Dictatorship of the proletariat, for Socialism.

Communists Not Betrayers

They have undertaken no separate action as long as they had the least hope that the Social Democrats and the trade union bureaucrats would be willing to fight for their demands.

The Communists to not intend to take part in the betrayal of the German proletariat into the hands of the monarchist reaction.

And today, again, before it is too late, we tell you: You must act yourselves! You must do everything to force your leaders to refuse the coalition with the bourgeoisie, to dissolve the Reichstag, to begin the fight for a workers' government.

If this does not succeed, cast aside your leaders, and act without them; for should the capitalistic, monarchistic reaction triumph, it is you who will suffer, you, upon whom the white terror of the monarchistic murderers will wreak its vengeance, in the government, in the factories, and in the workshops.

The betrayal of your leaders makes your struggle very difficult. The Social Democrats and the trade union bureaucrats still control the most important positions in the letarian organizations, and use influence to sabotage your stru

In Bavaria, the reaction is ducting its work openly. The vernment, the Social Democratic trade union leaders give, are givi way before them.

The international counter-revol tion has begun its offensive. Reparations Commission has nam two financial controllers to super tend the income and expenses of German government; the gover ment submits. The Social Dem cratic and trade union leaders help government, police, militar and justice to plunder you accordi to the dictates of the finance contro lers of the Entente.

Working men and women!

The foreign and native capitalis are able to rob you, to squeeze last drop of blood from your bodie because you have not united to o tain the control of the finances the bourgeois state and the mea of production of the capitalists f the welfare of the working class!

Faced with Fate of Austrians

Prices are rising by leaps an bounds; the fate of the Austria worker awaits you if you do n unite in a solid front, to overthro the monarchistic reaction, to ove throw the profiteering bourgeoi and the treacherous party and tra union bureaucrats who have betray you every time you have accepte their words as the truth.

The Communist Party of German and the Communist Internation alone, have proved that they we ready to lead you in the class w and to the victory of the revolutio ary proletariat.

Show those of your leaders wh have forgotten their duty, that th German proletariat is not a herd o cattle which they can drive back int the monarchist stables!

Your leaders have betrayed yo because they fear the war with th bourgeoisie. Teach them to fear th working class, which has finally los its patience with the traitors!

Down with the Coalition Govern ment!

Down with the Social Democrati lackeys of the monarchy!

Long live the fight for the Workers Government!

Long live the united battlefront o the revolutionary working class!

THE WORKER has received a letter from the Shopmen's Picket Line which shows how Workers Party members take the lead in the struggles of the workers with the Bosses. It reads as follows:

"I am renewing my subscription but with a little more time in which to dispose of the five 20 week cards sent me. I am one of the striking shopmen and have been busy on the picket line since July. I have also been busy in our union and am the one who put over the plan for amalgamation which is advocated by the Trade Union Educational League, which we adopted.

Anna Louise Strong in Attempt to Explain the Red Economic Retreat

By ANNA LOUISE STRONG

(Federated Press Correspondent)

MOSCOW. — When the Communist government of Russia announced last year a retreat from communism to state capitalism, many of us common folks were perplexed by the term.

Just exactly what did state capitalism mean? The epigram of communist: "It means capitalism controlled by the state, instead of the state controlled by capitalism," was clearer but hardly explanatory. A page of advertisements in the journal Economic Life furnishes better answer.

Economic Life is one of the thr chief daily papers of Russia. others are Isvestia, organ of the gov ernment, and Pravda, organ of communist party, which keeps up running fire of criticism on all per sons in official life, sparing no but keeping all reminded of str party standards.

Economic Life is the organ of Council of Labor and Defense, highest economic power in Ru Among the advertisements noted it are those of the All-Russian operative Society of London, only agent of the Russian delegat in England; the government paper trust; the rubber trust Moscow; the Moscow department transport and the state auto facto Of special interest is the adver ment of the health department sanitariums in the Crimea, whe besides the patients sent by the co missariat of health, there is room several hundred paying patients.

place [illegible] credence in the word of a radical. Such persons, who seek to tear down the government are not reliable and their testimony should be disregarded."

Miller Rebukes Prosecutor

In answer to this statement Governor Miller severely rebuked Roland saying, "Such an attitude and such a method of administering the laws of this land are more effective than all the Communists in the country in tearing down the government of these United States."

The governor decided that Michigan had not produced enough testimony to have the extradition papers signed and he therefore denied their motion.

Brodsky said after the hearing that the Michigan authorities represented by Deputy Sheriff Cribbe, were so confident of the extradition of Lindgren that they had already bought his ticket back to that state.

Lindgren was arrested in his office on Sept. 7, without a warrant, and taken to police headquarters. He was finger printed and photographed before being brought before a police magistrate. After spending three days in jail he was released in $5000 bail.

Lindgren's hearing on the question of extraditing him to Michigan first came before Governor Miller, Sept. 26. The only question before the governor to decide being whether Lindgren was in Michigan on August 19 and 20, the time of the holding of the alleged Communist Party Convention, and whether he was now a fugitive from justice.

The prosecution was represented by District Attorney Rowan, at Albany, Detective Joseph Spolansky, "specialist in radical cases" for the department of justice.

Detective Spolansky told of being "lost" in the Michigan woods, August 18th, while hunting for the alleged Communist Party convention. The following day, August 19th, he claims he stumbled upon it in the woods near Bridgeman, in Berrien County, Mich. He claims that he saw Lindgren in the gathering.

Lindgren was represented by Attorney Joseph R. Brodsky, of Hale, Nelles and Shorr, and Spolansky was found to be a very unwilling witness under cross examination. He admitted that he had viewed the alleged Communist gathering for only five or eight minutes from a distance of about 50 feet, the gathering consisting of about 80 people. Spolansky admitted that these 80 people, when he saw them, were walking about, talking and discussing among themselves, nevertheless, he contended he was able to identify Lindgren as one of those present.

Spolansky admitted the first and only previous time he had seen Lindgren was three years before at the Chicago Convention in 1919. The detective admitted he had been a member of the Socialist Party for 3½ years and that he had been a sleuth for the Department of Justice for five years.

The only other witness for the prosecution was Detective Val Carroll, of the New York "Bomb Squad" who testified that when Lindgren was arraigned, Lindgren casually stated that he was in Michigan, and stated that he had previously arrested Lindgren in New York.

Under cross examination Detective Carroll admitted that Lindgren had always been non-committal when under arrest, that he would make no statement. He admitted that when Lindgren was arrested he was told of the charge against him, and that when they asked if he was in Michigan, Lindgren made no reply.

It was two days after his arrest that the detective claimed Lindgren casually admitted "Yes I was in Michigan."

The defense then produced Lindgren, who stated that he had left New York City August 14, for Shaffer's Farm, at Asheville, N. Y. He said he stopped at the Farm from August 15th to August 22nd. On the latter date he read in a Buffalo newspaper of the Michigan raid, and read of the predicted raids on the conventions of the Workers Party and the Trade Union Educational League. On August 23 he went to Chicago to get in touch with conditions there. He denied he was a delegate or attended any convention in Michigan.

Lindgren offered as witnesses to prove he had been at Asheville, N. Y., Fruit R. Shaffer, owner of the farm where he was staying, Willard C. Bennett, the hired man, who testified he saw Lindgren every day, Albert Shaffer, Fruit's brother, George Reader a neighbor and Miss Rose Spagnier a school teacher spending her vacation at the Shaffer farm.

No attempt had been made by the prosecution to bring to Albany the numerous witnesses that were taken to Illinois to secure the extradition of William Z. Foster. Deputy Sheriff Cribbe had come on alone with Detective Spolansky.

Joseph Zack, who has been in The Tombs since his arrest here several weeks ago, has waived extradition and was taken to St. Joseph, Mich., last Friday.

EDITOR'S NOTE:—[illegible] THE WORKER [illegible] as follows:

We Must Stand and Fight!

COMRADES:—Never in the history of the American labor movement have the workers faced a more bitter struggle. Never have we faced a more important struggle.

Twenty of our comrades have been made the victims of new "Red Raids." Twenty of our comrades, because they are militant leaders, because they are dangerous to capitalism, face long prison terms.

The labor movement of America stands to lose some of its ablest and most trusted leaders. In the conviction and imprisonment of these men organized labor faces a terrible loss.

If the Mooney case was of such importance that the jailing of Mooney and Billings has created an issue in this country which has remained acute for six years, if the Sacco-Vanzetti case has been able to stir not only workers of this country but of the entire world to action, the Michigan Red Raid case must shake this country to its very foundations, and inspire the American labor movement to take such steps as will make it impossible that William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg, William F. Dunne, and the other valiant fighters for labor should rot in the capitalist jails.

"TO INSPIRE THE AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT TO ACTION." That is the task of the American Labor Militants. That and to give to the defendants the best legal defense that can be procured.

Where there has been one protest meeting held for Mooney or Sacco and Vanzetti, we must have a dozen,—in every city and town—the workers must be led to voice their protest and their determination that THIS THING SHALL NOT BE. Where hundreds of leaflets have been issued for Mooney and Sacco and Vanzetti we must print thousands and hundred of thousands to tell the workers about the attack that is being made on them.

Where hundreds of dollars have been raised in other labor defense cases we must raise thousands. The issue never was so clearly before us,—ARE LABOR MILITANTS TO HAVE THE FULL PROTECTION OF THEIR CLASS? If they are it is the militants that must take the lead, it is the militants that must sacrifice, it is the militants that must take action, must give to the mass of the workers their inspiring example.

Thru the co-operation of THE WORKER this letter is being sent to you because we believe that you are a militant.

We believe that you are willing to sacrifice and able to inspire and lead other workers.

Give what you can, all you can, towards the defense of these comrades. Head your list. Then take it out to the workers with whom you meet. Lead them and inspire them for the defense of these comrades and themselves. Make them know that

WE MUST STAND AND FIGHT!

Fraternally yours,
LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL.

Local New York Opens Campaign at Meeting, Big and Enthusiastic

Local New York opened the campaign with a successful meeting in Park View Palace. The hall was filled to capacity and the audience was enthusiastic.

"The Workers Party," said Comrade Meissave J. Olgin, "does not believe that the working class will solve its problems by merely putting a slip in the ballot box. In order to abolish capitalist slavery the workers will have to displace the capitalist government with a Workers' Republic."

Comrade Engdahl spoke about the persecution which the active members of the Workers Party have to endure because of their activities among the workers.

Comrade Lore told the audience that while Sam Gompers was merely threatening a general strike the Workers Party as soon as it will win the majority of the workers over to its side will carry that threat into life.

Celebrate 5th Anniversary of the Russian Revolution with Concert and Mass Meeting

In honor of the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution Local New York has arranged a concert and mass meeting for Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5th, at the Yorkville Casino, 86th St. near Third Ave.

In addition to speakers a splendid program has been arranged for the meeting. There will be an International Chorus, composed of Finnish, Lettish, Lithuanian, Russian, Ukrainian and Jewish singers. There will be Russian dancing and an orchestra playing Russian music.

John Reed Memorial Meeting

Tuesday evening, Oct. 17, a meeting will be held at the Park View Palace, 110th St. and 5th Ave. to honor the memory of John Reed who died in Russia while fighting for the Proletarian Revolution.

Once John Reed came into the Communist movement, attracted to it by the Russian Revolution, he devoted his whole life to the movement. Full of energy, fearless and aggressive he typified the ideal fighter for the cause of the proletariat. Speakers who knew John Reed intimately will speak of his life and deeds.

Thanksgiving Eve Dance

The finest dance the Workers Party has held since its birth will be held at The Lyceum, 86th St. and Third Ave., Thanksgiving Eve. An orchestra has been engaged which can give satisfaction to all comrades no matter what they like in the dancing line, from the Russian Polka Mazura to the latest American "Jazz". Tickets are already out and can be had from all the branches and from the Local Office. They are only fifty cents apiece.

FINNISH BRANCH HELPS

The Finnish Branch of the Workers Party of Brooklyn has collected $183.86 for defense and relief of the comrades in jail. Of this amount $104.36 was collected at their picnic held on Sunday, September 17th. A special committee of three was elected to do defense work among the comrades and friends in the Finnish colony. Success to them! Who'll be next to follow their example.

V. K. from Baden, Illinois, sends in $10 to the New York Division of the National Defense Committee and receives honorable mention. It is your turn next now!

Opening of the Russian Institute of Technology

Under the auspices of the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, Monday, Oct. 9, there will take place the grand opening of the Russian Institute of Technology.

[illegible] Nov. 7

TO ALL PARTY BRANCHES AND MEMBERS:

COMRADES:—

November 7th will be the 5th Anniversary of the Proletarian Revolution in Russia.

For five years the Workers and Peasants of Russia have withstood the attack of all the forces of counter-revolution. Counter-revolutionary armies have battered against the stone wall of the Red Army only to find themselves destroyed. The blockade and famine have not been able to break the iron will of the Russian Proletariat for victory. World Capitalism has brought all its power into play in the effort to destroy Soviet Russia—and has failed.

When we celebrate the anniversary of the Proletarian Revolution in Russia this year we are celebrating a victory which can no longer be questioned. We know that capitalism cannot now destroy what the Russian Workers and Peasants have won. Capitalism is weaker and the Soviet Republic stronger. This is a victory for the workers everywhere in the World as well as for the Russian Workers and Peasants, for the Soviet Republic is the inspiration and rallying point of the workers of the world.

This year, too, there will open in Moscow on the Anniversary of the Proletarian Revolution the 4th Congress of the Communist International, the fighting organization of the World Proletariat, and in celebrating the anniversary of the Proletarian Revolution we also celebrate the opening of the Fourth Congress.

Comrades, we must make the celebration of November 7th this year the greatest celebration in the history of the movement. Every party unit must participate. We must arrange a celebration in every city and town in which we have a party organization. Where there is a city central committee, it will take the lead and arrange the celebration. In such places in which there is only one branch this branch must arrange a celebration. Whether a branch has five members or there is a city central committee with thousands of members in the Party there must be a celebration on November 7th this year.

The National Organization will mobilize all the speakers in the Party for November 7th, but even though a speaker is not available a celebration can be held. A concert or some other form of celebration must take its place. In order that every meeting may hear the messages our speakers and writers deliver the National Office will secure brief addresses from the leading comrades in the movement and if possible from the leaders of the Russian Revolution, which will be translated into various languages and sent to the branches to be read at the meetings on November 7th. Thus all those in attendance will hear the addresses of William Z. Foster, William F. Dunne, J. Louis Engdahl, Ludwig Lore, Robert Minor and others.

Prepare now, Comrades. Secure your hall. Make your arrangements.

HELP BUILD THE PARTY THRU THESE CELEBRATIONS

The most effective help we can give the Russian Workers and Peasants in their future struggles is thru building up our Party, the Party that has the same ideals and is fighting to reach the same goal which the Russia workers have won.

This year we will combine with the celebration of the victory of the Russian Workers a PARTY BUILDING CAMPAIGN. In order to make our Party stronger we must send out speakers and organizers. We must carry on a wide-spread campaign to reach the thousands of workers who will join the party if we can reach them and tell them about our program.

To carry thru such a campaign a "BUILD THE PARTY FUND" is being created. This fund will be used for literature and organizers to add new members to the Party—to build a stronger more powerful, better organized Party.

This is how the fund is to be created. We are having manufactured 25,000 flag pins to be used in the celebration of November 7th. These pins will consist of a red flag 1½ inch by 1 inch with a pin as flagstaff. The words "5th Anniversary Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic" printed on them in silver. These pins are not to be sold. At every celebration thruout the length and breadth of the land we will take a collection for the "BUILD THE PARTY FND". We will ask each person present at these celebrations to donate FIFTY CENTS to the "BUILD THE PARTY FUND". Each person making the contribution will receive the flag pin as a mark of appreciation.

Comrades, prepare now for the celebration, prepare now to make the "BUILD THE PARTY CAMPAIGN" a success. Samples of the pins and orderblank for the number required for your celebration will be sent you soon, with more information. Start doing your part of the work now. We are working.

Fraternally yours,
C. E. RUTHENBERG,
Executive Secretary.

Paivio Is Back in the Fight After More Than Three Years in Prison

Carl Paivio, a Finnish Comrade convicted November, 1919, has completed the minimum of a 3 to 10 year sentence and was released Monday, Oct. 2, from Great Meadows Prison, Comstock, N. Y.

More than two years of his prison term he served at Auburn Prison, an old, wornout jail, filthy and rotting, with vermin, roaches and rats. He served three years and one month in all.

The confinement to a few feet of space, to a dirty hole called a cell, the actual separation from everything one holds dear, the movement, friends, comrades; the agony of having a beastly specimen of the human race, in the form of a guard, in constant watch over you, all these things did not affect the spirit of Carl Paivio who has returned to join the militant faction of the Labor Movement and do his share of the work, determined more than ever to achieve Victory.

Paivio's crime was being a member of the editorial committee of "Class Struggle", a Finnish magazine. Gus Allonen, charged with the same offense against capitalism in this country will be released Oct. 14.

HELLER RESIGNS

It has been announced at the office of Comrade A. A. Heller, Representative of Supreme Council of National Economy, of Soviet Russia, that his request for release from this position has been granted. The office at 110 West 40 St., was closed Oct. 1st, and all inquiries about industrial and agricultural immigration to Soviet Russia should be addressed to the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, at Room 603, 110 West 40th St., New York City.

Comrade Heller received the following letter from the Department of Industrial Immigration of the S. C. N. E. under date of Sept. 4, 1922.

"Dear Comrade Heller: In answer to the letter of August 3, beg to advise you that we received all your telegrams and we requested you by telegram to retain your position. But since you insisted we agree to your request. We still hope you will continue to help us with your advice in the matter of Industrial Immigration.

"We have worked out a definite plan for the extension of this work. We shall in the future turn over all the work in connection with the organization of groups to the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, while the legal part of this work, namely the signing of permits, etc., will be turned over to Comrade Recht.

"We are applying new energy to this work and hope that after all the preliminary difficulties have been overcome, we shall be able to proceed on a much larger scale. We ask you again, Comrade Heller, to give us the benefit of your advice from time to time.

Comradely greetings,
O. Boldwin, Manager
Department of Industrial Immigration."

Y. W. L. Gets Invitation From Y. C. I. To Send Congress Delegate

An invitation has been accorded to an observer of the Young Workers' League of America by the Executive Committee of the Young Communist International to attend the coming world congress of the Y. C. I.

They express the hope that the Y. W. L. will be able to have some one present to represent it at the world congress, for, they say it would be of vital interest and benefit to the organized revolutionary youth of America.

The National Executive Committee of the Y. W. L., realizing the benefits that would accrue to their organization by having such observer at the congress of the Y. C. I. is striving to raise funds for this purpose.

Just recently several thousand "Observer Fund Blanks" were printed and distributed to the Y. W. L. branches thruout the country. Funds are already coming in. Some of the older comrades are aiding in raising the requisit amount for the financing of this trip.

[illegible] Take $10,000,000 Worth of Machinery With Them

Editor's Note: Here is the second article telling of the campaign of the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia to send 15,000 Russians back to their native land and locate them on large farms and agricultural estates. This article shows that the plan calls for the transportation of $10,000,000 worth of agricultural machinery to Soviet Russia. It is as follows:

Fifteen thousand Russians will constitute at least 200 agricultural groups or communes, each of which will be equipped with about $50,000 worth of modern tractors, other agricultural implements and accessories, and manned by capable organizers and agricultural experts.

The Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia is proceeding with immediate organization of these groups. Delegates from different parts of the country are arriving to make inquiries and arrangements.

As it is planned to accomplish the task of sending over all the 15,000 people by Spring of 1923, delegates representing each group or commune are to precede their constituents and will go to Soviet Russia sometime in the Fall or Winter to conclude the preliminaries and make preparations for the reception of their groups early in the Spring.

Thus every commune will be ready for the Spring 1923 ploughing season and the production of bread, so vital to a country hungry and famine-stricken.

Why Machinery Is Needed

This project as announced by the Central Bureau of the S. T. A. S. R. is a step in the right direction and is in line with the new constructive phase of relief that the workers of America and the Friends of Soviet Russia are undertaking for the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia.

The famine relief immediate aid—bread and charity—served to alleviate the hunger and famine conditions in the stricken provinces.

It did not, however, strike at the roots of famine and hunger in Russia, it cannot prevent a recurrence of like famine sufferings.

The consequences of the famine are without their parallel in the depletion, destruction and the chaos wrought to the productive forces of Soviet Russia.

During this period of acute hunger and starvation it is obvious that the vitality of the Russian workers and peasants has become undermined and the surviving population has been left in a weakened state unable to do the work usually performed by able-bodied and well-fed individuals.

Live Stock Is Slaughtered

Horses and oxen, their live stock were slaughtered and greatly reduced in number far below the requirements for normal agricultural production.

The farms, the primitive agricultural equipment, the crooked stick plough are worn out and in dilapidated condition. They present a picture of devastation.

Everywhere there is a great scarcity of the most commonplaces of agricultural and industrial machinery—too inadequate for the immediate needs of the communities.

Farms cannot operate because there are no implements, factories cannot work because there are no machines.

Russia needs tractors, ploughs, reapers, binder trucks, pumps, engines—modern large scale farming and industrial machinery.

These can eradicate the evils of hunger and famine, can rebuild the economic apparatus of the country, and develop the rich natural resources, the tremendous quantities of coal, oil, iron, gold and platinum.

What the capitalist governments refuse to do, the worker must do. These 15,000 returning Russians, equipped with the proper farming machinery mark the beginning of this new phase of constructive relief work for Soviet Russia. Tools and machinery will save and build up Soviet Russia.

The Latest—"The Sentinels"

Massachusetts is just now going thru the pangs of giving birth to another radical-baiting organization, this one to be known as "The Sentinels of the Republic."

It is ostensibly organized, according to announcement, "to combat radicalism and work for the preservation of the principles of the Federal Constitution."

We take it that it will work for the preservation of those constitutional principles that are the greatest aids to an untrammelled capitalism. It will raise the slogan of "state's rights," which was the principle that caused the United States Supreme Court to declare the anti-child labor law unconstitutional and to outlaw other legislation favorable to labor.

Having announced its intention of "fighting radicalism," this organization, will no doubt, forget all about the constitutional provisions defending the rights of free speech, free press and free assemblage. In this work it will be ably inspired by such labor haters as Nicholas Murray Butler, head of Columbia University, who enjoyed himself during the war by expelling dissenting students and professors, and Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, who tried to use his millions to buy the delegates to the republican presidential nominating convention in 1920.

The springing up of this organization, sponsored by a large list of capitalism's most prominent spokesmen, is surely an indication of the growing strength of radicalism among the workers of this country.

It is a reflection of the fear that is aroused in the seats of reaction by labor's increasing understanding of those revolutionary principles that it must invoke in the struggle for its own emancipation.

We welcome this organization to the arena of the class struggle in the United States. We greet them with that worn out but not discarded phrase, "the more the merrier."

Isadora Duncan Astonished

Isadora Duncan, the dancer, was due for two surprises when she tried to land, Sunday, in her native country, the United States of America.

She was astonished not only that she should be detained by the immigration officials, because she had been in Soviet Russia and taken unto herself a Russian husband, but she was also quite bewildered to learn that the American government had no sympathy with revolutions.

"I thought that our great country was started by a revolution in which my great-grandfather, General William Duncan, played a part," is the very naive way in which she puts it, which should be proof enough that she intends to mix in "No politics, no propaganda" as she claims, during her stay in this country.

If Miss Duncan had come as a Communist propagandist, as some of the immigration officials no doubt fear, she would have understood how easy it is for the government at Washington to look with favor upon the Revolutionary War, of 1776, in this country and still be opposed to the Russian Revolution of 1917.

That Miss Duncan has some of the spirit of the rebel is shown when she declares that, "They may keep my body from entering America, but they cannot keep out my spirit," and states that there are 20,000 young girls all over the country dancing the classic dances she created twenty years ago.

No doubt the immigration officials can discover disguised Bolshevist propaganda even in these classic dancing lessons, and see in them the death agonies of capitalism's last dance.

It is that fear alone that can explain the refusal to permit Miss Duncan to land. Perhaps the immigration officials will get back somewhere near normal in a few days and allow Miss Duncan to go ashore and keep her engagements under the flag that is not yet red, but still red, white and blue, pretty much blue in fact when such dangerous persons as Miss Duncan arrive from the other side with the free air of the First Workers' Republic still exhaling from their lungs.

THE LATEST.—As predicted above Isadora Duncan was found to be free of any taint of Communism and allowed to enter the U. S. A.

Gompers' Demonstrations

We have carefully perused the papers of Monday morning for reports of Gompers' anti-Daugherty demonstrations on Sunday, October 1st.

These demonstrations were the sop thrown to the workers who had raised a demand for a general strike to combat the open shop drive of the bosses.

The New York Call, we notice, publishes a column report, with a first-page lead, of a speech made by its editor at Harrisburg, Pa., in which the anti-Daugherty drive is not mentioned. It does carry a third-page report of a resolution adopted at a meeting in Philadelphia. The New York Times reports a meeting at Washington, D. C., addressed by Samuel Gompers, himself. That is all.

"There will be no back-down by organized labor in its fight for the impeachment of Mr. Daugherty," Gompers told his Washington audience.

Yet the call for the demonstrations was a back-down in itself. Great gatherings grow out of the developing militant mood of the masses. The executive council of the American Federation of Labor, meeting at Atlantic City, threw a wet blanket over the fighting spirits of the workers, and then expected them to enthuse over mass meetings addressed by conservatives.

Instead of the promised Madison Square Garden gathering in New York City, October 1, there will be a meeting Thursday, October 5, in Beethoven Hall, 210 Fifth St., a small auditorium, at which Gompers is announced as one of the speakers.

The most successful mass meeting on Sunday, October 1, was that addressed in Chicago by Senator William E. Borah and others demanding the release of the class war prisoners and the recognition of the Soviet republic.

The workers recognize that these are issues used in an effort to awaken them. Gompers' hysteria over the proposed impeachment of Daugherty is only an effort to draw a red herring across the path of labor's progress, to chloroform labor and prevent it from taking more radical action. And chloroformed workers do not make mass meetings.

[illegible] organ of the British Communist Party. But it [illegible] to appeal only for the $25 necessary to put the grave in condition and 30 shillings annually to keep it so.

We learn thru the Voice of Labor, Chicago, that that lovable heretic Bishop William Montgomery Brown, of Galion, Ohio, has already offered to bear the cost of restoring Marx's grave.

The Plebs League of Great Britain has pledged itself to attend to the upkeep of the grave.

But why stop here? We feel that something more fitting than a small headstone should mark the last resting placing of this greatest philosopher of the working class.

Capitalism takes care of its own. Paris boasts her Tomb of Napoleon. The Tomb of General Grant graces Riverside Drive in New York City. Recently an elaborate memorial to Abraham Lincoln was dedicated at Washington, D. C. Similarly everywhere else.

Why should not the workers honor the last resting places of those who have fought and sacrificed for them. Pilgrims from many lands, by the thousands, annually visit the grave of Marx. Those thousands should leave Marx's grave with a fitting impression upon their minds.

THE WORKER believes that the workers of all countries would like to join in erecting a fitting Marx Memorial. The Communists, the true desciples of this spokesman of labor, should take the lead in this effort, should direct it.

THE WORKER is willing to launch such an effort. But before taking any steps in this direction we would like to get the opinions of our readers. What are your wishes in this matter? What do you think about it? What do you think should be done? We want to hear from you. Write your opinions to The Editor, THE WORKER, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Can't Delay the Fatal Hour

The Peace Treaties of the year 1919 prove to be of short durability. The decisions of the Berlin Congress of 1815, laid down the lines of European politics and economy for at least the life of one generation.

The peace decisions of 1648 which concluded the Thirty Years War in Europe held good for a century. The Peace of 1871 exercised its effects for at least half a century. The Treaties of 1919 were surrounded with a solemnity the like of which is to be sought.

The era of national division was finally brought to a close, and the new era of the League of Nations was to lead humanity to higher aims.

The group of victors who dictated the peace, the Entente plus America, was the mightiest group of powers in world history. They were to see to it that the treaties remained unbroken.

And what was to be seen on the opposite side? Some political heaps of misery, as Ebert-Germany, German-Austria, the Sultan's Government, etc., and then, a vague something.—Soviet Russia.

What has now become of the promises of 1919? A collapse along the whole line. The powerful condition of the victors is wrecked. America has broken away from the Entente. And within the Entente itself, the only point of agreement is that each agrees to differ.

No serious statesman believes any more in the Treaties of 1919. The Treaty of Versailles has become a piece of folly, and the Peace of Sèvres lies shattered at the feet of its signatories. The remaining treaties will share the same fate.

What is the explanation of the difference between the fate which has befallen the Treaties of 1919 as compared with the durability of the decisions of 1815 and 1871?

The earlier Peace Congresses were meetings of growing capitalist nations. The Treaties of 1815 and 1871 marked the stages in which capitalist society progressed.

So long as the products of diplomacy remained in harmony with the economic growth of the ruling class, they were durable. The Treaties of 1919, on the other hand, were an attempt to heal by artificial prescriptions the sickness of world capitalism. As the sickness is incurable the medicaments are of no avail.

The heroes of 1919, the mournful Professor Wilson, the narrow minded Clemenceau and the Parliamentary weather-cock Lloyd George, are not in a position to delay the fatal hour of capitalist society.

The Drive for Defense

As this issue of THE WORKER reaches its readers, there should be in the hands of each subscriber a letter from the Labor Defense Council containing a subscription list for the Defense Fund in the Michigan red cases.

We cannot too strongly urge our readers to rally 100 per cent to the support of the Labor Defense Council.

This organization, only a few weeks old, has already begun making its force felt. Local Labor Defense Councils are springing spontaneously in every part of the country.

THE WORKER urges its readers to support these defense conferences wherever organized and to take the initiative in towns where no local defense council has been started.

Naturally, in order to carry on the legal defense of the 29 comrades who are to be tried in Michigan and to conduct the necessary widespread publicity campaign the Labor Defense Council must have a large campaign fund.

The militants in the labor movement are the ones who can secure this fund, both by giving money themselves and urging others to give. We believe that the Michigan red raids' fund drive should be the most important ever conducted in the American labor movement.

Union labor has shown by the article in the "New Majority," published in THE WORKER, issue of Sept. 23rd; by the resolutions adopted by the Chicago Federation of Labor, by the Minneapolis Trades and Labor Council and by the Michigan State Federation of Labor that it understands these raids are not an attack on a few isolated revolutionists, but are a direct onslought on the entire trade union movement.

The record of the labor activities of the defendants and their high stand in the labor movement, makes quite evident that they are being tried because they are militant labor leaders and as such are dangerous to the employing class. The Mooney case was of exactly the same nature. All that is changed is the time, the place and the victims.

One element that enters into the affair is profoundly different. The Mooney case was directed at organized labor in San Francisco, the Michigan red raid is directed at the entire American labor movement and as such is of far greater importance.

The Mooney case has been an issue in America for six years. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were raised to keep Mooney from the gallows and to secure his release. Thousands of dollars are yet to be raised.

If the Michigan case is to be put before the American workers, the defense and the publicity must be conducted on a large scale.

The more quickly the American working class swings into action, the more dramatically will the forces of organized labor be thrown into the struggle on behalf of the Michigan victims.

We call our readers to action! Action immediately and generously! We know your spirit! We know you will respond!

[illegible] Red Russia

[illegible] the Worker's Republic [illegible] military service. All male [illegible] subject to call.

It is stated that the first class, under the new decree,—boys reaching 20 on January 1st—will be called to the colors some time next year.

The big fact about these first red conscripts is that they have lived thru the first five years of the Bolshevik revolution that took place when they were but 15 years of age. During the most formative period of their lives, when new ideas implant themselves most deeply upon youthful minds, these boys have seen world imperialism and the overthrown czardom attempting to smash the Soviet Regime.

These boys have passed thru the fire. With the famine conquered and reconstruction in industry and agriculture becoming daily more effective, these boys will realize the great future that the struggle for Communism, and its realization, holds forth for them.

With an army of a million such boys at its right hand, the Soviet Regime will have nothing more to fear from imperialist intervention. Diplomats in all capitalist countries will adopt the slogan of "Watch Your Step!" on the Russian question. The armies of Finland, Latvia, Poland, Esthonia, Roumania, and other countries that have been used as jumping off places for attacks on Red Russia, will be kept more in leash.

Under the czardom every soldier was a military slave; under Soviet Rule he is a free and equal defender of the rule of the workers and peasants. Under the czardom the vast majority of soldiers were illiterate, unable to read and write. Under Soviet Rule the Red Army, under Leon Trotzky, has become 100 per cent literate. Every soldier knows how to read and write. He knows why he is a soldier, why he must fight if he is called upon to do so, with the result that discipline becomes a voluntary matter.

The world social revolution is winning the support of a mighty factor for its success in the training of one million Communist youngsters in Soviet Russia each year, resulting gradually in the maintenance of all Russia's vast man power as trained reservists for the defense of the Workers, Peasants and Soldiers' Republic they have established.

Communists are not champions of conscription. They would much prefer getting along without standing armies. But Soviet Rule has been forced into adopting conscription by the sabre rattling diplomats of capitalism at Genoa and The Hague, where the question of disarmament was ruled out of the discussion.

If capitalism refuses to disarm, Soviet Rule must be prepared to defend itself. Soviet Rule will, because it must, maintain its Red Armies until disappearing capitalism is no longer able, anywhere upon the face of the earth, to offer effective resistance to the onrushing forces of Communism.

We hail the red conscripts of the Soviet Republic. May they grow in numbers and in ability to struggle for the establishment of the new Communist world upon the ashes of capitalism.

The kept press of this country is ready to beat the toms-toms of war immediately the signal is given. It has more war correspondents at Constantinople than the press of any other country.

Picking Candidates for the Voters

The New York political situation, as it confronts the voters preliminary to the November elections, is typical of that thruout the nation.

Candidates have been hand-picked for the voters that still choose to follow the old political parties, where reaction is in the saddle.

"Charlie" Murphy, chief of Tammany Hall, selects "Al" Smith as the democratic candidate for governor, and the delegates approve, automatically, while William Randolph Hearst is left to nurse his private ambitions in solitude.

Not to be outdone by the old parties we find that the bosses of the Farmer-Labor Party and the "Socialist" Party have developed an artificial "united front" and have Edward F. Cassidy as their American Labor Party candidate on a platform of pink radicalism, guaranteed to be absolutely harmless.

The money power is not worried whether Miller or Smith is elected, and the two old parties fear the combination labor reform party so little that they refuse to throw off their masks and fuse in those districts where labor has previously shown some political strength.

The American Labor Party showed the hypocricy of its united front pretensions when it rejected the Workers Party, and thus continued the political division of the workers. For this the "Socialist" bosses are directly responsible, in this as in many other states.

Confronted with this condition the Workers Party was compelled to nominate its own candidate, William F. Dunne, and put forward its own platform. Since his nomination Dunne has been arrested by the anti-red Burns-Daugherty forces of the Department of Justice. His crime is espousing a revolutionary labor program. He spent several weeks in a jail at St. Joseph, Mich., before being released on bail. With others he is now awaiting trial.

This political situation in New York State should make it as clear as day to the workers where their support should go.

The republican and democratic parties are the political organizations of the present ruling class. The labor reform parties are tolerated by the exploiters now in power. Only the Workers Party and its candidates are hated and feared by the political and industrial czars.

The profiteers see in the Communist principles espoused by the Workers Party the threat to their own existence, the approach of their own day of doom.

This fact, so apparent to any worker who thinks, must and will awaken new masses of unthinking workers this year as never before.

Workers! Realize the political situation this year! You will then determine that your interests demand your support of the Workers Party and its candidates. Once convinced help spread that determination to others.

An anonymous author in the Berlin Staatsbuerger-Zeitung, a conservative monarchist paper, claims that the late kaiser, if born a worker, would have been an ordinary tramp. He claims that the late German kaiser suffered from a form of dementia known as psychopathia vagans. This accounts for the late Kaiser Bill spreading so much propaganda about his being the earthly representative of God on high. He had to create the feeling that he was different from the average man. Now that he has been unmasked, "Bill" Hohenzollern might win back his royal dignity by becoming "King of the Hoboes of Holland." There is only one obstacle. The hoboes might object.

Jacob Panken, the "only Socialist judge in New York City," is back from a four-month's tour of Europe telling us that the German workers, thru a general strike, will kick a Bavarian king off his throne in November. But if the Bavarian workers try to establish a Soviet Republic on the heels of such a victory, the "Socialist" president at Berlin will send his army to drown it in blood. Panken didn't tell us that in giving out his only half-witted interview.

(Special to The Worker and the Federated Press)

DETROIT.—Third degree methods used by federal operatives on the labor men arrested in the Michigan red raid on the night of August 21st are set forth in an affidavit sworn to by Cyril Lambkin, Detroit, one of those maltreated in the county jail at St. Joseph and since released on $10,000 bail. The affidavit, to be forwarded to Gov. Groesbeck with a demand for investigation of jail conditions and practices in Berrien county reads in part:

"I, Cyril Lambkin, being first duly sworn, depose and say as follows: "I am a citizen of the United States, and have been a resident of the state of Michigan for nearly ten years. I am a public accountant by profession.

"On the 22nd day of August, 1922, at Bridgman, Mich., I was arrested by a group of men led by one whose name I subsequently ascertained to be Spolansky.

(Spolansky is a department of justice stool pigeon who has passed himself off at various times as a member of the Socialist and other radical parties.)

"The following day, Aug. 23, while, confined in Berrien County jail, Spolansky personally called me downstairs to the sheriff's office in the rear on the ground floor. While passing thru a doorway, before a single question was asked of me, I was struck a blow on the right hip by some one whose name I do not know. The first night it pained so that I was unable to sleep. After this blow was struck and while in pain and apprehension, I was pushed into an adjoining room and ordered by Spolansky to take off my glasses.

"I found myself alone among five or six federal agents or deputies who immediately began firing questions at me. I answered all formal questions, but in view of the treatment I had already received, I stated that I must decline to answer any other questions except in the presence of an attorney. I was thereupon slapped in the face by one whom I believe to be Mr. Wolf, and flung about 10 feet clear into the next room, where I landed prostrate on the floor. Then I was ordered to rise. I found myself unable to do so. Mr. Wolf then pulled me by my hair, attempting in this manner to raise me from the floor.

"When I was again upon my feet Mr. Spolansky gratuitously informed me that this was really no beating at all, but that soon a certain Sergt. McDonough would get a hold of me and I would then know what it meant to be really beaten. He also advised me to remember that I was not in Detroit, but in a farm county and that a nice farmer jury would be fixed which would positively convict me. He said that I would be sent up for five years. I was then sent back to the cell. At no time did I offer any resistance."

Lambkin also swears that he could not get his traveling bag when released on bail, the deputy sheriff saying that the federal agent would have to be seen, although the men arrested are being held under state criminal syndicalism charges.

Storm Brews on Railroads After Strike

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE
(Special to the Worker.)

CHICAGO.—It is impossible to say what "The Railroaders' Next Step" will be, but if the comments and statements made by the well-informed officials and members of local unions of railway workers here in Chicago are any guide, the railroaders' next step will be a monster movement of minor officials and rank and file in protest against the separate settlement engineered by Bert Jewell, head of the railway employees department of the American Federation of Labor, and presidents of International unions.

It will be remembered that at the historic meeting of system chairmen and other officials held in Chicago where the Jewell plan of a separate settlement, was first broached, tremendous sentiment developed against any such move, and it was only after a series of prolonged and exciting sessions that the separate settlement was finally accepted by a majority vote of the delegates present.

In conversations that I have had with many railroaders here in Chicago, who are active in their local union, the claim is made by all that the Jewell plan of a separate settlement, which only a handful of railway managers had agreed to, was put across in the conference of system chairmen by the use of methods which are now described as "underhanded."

It is said that a favorable vote was procured only after Jewell and other officials had taken most of the system chairmen aside and assured them, one by one, that their particular road had agreed to the settlement, under pledge of secrecy.

Consequently the charge is now openly made that by these fraudulent representations, favorable vote was secured from system chairmen who were bitterly opposed to a separate settlement embracing less than a majority of all principal railway lines.

The demoralization caused in the ranks of the strikers by this separate settlement with a few roads, the lack of any concrete gains in the settlement, making it hard to hold the men on lines that have not settled, has created a tempest in the ranks of the duespaying members that Jewell and the other officials will find it hard to weather.

The disastrous consequences of divided organizations and an ignorant and cowardly leadership were never more clearly seen. It is not hard to find railwaymen who say that such leadership is more of a menace to the railway workers than all the Daugherty injunctions.

The sentiment and the demand for amalgamation was never stronger than today, when for the first time the railway men realize what division means against the united front of the employing class.

The effects of this sentiment and the opinion of the rank and file were clearly shown at the convention of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way men now being held in Detroit, for the amalgamation resolution carried by a four to one vote despite all efforts of the reactionary element.

After the vote was taken, the disgruntled and discredited Grable, president of the organization, who ordered his men to stay at work despite a 97 per cent vote for a strike, made the statement that the vote was proof "that Foster was running the organization."

William Z. Foster and the Trade Union Educational League have done splendid work in pointing out defects of existing labor organizations and suggesting the obvious remedy of industrial unionism, but it is the cold facts of the economic and political situation, the wholesale outlawing of union activities, the cowardice and lack of foresight of the officialdom, the feeling that the only salvation for the workers is a solid front of the working class against the capitalist class that is really responsible for the trend towards solidarity that is running like a red thread thru all working class organization today.

The militant coal miners of District 5 (Western Pennsylvania), United Mine Workers of America, have started a campaign with a definite platform and a full list of candidates, for the stated purposes of cleaning up the district and making it "what it should be—the greatest group of coal miners in the United States."

The platform which was unanimously adopted at a conference of the Pittsburgh Progressive Miners' Group, Sept. 24, 1922, opposes dual unionism, attacks the "much-vaunted labor statesmanship" of the administration of the international union under the presidency of John L. Lewis, raises the slogan of "National Agreements Only," urges an alliance between the miners and railroad workers, demands the reinstatement of the Kansas miners, calls for an aggressive organization campaign and declares for immediate relief for the miners' families in the Connollsville Coke Region.

The Progressive Miners' Group of District 5, U. M. W. A., flatly opposes dual unionism and insists that all honest miners must stay in the organization and work together to clean up the district and make it what it should be—the greatest group of coal miners in the United States.

To this end we call upon the miners of District 5 to rally to the support of the group which has had the courage to launch a real campaign to rid the district of the reactionary leadership whose policies have brought disgrace and scandal on District 5 and to inaugurate a progressive program so that we may become a real fighting organization for the benefit of the men who dig coal.

We announce a definite national and district program which we

CHICAGO.—Flaying the "short-sighted" enforcement against William Bross Lloyd and 17 other former Communist Labor Party members of the Illinois criminal syndicalism act, State Supreme Justice Orrin Carter, in his minority opinion, declared that "the people cannot fail to believe that they are deprived of rights and will be certain to become discontented.

"Had this law been in force parts of Lincoln's first inaugural address could have been suppressed from publication, the Declaration of Independence could be held seditious under the provisions of this law and forbidden to be read publicly; the second president of this nation could have been prosecuted criminally under this law when he asserted the right of a nation to kill a tyrant in cases of necessity and President Jefferson would have been liable when he said: 'I hold a little rebellion now and then is a good thing, and as necessary in the political world as storms in the physical.'"

Lloyd and his co-defendants, who face prison terms for membership in the now defunct party and for opinions and beliefs held by them,

EDITOR'S NOTE.—We are this week publishing all the facts exposing the attempt of the railroad owners and their political hirelings to use the Michigan Central train wreck at Gary, Ind., as an excuse for another frame-up against organized labor. This time William Z. Foster and other officials of the Trade Union Educational League, were to be the victims, even as Mooney and Billings had been sent to prison in California, and Sacco and Vanzetti, in Massachusetts. Here are the facts in the frame-up that failed.

By MORITZ J. LOEB
Secretary, Labor Defence Council.
Written especially for the Labor Herald (October) and released for simultaneous publication in The Worker

On Sunday morning, August 20, a Michigan Central train was wrecked at Gary and two men lost their lives. All signs indicate that the smashup was caused by faulty equipment, arising out of the shopmen's strike.

But it would never suit the company's interests to allow the fact to be made known. The thing had to be covered up, and quickly.

Hence, immediately the wreck was metamorphosed into the result of a diabolical plot of the strikers and their friends, and the police started out to "get" some one for it.

As usual with them, the question of guilt or innocence was a minor issue. The main thing was to land some one at once, regardless of the methods used or the frame-up necessary.

The first move was made that same night, when the office of the Trade Union Educational League was broken open and robbed, in an attempt to frame-up on Foster.

But this was such a palpable fraud that, realizing it could not get by, the police dropped it, altho not before the newspapers had broadcasted the most libelous charges. New stories and new arrests were demanded by the interests of the railroad company, in order to keep the public mind properly occupied.

They were quickly forthcoming in the ensnarement and arrest of Joseph Pop[illegible], Charles Uselius, John Petrovsky, James Pavletich, and Alvenio Alessio upon the accusation of the latter, an acknowledged stool pigeon. The world was treated to the most lurid stories of union plots, confessions, and all the trimmings of the typical frame-up.

The Police Get "Confessions"

In the long and brutal history of the frame-up in America, there is none more sickeningly bestial than the case of Popovitch, Uselius, and Petrovsky.

The so-called confessions came as the result of four days of torture, the nature of which can only be hinted at.

When Attorney Paul Glaser, of Gary, took charge of their defense, he found these three men in a serious condition.

Doctors were called in to examine them, including Dr. H. M. Hosmer, C. W. Yarrington, Ira Miltimore, and Olga Feinberg, all well known and reputable physicians. Petrovsky's back and hips were a mass of bruises, his legs beaten, hands bruised, shoulder injured, the back of his skull battered, and an eye blackened.

Uselius had been tortured in an unnameable fashion, and in addition he was injured internally, and found bleeding from the ears.

Popovitch was a mass of contusions, especially over the head and face.

All had been beaten by rubber pipes, in addition to the special "civilized" tortures, a description of which is prohibited by the postal laws against obscenity. Pavletich had also been beaten, but before the examination was released by the police.

[illegible] Cleveland Tailors [illegible] Raid Victims

Widespread interest and concern aroused in the labor movement by the organization of the Labor Defense Council to defend Wm. Z. Foster, Earl Browder, C. E. Ruthenberg, Wm. F. Dunne, Caleb Harrison, and other victims of the Michigan Red Raids is evidenced by the resolutions of protest against these persecutions that are being adopted by various organized labor bodies.

The latest protest and promise of support of the Labor Defense Council has come from Local Union 162, Journeymen Tailors Union of America, Cleveland, Ohio.

It reads as follows:

"Whereas, The big strikes that took place last summer as a result of the employers open shop drive the trade unions come thru sadly shaken but practically intact. The employers and their allies, including the Administration at Washington, failed to break the backbone of the labor movement, but they have arrested hundreds of militant workers charged with crimes of violence growing out of disorders instigated by the employers' and their henchmen, and

"Whereas, The Department of Justice at Washington in an effort to draw attention from the outrageous manner that Department was used against the workers and in behalf of the railroad and mine barons has repeated the nefarious raids of the forgotten Mitchell E. Palmer and is now attempting to railroad twenty-two men to jail in Michigan, and

"Whereas, These twenty-two men arrested on the charge of violating the Criminal Syndicalist Law of Michigan have committed no other crime than working to further strengthen the labor movement thru amalgamation of the existing craft unions, therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Journeymen Tailors Union, Local 162, of Cleveland, Ohio, in meeting assembled hereby heartily endorses the Labor Defense Council recently formed in Chicago to raise funds to legally defend all workers arrested as a result of their activity in behalf of organized labor, and be it further

"Resolved, That we will assist in the formation of a Labor Defense Council in Cleveland, and recommend that our international Officers urge our Brother Tailors in all other locals of our International to do likewise, and that said Resolution be forwarded to our National Office for publication in our official journal, "The Tailor."

"Respectfully submitted
"By Local 162 J. T. U. of A.
Cleveland, O.
H. W. Bone, Chairman
Max I. Silinsky, Secretary

The Resolution adopted by the Milwaukee Federated Trades Council reads:

"Whereas, During the past few months Wm. Z. Foster and others associated with him in the Trade Union Educational League, have had to suffer from unlawful and brutal persecution and vandalism at the hands of State cossacks, police authorities, private detectives and the subsidized press, and

"Whereas, Brother Foster is now held for trial in Michigan on trumped up charges, and

"Whereas, Brother Foster has neither by act or word violated any law of the land and these acts of official terrorism are evidently designed for the purpose of discouraging him and those associated with him from continuing their work in a perfectly legitimate educational movement, and

"Whereas, The law breaking acts of these so-called officers of the law make a mockery of the Constitution and of law and go far to prove the assertions so often made recently, that many of these officers are more concerned with serving the special interests of Big Business than they are with the enforcing of law, and

"Whereas, If this condition is allowed to continue, it will soon mean the brutal and forcible suppression of any and all opinions which do not happen to coincide with those held by the exploiters and their minions, therefore, be it

"Resolved, The Milwaukee Federated Trades Council protests against these persecutions and that it urges all friends of fair play to come to the assistance of Brother Foster, morally as well as financially, so that he may properly defend himself against the trumped up charges, and that he may free himself and again be in a position to combat these sinister forces effectively."

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER: KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

Eugene V. Debs has decided that his place "in the future as in the past is in the Socialist Party," a party that is not "what I should like to see it."

Debs' statement would have had some interest had it been issued on the day they took him to prison in April, 1919, when the divisions in the Socialist Party were coming to the surface.

The statement has little interest now except to show that Debs still fails to realize that labor has been moving forward during the past three years. Debs cannot understand why the workers are organizing new battle lines to offer a more effective front to the enemy.

Debs will begin to make up for the last three years when he gets out over the country and develops contact with the workers.

He will then come to the same conclusion that so many tens of thousands, once members of the Socialist Party, have reached at varying times during the past three years, that the Socialist Party cannot be made a revolutionary working class party.

It is said of Serrati, the Italian Socialist, that he admitted making the mistake of his life when he broke with the Communist International. Serrati is now trying to mend that mistake by bringing what he can of the Italian Socialist Party into the International of the Social Revolution.

Debs is still at the parting of the ways. The statement he has just issued shows he is turning to the right instead of to the left. Whether he follows that road remains to be seen.

Debs' statement lacks the ring of the declaration he made when accepting the candidacy for president in 1920. At that time he threw it into the teeth of the notification committee that:

"I have always been a radical, never more so than now. I have never feared becoming too radical. I do fear becoming too conservative!"

We wonder at times, in reading what Debs has to say now whether that fear of becoming conservative has left him.

Debs makes an error, right at the beginning of his statement, by declaring that the Socialist Party was intact up to the Convention of September, 1919. Is he so unfamiliar with the history of the party that year as not to know that the National Executive Committee, with its Oneals, Stedmans and Goebels, had already smashed the party months before thru the expulsion of more than half the party membership. This happened in the weeks following Debs going to prison in April. If this is a sample of Debs' clearness on party developments during the past three years then some of his statements become comprehensible.

Debs says he has no heart for factional warfare and he will not engage in it. That has been Debs's weakness from the beginning in the revolutionary movement. He has made the speeches and written the articles, giving the party a tinge of red, while the Bergers and the Hillquits have controlled the party, written its programs and manifestoes and directed the machinery.

So the Bergers and the Hillquits who sneer at Moscow and maliciously attack the Soviet Government will permit Debs to express his sympathy for the Russian Revolution while he is still a member of their church if he will refrain from interfering with the party machinery and stick to his speech-making and article-writing. Berger Hillquit and Co. have no use for Debs except to use him. And they have been doing that to the limit during the past three years.

It is of course a truism to say that all organizations make mistakes. But that is no reason for joining one organization and not another. The customary thing to do is to investigate the fundamental principles upon which these organizations stand. The "Socialist" Party has deserted all fundamental "Socialist" principles, or whatever fundamentals it professed. The Communist movement in this as in other countries is building solidly on bedrock fundamentals. There is the difference that Debs will not attempt to explain away.

Debs will learn in time that it is impossible to make the Socialist Party revolutionary because it is running in the other direction.

It is quite naive of him to say that the Communist movement is seeking to build a revolutionary party of the same material, the same ultimate aims, the same Comrades, that are at the disposal of the Socialist Party, by "merely adopting another name and marching under another banner."

The "Socialist" Party today is welcome to what membership it has, willing to march under its yellow standards. This is not the same membership, not the same material that has enlisted in the Communist movement these past three years. And if Debs can see no difference between the ultimate aims of Soviet Rule in Russia, and Ebert-Socialist Rule in Germany, then arguments and explanations are hopeless.

"Drive out the Communists!" was the slogan of the "Socialist" Party officialdom for two years, from the expulsions in 1919, to the Detroit Convention, in June 1921, showing at least that the Bergers and the Hillquits knew that all the party members were not cast in the same mould. Debs will learn.

Debs seems to think that the building up of another party under another name as "the true political expression of the class struggle" would be followed by another "melancholy failure," such as is now charged against the Socialist Party.

If such a philosophy of despair had been adopted by our Russian comrades, there would never have been a Bolshevik revolution and no Russian Soviet Republic. Social and economic change presupposed new organisms, and it ill-becomes Debs to lament the passing of the 25-year-old Socialist Party, this Debs who would wipe out all craft unions, for instance, and establish huge industrial unions in their place.

The Communist International was organized to write "Victory" where the Second "Socialist" International wrote "Failure" in 1914, and the same difference is the chasm that separates Communist from "Socialist" organizations in all countries. It isn't a matter of sentiment. It is a question of facing the facts of the working class struggle for power.

We warn Debs, if he intends to remain in the "Socialist" Party, not to have any kindly feelings of comradeship for the members of the Workers Party, or he may have a trial for heresy on his hands.

Debs has always made a rallying cry of "industrial unionism." It was 15 years ago, in 1907, when Debs had less respect for the skilled forms of organization that he helped organize the Industrial Workers of the World.

Now he pleads to the "Socialist" Party to "stand staunchly for the industrial organization of the workers." Well, where does the "Socialist" Party stand? The "Socialist" spokesman today in the trade union movement is Benjamin Schlesinger president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, president of the Jewish Daily Forward Association and most ardent supporter of the New York Call.

In the last convention of his union Schlesinger fought the drive of Workers Party members for amalgamation of all the needle trades. He won with his "Socialist" support.

The big drive for industrial unionism in this country is being made by the Trade Union Educational League. The "Socialist" press gives it no support.

Debs will find that the "Socialist" Party has drifted so close to the craft loving reactionary officialdom of American Labor that it will give no support to any propaganda for industrial unionism nor support any militant action among the workers.

While Debs wrote that the question of international affiliation should not be decided at this time, Hillquit and Panken and Block were deciding it for him by arranging for the return of the "Socialist" Party to the Second International. In this respect Debs is still speaking in the forgot[illegible] as it is the "Socialist" Party in this country at the present time. Debs may write and ask his former fellow-convict, Joseph Coldwell, how the "Socialists", under instructions from their national executive committee bolted the "United Front" in Rhode Island. He cannot be ignorant of the role played by the "Socialist" Party in fighting admission of the Workers Party to united action in New York City. The kind of united front the present "Socialist" leadership favors is the kind offered by Wall Street's republican party in Wisconsin, that the Bergers and Hillquits are quick to grab and approve. At least we have heard no objections from Hillquit.

Debs says he has reserved for the last the "infinitely important question of the Russian Revolution", to which I have given my enthusiastic allegiance from its inception and to which I now pledge my unqualified support".

Of course, the best and practically the only support that Debs can give the Russian Revolution is to get out of the Socialist Party, join the Workers Party and take his place in the Communist movement in this country.

We read from the pen of Debs that, "I have said that Lenin as the incarnation of the Russian revolution is the greatest thing that came out of the world war and that is still my positive conviction".

And then we turn to the issue of "Justice", official organ, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, Oct. 6, page 7, where appears an interview with Pres. Schlesinger upon his return from England where he went as fraternal delegate of the American Federation of Labor to the British Trade Union Congress. The "Socialist", Schlesinger, bought that delegateship by supporting Gompers and attacking Soviet Russia at the Cincinnati Convention of the A. F. of L. last June. Now he says

"As regards Gompers, he is, it seems to me, appreciated more in England than in America. He is being spoken of there, as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, labor leader in the world."

No doubt when Debs and Schlesinger meet, as they will, Schlesinger will be ready with the same Judas' kiss that he gave Lenin in Moscow, when he won him his way into the Soviet Republic. The tragedy will consist in Debs accepting it without revulsion shaking his every fibre. The "Socialist" Schlesinger has chosen as between Lenin and Gompers. Debs must still make his break a clean one.

Debs says, "The Soviet Government is the beginning of the self-government of the people thruout the world"

Schlesinger says in the words of Gompers and they have the "Amen!" of the bosses of the "Socialist" Party "I spoke to the most prominent leaders of the English labor movement. None of them has, of course, a good word to say about Communism or Bolshevism and they speak of the Russian Government (the Soviet Government) with scorn, but they are all of the opinion that the best way to get rid of the clique of usurpers and grafters which rules and terrorizes Russia today is to recognize it and open up Russia to the whole world"

Debs will find the Socialist Party no bed of roses. When he gets good and tired of the thorn pricks of the betrayers of Socialism, the revolutionary struggle of the workers organized into the Communist movement will still be beckoning to him.

By WILLIAM F. [illegible]

Sir Phillip Gibbs has abandoned the [illegible] and holy position he took in his two books—"Now It Can Be Told" and "More That Can Be Told"—written when the war [illegible] subsided.

In an article, published in the Chicago Daily News, October 7, this one time crusader against war calls upon all Christian peoples to come to the assistance of the British Empire [illegible] this champion of civilization to stem the rising tide of Eastern [illegible].

For studied and consummate hypocrisy [illegible] seeking to equal this article has been seen since the piping times of the world war when the liar came into his own.

For instance; Sir Phillip says that "Western ideas and desires cannot be maintained in Palestine, Egypt and India except by authority ultimately backed by armed force acting as police." Then we come to the meat in the cocoanut as follows:

It is upon Great Britain, above all, that the burden of authority falls most heavily, because of her immense guardianship of the east. It is not an exaggeration to say that the British are the main bulwark of the world against the rising tide of color menacing the white races. It is certain, too, that for trade interests and economic life England stands for a peaceful reorganization and settlement of Europe, and is an arbitrator between the defeated peoples of the great war and their victors, with little chance to acquire much love on either side.

Great Britain's "immense guardianship of the east" is a neat Gibbsianism for the blood and terror with which Britain has enforced her rule over conquered territories and subject peoples.

Little things like the Amritsar massacre and the death of millions thru preventable famine are of course only regrettable incidents inseparable from the sacrifices necessary for a great nation which takes up the burden of saving other nations from themselves with the salvation bringing in a net profit.

As for the last sentence of the quotation above in which the British Empire is pictured as the saviour of the oppressed peoples of Europe we will let the answer be made by the miasmatic vapors arising from the territories where the workers have been slaughtered and their protests drowned in blood spilled by British cannon, British rifles and British bayonets. There has not been a single instance of bloodshed in Europe beginning with the Irish murderfest, continuing with the dozens of wars upon the suffering Russian people and ending with the Greek debacle that British money has not financed and British imperialists watched with interest proportionate to the sum invested.

There is, however, a plaintive as well as a hypocritical note in the plea made by Sir Phillip. Speaking of the possibilities raised by the unexpected victory of the Turkish Nationalists he says:

If this is only the beginning of extensive military operations costing much blood as well as money, the British peoples may be asked to bear impossible burdens and may decide that it is better to shelve some of their responsibilities. What will happen then to Europe and to white civilization? It is the British people who guaranteed the German banks so that Belgium should get her reparations payments and Germany be saved from a financial breakdown which would have ruined France. Must Great Britain always take these risks alone?

It can be said in answer to this pitiful wail that there is an alternative for the British imperialists. They can abandon their policy of conquest in the East or the Near East. If they do not they will stand alone. They can no longer rally their colonials for imperialistic adventures and the workers at home are strangely cold when asked to die for the empire.

The danger to Christian civilization, the possibility of its passing forever raises no tremors along the spine of the Europeans who have but to view their own shattered nations bearing mute testimony to the handiwork of the rulers of the Christian world. A civilization whose crowning achievement is four and one-half years of war, a toll of millions slaughtered and a continent left in misery makes but a weak appeal to its victims of all nationalities, colors and creeds. The question of further bloodshed to save such a civilization is being answered in the negative by those to whom such as Sir Phillip appeals.

The British Empire as well as other great exploiting combinations rests on the bayonets held in the hands of those who are exploited. When they refuse, as the British people themselves are refusing today, to be sacrificed in the interests of their rulers the end of empire is in sight and no specious pleas of those who like Sir Phillip fight with their pens alone, can prevent the disintegration of a system which has dug its own grave.

Debs Urges that Labor Defense Council Widen Plans and Activities

CHICAGO.—Eugene V. Debs, convalescing at Elmhurst Sanitarium near this city, has thrown himself whole-heartedly into the work of the labor defense council, organized to defend victims of the Michigan Red Raids. In a letter to Moritz Loeb secretary of the Labor Defense Council, enclosing a five dollar check for the defense he says

"Elmhurst Ill. Oct 4 1922

"Dear Comrade Loeb Your circular letter of the 3rd with enclosures is at hand and the report of the Labor Defense Council has my entire approval. I cannot help much in my present situation, but I am none the less interested in all that is done in behalf of the class war prisoners or all others who are under arrest or indictment for serving the working class.

"I wish to suggest to the Council that its plans and activities be so broadened as to embrace Mooney and Billings, Sacco and Vanzetti as well as all prisoners of opinion including those in California and Texas and all those in Michigan, New York and other states indicted under the outrageous "criminal syndicalism" gag act. In a way, the Labor Defense Council should pledge itself to defend every man and woman in prison or under arrest or indictment or out on bail for fighting for the working class, regardless of its affiliation or non-affiliation, and not to cease its labors until the last of them has been liberated and the infamous laws under which they have been prosecuted are wiped out of existance. You are at liberty to publish this letter if the Council so desires. You will find my check for $5 enclosed.

"Yours fraternally,
"Eugene V. Debs"

O'Fallon, Ill., Miners Help

The coal miners of O'Fallon, Ill., report that Local No. 705, United Mine Workers, has sent $100 for the relief of the Fayette County, Pa., coal miners. They have also levied a 25 cent assessment.

"This is to be continued until those miners in Pennsylvania have whipped their bosses and the strike is won," writes our correspondent. "We have 600 members in our local.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER: KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

This Week!

"Let not thine left hand know what thine right hand doeth," is as close as we can get to a certain biblical saying, that we believe applies to The New York Call.

We say this after reading The Call's report of the dinner tendered Captain Paxton Hibbon upon his return from Soviet Rusia. The Call quotes Hibbon as saying that:

"I want to say one word about such infamous attacks on honest relief work as was made here last spring by the New York Times. People who thus attack relief organizations on political grounds cause the death of thousands of innocent people by withholding from them help that would let them live.

"The wildest revolutionary bomb thrower of nihilist days was a piker in wholesale slaughter beside these lunatics of self-styled patriotism to whom the deaths of a thousand little children are nothing if they can but blacken the character of some one who does not agree with them."

The only effective relief work by a working class organization in this country has been carried on by the Friends of Soviet Russia.

It seems that in publishing the above The Call has forgotten that its attacks, and the attacks of its Jewish counterpart, The Forward, have been more infamous and more malicious than those in "The Times" since such attacks are expected from the kept organs of capitalism but not so much from newspapers that call themselves "labor" and "Socialist".

We hope The Call will recognize that Hibben's indictment is levelled as much against it as against The Times and confess itself guilty, as it is of "the death of a thousand little children".

In order to be consistent The Call should establish a harmonious policy between its news and editorial departments censor such bitter attacks against itself as that made by Hibben. Or perhaps its editorial writer will again seek to rise to the occasion and explain Hibben's indictment away with a few thousand well chosen words in logical array.

Urges Housecleaning

One of our readers sends in a clipping from the Boston Transcript showing that John P. Frey editor of the official organ of the International Moulders' Union, has written the Transcript editor complimenting him on the articles by R. M. Whitney entitled, "The Reds in America."

"As a member of the Sheet Metal Workers' Union, I am extremely interested to note that a so-called "labor leader" can place such implicit trust in the integrity of one of the worst labor-hating capitalist sheets in the eastern part of the United States," he writes.

"In view of the attitude of the Transcript on such matters as the Boston building trades lockout in 1921, the miners strike and the railroad strike that an editor of a labor journal can express such faith in that capitalist paper clearly shows that the moulders need a new editor.

"If Brother Frey does not know the character of the Transcript his ignorance surely disqualifies him as a spokesman for labor. And if he does possess that knowledge his crime is all the greater since he is knowingly giving aid and comfort to labor's enemies. In either case the evidence warrants a little housecleaning on the part of our brother unionists."

Frey is a good henchman of Gompers. Frey knows the Transcript. That is sufficient to show that Frey would rather consort with labor's enemies than see labor make progress. That he should be forced out of the labor movement there can be no question. The sooner the better.

Bakhmetiev Back Again

Boris Bakhmetiev ambassador to the United States for the social and other Russian counter revolutionaries, who had such favor with the "Socialist" Party is back again.

He is said to have returned from his meetings with the Anti Sovietists in Paris, with a complete plan for the overthrow of Soviet Rule in Russia. He is expected to put this plan before Secretary of State Hughes in a few days.

In the meantime he remains in hiding fearing the pursuit of U. S. Senator Borah, who is looking for him.

The law for the defense of the German republic is used to oppress Communists whenever they raise their voices for the workers. But when the monarchist Cardinal Faulhaber of Bavaria, violently attacks the revolution of 1918, no move is made against him. That is the kind of "collaboration" between "Socialists" and anti-working class elements that Morris Hillquit favors as the road to "Socialist" Party victory.

"Dictatorship" Is Necessary

"The dictatorship is necessary because it is a case, not of partial changes, but of the very existence of the bourgeoisie. No agreement is possible on this ground. Only force can be the deciding factor. The dictatorship of the proletariat does not exclude, of course, either separate agreements, or considerable concessions, especially in connection with the lower middle class and the peasantry. But the proletariat can only conclude these agreements after having gained possession of the apparatus of power, and having guaranteed to itself the possibility of independently deciding on what points to yield and on which to stand firm, in the interestes of the general Socialist task."

[illegible] Labor Hears Foster Defense Talk

BOSTON, Mass.—More than a thousand men and women packed Paine Memorial Hall, Boston, to the doors last Sunday to hear Wm. Z. Foster, secretary-treasurer of the Trade Union Educational League, tell of his kidnapping by state rangers in Colorado, and his subsequent arrest in connection with the alleged Communist convention at Bridgeman, Mich.

After the mass meeting the Boston Branch of the Labor Defense Council was organized with representatives from ten central and local trade union bodies, including the Boston Central Union, Painters' District Council, Cloakmakers' Joint Board, Brotherhood of Electrical Engineers, Local 962; Carpenters, Locals 51 and 157; Painters and Decorators, Local 11; United Leather Workers, Local 32; Waistmakers, Local 49; and Marine Transport Workers.

Delegates from the Trade Union Educational League, the League for Democratic Control, Independent Workmen's Circle, Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, and branches of the Workers Party and Young Workers League were also present.

The mass meeting was attended by a large number of union men, many of them C. L. U. delegates, attracted by Foster's reputation as a union organizer and by the fight that had taken place on the floor of the central body when they voted to participate.

Many unions sent representatives without credentials to observe the proceedings and report back, and a great number of others have had no opportunity to meet since the call was issued.

By all indications many more trade unions, locals, and fraternal organizations will be regularly represented at the next meeting of the council, next Sunday afternoon at Paine Hall, Appleton St., at 5 p. m.

The proceedings were marked by great enthusiasm, the delegates manifesting an eagerness to get to work at once raising funds for the release of the arrested Communists at Bridgeman and elsewhere.

The executive committee was instructed to endeavor to arrange a meeting for Senator William E. Borah. The officers elected were as follows: Chairman, J. Francis Mullen; Secretary, George E. Powers; Treasurer, John D. Williams; Finance Committee, Annie E. Malloy, S. De Lapp and John F. Nason; Executive Committee, Mrs. E. Glendower Evans, Michael Flaherty, J. Schneider, Loretta Baker, M. Wolfman, J. Berson, H. J. Canter, A. F. Konikow, Anna E. David, J. Karras, Ida Katz, R. Goldberg, N. J. Weiner, James Robinson.

Organize in New York City

Plans are being pushed for the organization of the New York Labor Defense Council at a meeting to be held Friday night, Oct. 27, at Beethoven Hall, 210 E. 5th St.

This gathering will be addressed by prominent trade unionists. All trade unions and political and fraternal organizations of labor are urged to send their delegates to this meeting. Do not wait to have your organization visited. That should not be necessary.

More Slaves Needed

Secretary of Labor Davis, the bootblack of the Harding administration, has seen the light. The scales have fallen from his eyes. Probably thru the effective utterances or acts of Elbert H. Gary.

It was only a short time ago that Mr. Davis held that the foundations of the republic were menaced by the flood of aliens that threatened to deluge our shores. He was highly in favor of the three per cent immigration law which practically excluded inhabitants of the war torn European nations.

Lately, however, he has put on a new record, being probably influenced in this by the difficulty which has been encountered in securing strike-breakers by some of his sponsors during the past summer, and now contends that this country and its industries need more sturdy European stock for unskilled and partly skilled laborers.

Mr. Davis does not favor unrestricted immigration by any means. If one can judge from his recent statements what he wants to do is to secure as many foreign born workers as possible who would first be given some sort of a blood test to discover if they hold or have ever held any radical ideas pertaining to the relationship between employer and employee.

Mr. Davis is not concerned over the welfare of the workers now in America. If millions of Aliens who would not be susceptible to economic pressure, oppressive working conditions, or anything but employing-class education could be secured, Mr. Davis would be perfectly willing to admit them in in a body.

In this he expresses the attitude of the employing class of America whose desire for cheap labor will undoubtedly soon overcome their fear of any radical ideas that might be imported with the foreign-born slaves of American capitalism.

The Burden upon Labor

All members of the Executive Committee of the Greek Communist Party and the Greek General Confederation of Labor have been arrested and charged with treason.

The basis of the charge is the publication of certain articles denouncing the Greece-Turkish war and urging the workers to cease fighting for their exploiters.

The central committee of the Confederation of Labor in issuing a public protest against the arrests, has again denounced the war as an imperialist massacre in which the workers and peasants of Greece have no interest.

In every land where the people are dragged to the shambles by their rulers in pursuit of some imperialistic objective, the same tale is heard.

We are accustomed to think of Greece as a nation where the workers are entirely under the heel of the imperialists and more or less willingly allow themselves to be used in satisfying the ambitions of the Greek capitalist class; yet we find that the only effective protest coming from any section of the Greek population is that of the workers.

So it is in every other country. Pacifists, liberals, all those who hate and fear bloodshed "per se" pass pious resolutions denouncing war, but never do anything to end it.

They support an economic system that makes war inevitable, while the revolutionary workers try to end war the only way it can be ended—by the overthrow of the system that breeds it.

No matter how backward the country, no matter how powerful its capitalist class, no matter how feeble the working-class organizations, in times of crisis when the war mongers are beating the tom-toms, it is upon the working class and its revolutionary vanguard that the burden falls of challenging the imperialist murderers no matter what the cost.

True to the traditions of the valiant working-class fighters the world over, the Greek workers have thus challenged their masters and are now paying the penalty that must be paid until the world's working class knows better its danger and its mission.

Proving the Relationship

The recent conviction of William Allen for treason, in Charles Town, West Virginia, in connection with the march of the miners driven to desperation by the continued atrocities of the private armies of the coal barons, raises some interesting questions.

William Blizzard, the first defendant to be tried on the treason charge, was acquitted in the same community after being tried before Judge Woods, who also presided in the Allen case. I was present at the Blizzard trial and if a community was ever in sympathy with an accused man it was Charles Town in the Blizzard case.

Judge Woods was the personification of an impartial judge and administered the affairs of the court in a manner that earned him the respect of persons like myself who hold strong opinions concerning the functions of judges and courts under capitalism.

When Blizzard was freed he was tendered an ovation by the citizens of Charles Town. There was real rejoicing because of the verdict of "not guilty."

But from the outcome of the Allen trial and the reports of those who attended it, it is quite evident that a striking change has taken place in Charles Town and in the attitude of Judge Woods. The selection of the jury was a travesty on justice. Judge Woods allowed men who admitted prejudice against unions to serve in a case where not only an individual but a labor organization was on trial. So biased was he, according to the testimony of witnesses, that the defense attorneys became discouraged and ceased to object to obvious violations of the legal rights of the accused. The people of Charles Town seem to have approved of the attitude of the judge and jury and to have become willing tools of the coal barons of the state where before it was a source of local pride to take the part of the under dog.

The question is: What caused this change?

Only one answer is possible. In the Blizzard case the coal operators furnished the money for the expenses of the prosecution and the lawyers who did the prosecuting.

They were unsuccessful in this particular case and everything points to the conclusion that a whole community has been corrupted to obtain a conviction in the Allen case.

What the pressure was that they brought to bear on Judge Woods it is impossible to say but there are few men in public life who cannot be "reached" in one way or another and the carrion-hunters of the employing class of America know only too well how to manage these little affairs.

That the corruption in this instance has been on a wholesale scale is proved by the complete change of front in the little American city of Charles Town and the surrounding vicinity.

The coal operators in West Virginia, themselves merely the agents of the Morgan interests, are playing for big stakes. With the United Mine Workers of America branded as a treasonable organization in West Virginia, the way is paved for civil suits that will bankrupt the union.

The acquittal of Blizzard has simply spurred the coal operators on to greater efforts. They are now demonstrating to the workers of West Virginia and of the United States what can be done with our boasted impartial judiciary when a ruthless band of exploiters really want to use it for their own ends.

The conviction of Allen, the coal miner, shows conclusively that treason to the industrial and financial lords of the United States can be punished by the mandate of the courts and it therefore follows as day follows night that industry, finance and government are one and the same thing in the United States of America.

Every party unit of the Workers Party should be at work making preparations for the biggest celebration of Nov. 7th, the anniversary of the establishment of the Soviet Republic in Russia, that has been held in this country.

Nov. 7th this year is not only to evidence the joy of the workers of this country that the Republic of the Workers and Peasants has withstood all the forces that the enemy could bring against it, but is to mark the beginning of a mighty effort to build up the organization of the workers in this country which is fighting for the establishment of a Soviet Republic in the United States.

Every party speaker is to be mobilized for the celebration. Where speakers cannot be made available written addresses will be sent out for use at the meetings. A special edition of the party newspapers will be issued to commemorate the day.

The immediate task of each party organization is to organize a committee, engage a hall and make the other preparations necessary.

Comrades, let us show the strength of our movement in the Nov. 7th celebration.

Let us make these celebrations cover the length and the breadth of the land, as our party organization does. Let the word go forth on Nov. 7th that in Maine and California, in Minnesota and Alabama alike there are men and women who are inspired by the great victory and courage of the workers and peasants of Russia and who are building here a powerful organization of the vanguard of the working-class movement, which will win freedom from exploitation and oppression for the workers of this country.

C. E. Ruthenberg,
Executive Secretary.

Persecute and Deport Communists in Japan Just as in the U. S. A.

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER
Staff Correspondent, Federated Press and The Worker

TOKIO.—In connection with the alleged Communist plot in Osaka, Ivan Kozlov, a Russian of American education, has been deported. His wife and two children, left behind, are being hounded by the police.

A party of judges and procurators raided the homes of Socialists in Tokio, while seven men were arrested in Osaka for spreading Communistic doctrines among the soldiers.

The strike of the Kobe-Osaka tram employees resulted in the workers receiving an increase in wages, and as a consequence other strikes of tram workers are threatened. More than 300 workers in the Toshin Rubber Co. plant at Kobe are on strike. Nearly 3,000 employees of the Godo Spinning Co. at Osaka are out. There are also strikes among the cotton workers, the lighters' union, and in the zinc plating industry.

Land disputes among tenant farmers have resulted in a lower valuation of real estate. The police are watchful of a plan to celebrate the rice riots of five years ago. Japanese workers are stirring themselves to collect funds for Russian relief, pointing out that labor in Japan has not been represented in this work.

Japan has promised to evacuate Manchuria. Three regiments of artillery in Chita have been disbanded. A naval officer reports that most of the Japanese firms in Vladivostok are preparing to leave when the troops are withdrawn.

Russian Workers in Protest for British Victims in So. Africa

TO THE WORKERS IN SOUTH AFRICA:

The All-Russian Trades Union Congress conveys its heartfelt greetings to the workers of South Africa, upon whom has fallen the revenge of the English capitalists for their rising against their exploiters.

The Congress protests against the death sentences passed upon the leaders of the strike in South Africa, and joins in the protest of the International Proletariat against the outrageous execution of bourgeois justice.

RELIEF STILL NEEDED

PHILADEPHIA.—The American Friends Service committee (Quakers) are making another appeal for clothing to be distributed in Russia by their working unit there. They are informed that this year's harvest is in many localities a failure and that there will not be sufficient food for more than 50 percent of the people, but clothing is almost as necessary as food.

We congratulate the Progressive Miners' Group of District 5 Western Pennsylvania on the platform they have issued for the struggle they have launched and the spirit with which they go forward into battle. Victory will surely find a resting place upon their standards.

This platform is published on another page of this issue. This Miners' Group also announces that it will issue a series of eight articles to give publicity to their cause.

It is promised that these eight articles will give the story of one of the greatest labor struggles that has ever taken place in the United States. We believe it and will gladly give space to them.

The introduction to these articles charges that the most corrupt district of the United Mine Workers of America is known as "District Five" with headquarters in Pittsburgh.

It is charged that the reason for its corruption is the fact that more of the coal mined here is used by great corporations than in any other district in the United States.

The United States Steel Corporation and other steel manufacturers are the chief consumers. Due to large scale production and consumption the proportionate profit on this coal is greater than in any other part of the United States. The supremacy of Pittsburgh as a steel center rests upon this margin of profit. Therefore, the steel magnates can afford to spend more money for corruption than any other group of coal operators in the country.

For twenty years the rebels in this district have made the mistake of getting a little group of Americans together and trying to beat the corrupt machine. This year a definite plan has been mapped out. There is no secret about it. The fight is in the open.

A ticket representative of the foreigners as well as the Americans has been put up for the district elections in an organized manner.

A platform has been adopted in an organized manner, and while the men on the ticket are the very best that can be secured and would do credit to the movement anywhere, the platform is put above men.

A special campaign will be carried on among the foreigners who comprise 90 per cent of the membership in this district at the present time.

The machine is so rattled that it hasn't put out a slate as yet. There is only one possible way of defeating our ticket at the election in December declares the miners' committee, and that is to steal the vote.

The Progressive Group recognizes this fact and is preparing to defeat "the gang" in spite of their old game of stealing elections.

The Pittsburgh miners say they need the support of every coal miner in the nation. If you are a coal miner, and if you know anyone in District No. 5, write them and tell them you are watching the fight there and you will help in every way you can.

The platform and ticket of the Pittsburgh miners is published on another page. Read it and circulate it wherever there is a coal miner interested in building an invincible United Mine Workers of America.

The Defeat of English Capitalism

Before the honorable authors of the Treaty of Versailles meet again, not to pull their hair in despair, but to proceed with their work, the Treaty of Versailles will probably have been annulled in all its parts by the force of events.

The Red Army had begun this liquidation of the Treaty when it cut with its bayonets the noose prepared for the Russian Revolution. The golden dollars of the United States, poured upon the Treaty, have continued the process. The United States has broken England's control of the seas.

Mark Sullivan, the historian of the Washington Conference, declared truly that no one had ever sunk as many English ships as Secretary of State Hughes, and that, without any naval combat.

As for the reparations part of the Versailles program, neither dollars nor bayonets were necessary to tear it up. Since the purpose of this program was to force Germany to pay, it is destroyed by the very fact that Germany has no dollars.

The only question is to know whether the reparations problem will be solved before or after the fall of bourgeois society in Germany.

And now we see the absolute failure of the Treaty of Versailles in the Near East. The victory of the Turks is a defeat for England.

There is nothing platonic in Mr. Lloyd George's friendship for the millionaire Basile Zakharow. Mr. Basile Zakharov, of the Firm of Vickers and Co. (war ammunitions), and the principal financial supporter of the Greek Government, had been able to lend this Government the handsome sum of $20.000.000 to conduct the present war. This financier is one of the binding agents between Greek and English capitalism.

Greek capitalism represents the interests of England in the Near East, and the conflict between Mr. Venizelos and the late King Constantine was really the conflict of French and English capitalism.

Mr. Venizelos is the agent of Schneider and Co. of the Creusot Works and the Bank L'Union of Paris. Ex-King Tino was bound by Basile Zakharov to the firm of Vickers and Co. and the British Trade Corporation.

The defeat of the Greek forces, then, is a defeat of English capitalism.

THE GENERAL STRIKE

We Communists know that a general strike will not bring the working class to Communism.

After every strike the workers find themselves still under capitalism faced with the necessity of conducting further strikes against the system.

While we recognize the limitations of all strikes and even of a general strike, we realize that the strike is the only weapon that the working class can use against capitalism.

It is a demonstration of the mass power of the working class and thru the mass strike the workers will become conscious of their power as a class and, when a revolutionary situation arises, if the working class movement is directed by a revolutionary leadership, the workers can pass beyond a general strike to the seizure of political power, the destruction of the capitalist state and the establishment of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

Only then will the working class have freed themselves from capitalism and face the future as masters of their own destiny.

By this one revolutionary act they will have abolished capitalism, the basis of class war, and the future will be in their hands.

Then and then only will the workers be in a position to reconstruct society and to lay the foundation stones of Communist civilisation.

Appeal to Russia

Russian Federated Soviet Republic.

Comrades.—The scheming of the profit-hungry imperialists of England, France, and Italy in the Near East have brought upon the workers of Greece and Turkey untold suffering.

The conflict between Greece and Turkey, in which tens of thousands are losing their lives and bloodshed and destruction is turning the land into a shambles is the result of the scheming of English, French and Italian imperialists who are seeking to secure new fields of exploitation to satisfy their lusts for profit at the expense of the people of the Near East.

It is from this profit-hungry imperialism that the workers and peasants of Russia have freed themselves.

It is to Soviet Russia that the workers and peasants of Turkey and Greece alike must look for that guidance which will help them to end the rule of Allied Imperialism in the Near East and to establish the free Soviet Republic of the Workers and Peasants thruout the world.

We pledge our support to the Government of the Workers and Peasants of Russia anew and urge that the Soviet Republic do all within its power to end the rule of Allied Imperialism and to free the workers and peasants of Greece and Turkey from the misery and suffering which this Allied Imperialism has brought upon them.

Amalgamation, rather than federation, for the unions in the needle trades, was advocated in the report submitted by Delegate Wortis of the Needle Trades section and adopted by the Trade Union Educational League at its recent convention in this city.

"The problems and interests of the workers in the needle trades are so closely bound together that there is absolutely no reason for the existence of more than one union in the industry and a crying need exists for our amalgamation into one powerful organization that can better protect and further our interests," reads the report.

Contending that the present local unions are largely political clubs and more or less lifeless, the report urges the adoption of the shop delegate system. It says: "To establish a closer bond between the shop and the union, to arouse the initiative and individual activity of the rank and file, to transfer the power from the hands of the paid officers into those of the workers in the shops, and to abolish not only the local but the craft division—the present system must be changed and the shop delegate system established in its place. With the shop as the basic unit of the organization, the union will be conducted and controlled by the rank and file."

The report opposes piece work and standards of production which, in its opinion, tend to the same end. It advocates the establishment of employment bureaus, such as are conducted by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, as a means of eliminating the competition for jobs.

As a step toward the shop delegate system, it advises the election of shop chairmen to act in an advisory capacity to the present unions, and it repudiates the use of the injunction on the part of unions as tending to confuse the workers and to weaken their fight against the use of the injunction on the part of employers.

"E. A." writes in the International Press Correspondence that new indignant protests may be expected from all shades of "Socialists" against the "Red Terror" as the result of the trial of the Esthonian Mission, sent to Russia by the social-democratic government of Esthonia, but which engaged in speculation, theft and spying as part of its activities. He writes:

The democratic, yea, Social-Democratic Esthonian Republic maintains in Russia a numerous diplomatic and consular delegation, enjoying extra-territorial rights and corresponding with the home government by means of diplomatic couriers. But the Esthonian Republic has not followed in vain the lessons which international spies and speculators installed in Reval to watch for a possible weakening of red Petrograd, have been giving it for years. During the last week of July and the first days of August a characteristic trial has taken place before the Revolutionary Tribunal.

Fifty defendants were brought before the proletarian court on charges of espionage for Esthonia (that is to say, the Entente), thefts, export of precious objects to Esthonia, traffic in alcohol and narcotics, etc.

The diplomatic baggage of the incoming Esthonian diplomats was laden primarily with alcohol and instructions to spies, and carried back regularly military documents, miniatures, jewels, art works, furs, and even valuable icons, hidden from the requisitions made for the benefit of the famine sufferers.

The Esthonian Mission recruited its agents among the employees and petty officials of the army and navy, and the petty bourgeois who hate the new regime from the bottom of their hearts, and are rather tired of leading a miserable existence.

It exploited those who laid claim to Esthonian nationality. It even found a few victims among some vague adherents of the Communist Party.

The Esthonian spy-system paid in foreign currency and food products, very poorly, of course, ferociously exploiting the misery of the poor devils whom they were sending to a possible death.

Its recruiting agent A. Wessart, has been condemned to death together with several defendants convicted of delivering various secret documents of the army and the navy, among them the plan of action of the Red Navy for the coming year. But the principal leaders remain in security in Esthonia.

What lessons can we draw from this scandalous trial which has revealed to Red Russia the sordid undercurrent of corruption, treason, deceit which reigns in the diplomacy of this petty Baltic "democracy"? It proves what dangers of corruption lie in the neighborhood of bourgeois states however insignificant in power.

And we are certain that this verdict of the Revolutionary Tribunal of Petrograd will again rouse the indignant protests of "Socialists" of all shades against the "Red Terror."

Yellow "Socialist" Police in Berlin Jail Beggar Who Plays Revolutionary Tunes

BERLIN.—If you are a soldier who fought and bled for the fatherland and were incapacitated for productive work, if to eke out a meager existence you turn beggar and go from house to house with a hurdy-gurdy, and if your hand organ reels off revolutionary songs instead of the Wacht am Rhein—then you may be arrested by the Berlin police and given the option of a 300 mark fine or three days in the city cooler.

That is what happened to a wounded German soldier the other day. He had neglected to obtain a permit from the magistrate for furnishing music and was picked up by the police. Ordinarily he would have been dismissed by the judge with the reminder that he must obtain the permit without further delay.

In the case of this patriot, however, the police magistrate found a condition of affairs which precluded mercy. As the judgment reads: "An aggravating circumstance of your case is the fact that you played pieces for the most part that are calculated to excite the people." Hence the fine of 300 marks, which to a poor street beggar seems a young fortune.

WHAT DOES THE WORKERS PARTY WANT?

It wants to see the working class freed from exploitation; it wants to see capitalism abolished, and industry, together with every public service and source of wealth, in the hands of Labor. It believes that only the working class has got the sense of social solidarity and collective responsibility which is required to eliminate the criminal waste of energy and wealth we see all round us, and use them in the interests of society as a whole.

[illegible] 1. The policy of [illegible] Lewis and the International officers in ignoring the instructions of the International Convention in the settlements which they made at Philadelphia and Cleveland are a great betrayal of the rank and file.

In accepting the terms of the anthracite operators thru two of the most notorious corporation lawyers and lackeys of capitalism, United States Senators Pepper and Reed, and in signing an agreement which expires in August, 1923, instead of April 1st, Lewis has guaranteed the capitalists of America a generous supply of coal, while the soft coal miners will likely be on strike.

This is not the much-vaunted labor statesmanship we have heard so much about, but the rankest kind of fakery. The strength of the present strike lay in the fact that for the first time in history Anthracite and Soft Coal miners struck at the same time.

As a result the coal shortage was so serious that in another month the operators could have been made to yield all the demands insisted upon by the International Convention. Yet at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth moment the rank and file were grossly betrayed.

There can be no doubt that if these contracts had been submitted by referendum to the rank and file, in the way that was provided by the Convention, that they would have been overwhelmingly rejected.

Many miners are still bewildered by the atmosphere surrounding the sudden Cleveland Agreement which deserted the coke field miners and left them unto the mercy of, the United States Steel Corporation.

The fact is that the rumblings of the insurgent movement in the U. M. W. A. were becoming so loud that the International officers were afraid to have the nomination papers for the coming election sent out with an unsettled strike on their hands.

Because of this cowardice they [illegible] the coming election.

2. NATIONAL AGREEMENTS ONLY.—The cry for district agreements is founded upon the desire to divide the workers. If the system of one district striking while the rest are working is re-established, the power of the U. M. W. A. will be destroyed.

The union officials who echo the demand of the bosses for district agreements, as many did during the strike, are agents of the operators and traitors to our cause.

In the early days agreements were made between individual operators and local unions, then by sub-districts, next by interdistricts, and finally a national settlement arrived at. All this was progress in the right direction. To retreat now from the principle of national agreements would be a step backward.

3. ALLIANCE BETWEEN THE MINERS AND THE RAILROAD WORKERS.—There must be created a real fighting alliance between the men who dig coal and those who haul it.

This must not be a weak affiliation like the present arrangement, which produces merely an exchange of friendly telegrams. The miners and the railroad workers must join forces for united action in strikes.

4. RE-INSTATEMENT OF KANSAS MINERS.—The suicidal policy followed in destroying the autonomy of District Fourteen which resulted in the imprisonment of Alexander Howat and the victimizing of thousands of our loyal brothers, is an outrage. We demand the re-instatement of the Kansas miners with full rights and privileges.

5. AGGRESSIVE ORGANIZATION CAMPAIGN.—Plans must immediately be laid to bring into the organization the great army of non-union miners. One-third of the miners in the United States are outside the union.

Had the administration really wanted it, all the miners in the country could easily have been organized during the war time. This condition must end. With the possibility of another strike in April, the non-union fields must be immediately organized.

Problems Confronting District

In the light of this national policy in the past it is not strange that the forty-five thousand (45,000) miners, their wives, and one hundred and seventy thousand (170,000) children of the Connellsville coke region can get no satisfactory promises as to definite relief altho they are still on strike against a part of the most powerful trust in the United States. But for them, the strike in Western Pennsylvania would have been a failure.

The U. M. W. A., which invited these men to strike and signed the Cleveland Agreement against their wishes, is under obligation to send immediate relief to these starving brothers. We pledge ourselves to do all in our power to send help to these men and invite all locals to immediately send their contributions DIRECTLY to these miners.

1. ELECTION OF ORGANIZERS BY THE RANK AND FILE IN DISTRICT FIVE.—At present the big staff of field workers are appointed by the administration, with the result that they are in large part simply an electioneering machine. They spend most of their time running around the district playing politics and seeking to develop sentiment to support the administration. The "pay-roll" in the U. M. W. A. must be abolished. In District Two they have already realized the value [illegible] violation of the Cleveland Agreement and must be cancelled.

We appeal to the locals of District Five to call a special district convention in Pittsburgh at once to compel the cancellation of this contract and to take steps to raise money thruout the United States for relief of the Connellsville coke field miners.

3. REDUCTION OF SALARIES.—One cause of the trouble between the leaders and the members is the great difference in income. If the salaries of officials were more nearly equal to the wages of the working miners the officials would see things more from the miner's viewpoint. For this reason the officers can be more useful to the membership if their salaries are reduced to a reasonable figure.

We, therefore, demand the reduction of salaries of district officers and advocate payment of salaries not to exceed $240 a month and legitimate expenses.

We further demand that the present custom of reporting lump sum expense accounts in the semi-annual financial reports be discontinued, and that henceforth all expenses of all officers and employees be itemized, so that the membership may know what becomes of their hard earned money.

We pledge ourselves to work for the amendment of the district constitution at the next regular district convention in accordance with this policy.

4. THE DEFENSE FUND.—Whereas, several years ago a Defense Fund was authorized by the district organization into which it is alleged about Three Million ($3,000,000.00) Dollars was paid and since it is charged there has not been an honest accounting of this fund; and further, since the Connellsville field has ex- [illegible] in sympathy with the progressive platform shall be [illegible].

Realizing that such a program, as outlined, can only be executed by a group of tried, honest and fearless men who bind themselves together for this purpose, we, the undersigned, pledge ourselves to run for the offices opposite our names and fight to the last ditch for the fulfillment of this platform:

Even Alessio, the stool pigeon, had been beaten. All this was the work of Chicago and Gary police. Thus had the "confessions" been procured.

The irony of the situation is that these men had never been in Gary until they were taken there by the police after their arrest.

A mass of evidence is available to this effect, while against them is only the unsupported word of a confessed stool pigeon, and their own repudiated "confession," obtained by torture.

The police simply went out among the strikers of Chicago, picked out a few foreigners who looked least able to defend themselves, hung the story of the "detective" upon them, and forced them to confess to committing a crime in a town which they had never seen.

Alessio, the Stool Pigeon

The "detective" in the case is the typical degenerate type which furnishes most of the stool pigeons.

According to his own statement, published in the Gary Post Tribune, he has had a long career in the game. He claims that he joined the I. W. W. in Boston, during the 1912 Lawrence strike, while in the pay of the chief of police. Later, during the war, he was employed by the Department of Justice at Buffalo, to work among the Italians under the name of Tony Ross. Part of the time he was connected with the Army Intelligence Bureau.

According to his own story, when the railroad strike threatened he applied to a man named Cook, in the Fort Dearborn Hotel, Chicago, for a job as stool pigeon.

Cook, who is supposed to have been hiring men for such purposes for the New York Central, questioned him as to his qualifications. When Alessio told him his record, Cook immediately hired him at the rate of $85.00 and expenses every two weeks.

Of course, Alessio, like all others of his ilk, had to earn his money. So, four days after the Gary wreck occurred, he turned up with the story that certain men, known to him by their first names, such as Joe, Jim and John, had met him in a union meeting and proposed that they all go wreck a train.

He agreed, according to his tale, went with them to Gary, and acted as a lookout while the others tore up the rails. On August 24, as a result of this story, Joe Popovitch was arrested. Uselius and Petrovsky followed on August 25 and 27. Finally the stool pigeon himself was arrested.

Uselius was the first to break down under the torture, because he was the victim of the most horrible and unmentionable crimes committed during the "third degree."

He agreed to the story the police told him to confess to. Then they put him in a cell with Popovitch, after beating the latter and telling him that he too would get the same as Uselius. In this way they got the same story from Popovitch, and later also from Petrovsky.

James Pavletich, another of the accused, was likewise tortured into confessing, but for some reason the police got his story mixed up so badly that it did not fit into the other three, and he was turned loose.

Up to this point the stool pigeon, Alessio, had been "in good" with the police. But now that they had the confessions of the others, they demanded more from him. When Alessio refused to confess to what they wanted, they beat him up, too, and threatened him with death.

This caused him to acknowledge his detective connections, as published in the Post Tribune. Then he demanded that his employers get him out, and pay him his current stool pigeon wages.

The Trade Unions Aroused

From the beginning the unions have had a keen realization of the sinister forces at work in connection with the Gary wreck.

They knew at once that the employers' cry of a "wreck plot" was a dastardly subterfuge to discredit the workers and their strike.

In the first stage of the frame-up, when the cloud of suspicion was still hanging over the League, Vice-President McGrath of the Railway Employees' Department, came out with a statement showing clearly that the smash-up was due to defective railroad equipment.

And when the second stage of the frame-up developed, namely the torture-wrung confessions from Popovitch, Uselius and Petrovsky, the organized workers quickly became interested in that.

No sooner had Attorney Paul Glaser made his big exposure of the torture-chambers of the Crown Point, Indiana, jail where the confessions were extorted, than the shop unions and other labor organizations became active.

Determined that the outraged foreign workers be given a square deal, they called a great mass meeting in the benighted city of Gary, and invited the mayor to come down and explain to them how such outrages could happen.

The mayor came, but his lame excuses did not pacify the aroused union men. They hissed him, and howled him off the platform, telling him not to come back before a gathering of Gary citizens, until he had dismissed policeman Connelly, whom they believed to be personally responsible for the outrages.

Organized labor in the whole Calumet district is deeply stirred over the case.

It is determined that these three humble workers shall not be railroaded to the gallows. Should their case ever come to trial it will unquestionably be one of the hardest-fought in recent years.

Frame-up System Must Go

Notwithstanding the complete exposure which has been made of the terrible barbarity practiced upon Popovitch, Uselius, and Petrovsky, the entire lack of evidence against them, and the complete alibi which they have established, the Michigan Central Railroad and the police are going ahead with the case. They still hold the men, and threaten an indictment in the near future.

The exploiters and their lackeys are making good their original pronouncement, that they will use every possible resource to convict the "plotters" and to punish them to the full limit of the law. They are determined to hang these men at all costs. Consistency, if nothing else, now demands it.

Is it not time that Organized Labor called a halt to the frame-up gang? Things have reached the point now, were no labor man is safe. The unscrupulous employers, with the connivance of their unsavory agents, "put away" any union man hateful to them.

The penitentiaries are already too full of labor militants, perjured into jail: Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings in California, Jacob Dolla in Pennsylvania, and Sacco and Vanzetti in Massachusetts, are only a few of the martyred many.

The insidious and treacherous frame-up, now a recognized weapon of the employers in the labor struggle, is doing more than almost any other influence to shatter the faith of the workers in the established governmental institutions.

It is a menacing danger to the liberties of the people. Labor must stop the frame-up. Popovitch, Uselius, and Petrovsky, must be released.

The militants must stir the labor movement from end to end to see that justice is done to these workers, and that the framing plotters are balked in their deadly designs.

More than that, Organized Labor must bring to book the police and higher-ups responsible for this criminal outrage, and make them pay the proper penalties. An aroused working class must defeat the Gary frame-up.

Official Hypocrisy

By ISRAEL AMTER

The difference between a monarchy and a republic, we have always been given to understand, is that the monarchical system is expressive of the will of a single God-ordained individual, while the republic expresses the will of the "people."

True, many a monarchy is more liberal than a republic; true, again, many a republic uses more lying and subterfuge, in order to blind the people.

Some constitutional monarchies are more like tyrannies. On the other hand, in those countries of Europe in which the Socialists have great influence, or dominant power, they have become masters of hypocrisy and violence as well. Germany, star of the Social-Democrats, Lithuania, Poland, with the brave Socialist Pilsudski at its head, Sweden with the Socialist Premier Branting, Holland, home of Troelstra, Belgium, where Vandervelde plies his trade—all of these countries are applying most oppressive measures against the workers—in particular against the Communists and radicals.

America, to be sure, where the "people" rule, is free from such oppression! Here we are frank and outspoken. Men are honest—the government is "our" government, subject to "our" will, expressing "our" wishes.

Masters in hypocrisy, in times such as we are passing thru, when workers do not know from one day to the other what their status is, one wonders at the brazenness of our officials.

Thus, Secretary of Labor Davis, the millionaire running the department of labor, informed the Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shopmen that President Harding "believes that the railroad worker is of such importance in the national existence that his wages and the conditions under which he works should be such as to make his employment so attractive that strikes will . . impossible."

The Railway Labor Board, composed of the labor group, the railroad group and the "public", recently rejected a two-cent an hour increase of wages for 400,000 maintenance of way men!

The men are now earning between 23 and 35 cents an hour!

President Grable of the Maintenance of Way Men, demanded 40 cents an hour minimum, merely as a living wage. The government Railway Board holds them to 23 to 35 cents an hour, as a "saving wage" and in order to "make employment so attractive that strikes will be impossible!"

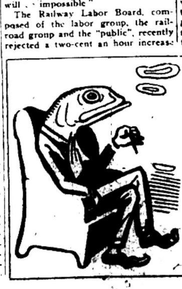
"There is everywhere a disposition to scrutinize, to question, to examine minutely into social and economic institutions, to interrogate methods of human integration and procedure which have been so long accepted as to have seemed axiomatic. We shall gain nothing by charging that this spirit proceeds from malvolence and testifies a disordered state of mind. We ought to recognize that it largely represents a sincere wish to improve conditions. History teaches that blind effort to obstruct such movements has often produced momentary disaster, but never prevented ultimate advance. The world is too old, and ought to be too wise, to resort to such tactics now. Rather, its best intelligence should be given to open-minded cooperation in every earnest project of inquiry and analysis which looks to the general betterment." (Bold type ours.)

Thus, the president of the United States to the president of the American Bankers' Association.

In the meantime, scores of radicals and revolutionists, who have dared to inquire into the nature of our institutions and to explain to the workers of this country the results of their inquiries, are rotting in the prisons and federal penitentiaries, tortured by the employees of Mr. Harding's administration. In the meantime, Mr. Daugherty, the President's Attorney General, breaks up meetings of peaceful workers, raids conventions of militant trade unionists, uses a posse to arrest a group of Communists, and everywhere is tracking down revolutionists, who make it their business to "question, to examine minutely into social and economic institutions" and pronounce them what they are: institutions in the hands of the capitalists for suppressing the working class.

Men have such ideas not "from malevolence" nor does it testify a disordered state of mind", altho prison wardens apply every form of torture and torment in order to drive their radical prisoners mad. Despite the Presidents' pathos, government agencies, the press, the schools and church are proclaiming the malice of the revolutionists and their "sinister efforts to change conditions."

More than one million workers—miners, shopmen and textile workers—questioned the righteousness of American conditions. They condemned the misery that they were degraded to. Their question took the form of a strike which the government used every "blind effort to obstruct". Altho the President should have been "too old and ought to be too wise to resort to such tactics now," he followed the methods of his predecessors and sent troops into the strike regions to make the workers understand that "to inquire minutely into social and economic institutions," is a crime in America. Federal troops were sent to Mingo County to aid the governor of West Virginia in denying miners that State "protection against the thugs and mine guards in the employ of the coal magnates. Troops were sent into 15 States during the coal strike, to prevent the miners from realizing a "sincere wish to improve conditions", conditions which denied them work and brought starvation to tens of thousands. Troops were sent to Pawtucket Valley, Rhode Island, where the textile workers bravely fought against industrial slavery. Troops were sent to Newport, Ky., where steel workers demanded a living wage. Just as the Socialist Ebert did in Germany, when the railroad workers demanded living conditions; just as Lloyd George did in England when the miners demanded full-time work and a living wage; just as Wilson did, when the miners threatened a strike to obtain



Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG

The Poor Fish Says:

It's all right to organize, but not to belong to the unions. He says he would approve of unions if they would only stop antagonizing the best people.

[illegible] "good" [illegible] social institutions."

To cap it all, Attorney General Daugherty, the armed agent of the [illegible] administration, obtained an injunction against the railway shopmen that is a travesty on American citizenship. During the war, treaties between nations became scraps of paper. At the present stage of struggle between labor and capital in America, "constitutionally guaranteed" rights of the workers are given the protection that the Colonel of the Colorado National Guard gave the striking miners at Ludlow, when, exclaiming "to hell with the constitution", he ordered his troops forward, against them.

Workers, in America and elsewhere, have no rights. They may work, if they can procure a job and agree on terms with their employers: they have no right to a job. They have no right to organize and to strike; these rights belong only to the capitalists, who have organized into tremendous trusts and banking concerns, and still possess the right to close down their factories at will and lock out their workers who do too much "questioning" and "examining". Workers have no right to meet freely and discuss matters of importance to them: the right of free speech, free press and assemblage belongs only to the capitalists, who may meet in conspiracy to rob the workers, to overthrow an administration to invade a foreign country (Haiti, Santo Domingo, Mexico).

Obviously, what our capitalists, presidents, governors and the "better classes" resent, is not that the workers "scrutinize, question and examine minutely". That is a perfectly harmless procedure that even the capitalists indulge in. What they object to, is the workers taking action to remove the obstacles to "general betterment". They object to workers organizing to demand a larger, a more decent share of what they produce; to demand human conditions of work. They object to anything that will enable the workers one day to become the masters of their own lives by a changed form of society. They object to anything that will deprive them—the capitalists—of their power, which is quite natural.

But let us cast off this shell of official hypocrisy. The capitalists thru the government, with the president at its head, may obstruct the movement of the workers to obtain control, and such obstruction may produce "momentary disaster"—disaster to the working class. But, we agree with the President it will "never prevent ultimate advance".

The farce of "liberty" in "democratic" America in the face of tyranny almost unsurpassed anywhere in the world, is teaching the American working class. Official hypocrisy, thy words are golden! The workers are learning therefrom.

Communist International Urges Greater Efforts in Co-operative Movement

In confirmation of the decision of the Third World Congress of the Communist International with regard to the organization of the co-operative section of the Communist International the Executive Committee states that in most countries the committees for organizing the activities of the Communists in the co-operative movement have done nothing and that in many countries this work is only carried on in a sporadic and unorganized manner. It therefore decides:

For the purpose of fighting the social treacherous elements in the co-operative movement co-operative committees must be formed by all central committees of the Communist Parties which will be charged with the following tasks:

1—To assemble and organize all the comrades working in the co-operative movement, to keep a record of the comrades engaged in this work and to mobilize them by means of party discipline, etc.

2—To maintain thru the Central Committees a permanent connection with the co-operative section of the Communist International in order to obtain from it general instructions and to inform the section on the progress in the respective countries.

3—The next task of the co-operative sections in the various Central Committees is to prepare for the convocation of an International Conference of Communist Co-operators a week previous to the opening of the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International.

More Amalgamated Plans

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America is considering a project to publish each year "at least two big and real good books of immediate interest to Amalgamated members and their families—books of the size that are sold in the market at from two to three dollars." The subscription price for both books, in case the plan is adopted, will be one dollar.

A referendum vote of the members of the organization who will subscribe in advance is under consideration as to the kind of books which shall be published.

School teachers in Berlin, Germany, may now criticize adversely the acts of princes and kings. That is going some for a government with a "Socialist" president.

New Groups Join Workers Party Ranks

The movement toward building in the United States one powerful, revolutionary political party of the workers received a new impetus in the affiliation of a number of new groups with the Workers Party recently.

As announced recently the Czecho-Slovak Federation, with a membership of 1,000 recently joined the Party. The Scandinavian Federation is now voting on the question of affiliation.

The latest group to come into the Party is the United Toilers. Arrangements are now under way for the amalgamation of this organization with the Workers Party.

The following exchange of letters preceded the election of sub-committees which are now arranging the details:

Invitation To The United Toilers

New York City, Oct. 7, 1922.

The United Toilers of America
83 E. 4th St.
New York, N. Y.

Comrades:—In view of the general world situation as it affects the Communist movement, we deem it advisable to use our offices for the purpose of endeavoring to achieve complete unity of all those organizations in the United States working in harmony with the spirit of the Third International. Therefore, we extend you an invitation to unite with us in the common struggle against capitalism and against those servants of capitalism masquerading as representatives of the working class in the ranks of the yellow Socialist Party and similar organizations.

The unity of the Majority Socialists of Germany is a prelude to the amalgamation of the Second and Second-and-a-Half Internationale in order to consolidate the forces of the Social Patriots and Centrists against the Third Internationale. In the United States the bureaucracy of the American Federation of Labor has joined hands with its former enemies, the leaders of the Socialist Party for the purpose of fighting the rising tide of Communism.

The Struggle of the whole world-reaction against the Communist movement is assuming a particularly virulent form in the labor movement of the United States and demands a complete consolidation of our forces at the earliest possible moment.

For these reasons alone, aside from the tremendous advantage to be gained in every field of endeavor, unity of revolutionary forces is essential.

Our Second Convention is to be held in December in this City and it is advisable that we immediately consolidate our forces so that all who become members may have representation in the convention. It is imperative that the combined ability of the Communist movement in this country be applied to questions confronting the working class.

Believing this will receive your immediate consideration, we are

Fraternally
C. E. Ruthenberg
Executive Secretary

The United Toilers' Reply

The Workers Party of America
799 Broadway, Room 405
New York, N. Y.

Comrades:—Your communication regarding unity of "all those organizations in the United States working in harmony with the spirit of the Third International" received, and we note with pleasure your commendable efforts to secure the consolidation of such forces.

We agree that conditions for such unity of our forces are more than ripe. We shall immediately proceed to act in accord with your invitation. A committee of five from the United Toilers of America will be selected to meet with a like committee from the Workers Party and endeavor to work out details for complete organic unity of our forces, provided that arrangement is satisfactory to you.

We have noted for some time the sinister line-up of the forces of reaction in the labor movement against, not only the Third International, but against every progressive tendency in the entire movement. Every utterance from the camp of the reaction in this country is added evidence of the necessity for closing the Communist ranks. The treacherous clique now controlling the A. F. of L. machine is making overtures to every variety of yellow socialist in order to consolidate all reactionary forces against the militants in the A. F. of L. and in the entire labor movement.

It is a matter of simple duty for all who hold the interests of the workers sacred, all who hold the revolutionary ideal, to brush aside their small differences and unite.

We are ready to accept your invitation.

Our committee will be held in readiness to meet a committee of your organization at your convenience.

Fraternally yours,
United Toilers of America.

What Are You Doing for the Defense of Comrades in Jail?

The Ten-Day Drive for Defense is on. Every section of the city is humming with activity. Comrades, friends and friendly organizations are responding generously.

Posters, lists, pledge cards and boxes have reached every station. Committees are visiting unions. Bakery Workers, Local No. 164, take the credit of being the first trade union in New York City to loan $500 for bail and contribute $100 for defense of our comrades in jail. Every union should follow suit.

The English and Jewish Branches of Brownsville, Brooklyn, began the Drive by pledging $100. Branches of the Young Workers League have offered their help as well as their willingness to secure volunteers for the House-to-House Collection.

J. Burstein made a collection in his shop. He is a cloakmaker and brought in $7.00 to the office. The Young Workers League—the Jewish Circle of Brownsville, made a collection at its last meeting and gave $10.65.

This is only the beginning. We are confident to receive equal results and even better ones as the Drive goes on. However, this is a reminder for friends and comrades everywhere to do their share of work in the Drive especially in the House-to-House Collection Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 14th and 15th. The Collection can bring in thousands of dollars, if we get sufficient workers to go out with boxes.

Remember it is your duty to take a box and get at least one friend to do the same. The box should reach your shop, office, or factory.

Restaurants, stores and homes should be visited in every neighborhood of the city. Do your share for Defense and the Ten-Day Drive will be a success. For any information inquire National Defense Committee, New York Division, Room 405, 80 East 11th Street, Nerma Berman, Secretary, Telephon Stuyvesant 9642.

Hillquit Returns from Europe

About a year ago the editor of the "Socialist" Daily Forward (Jewish) came back home from Europe and announced that, "Communism is dead!" on the other side of the Atlantic.

Altho the year has passed by we see that Communism must still be pretty much alive in Europe since returning "Socialists" are still in the business of trying to kill it.

Morris Hillquit, international secretary of the "Socialist" Party, comes back home after six weeks and tells the faithful that

"Communism is a spent force. It is dying out."

Benjamin Schlesinger, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, and Samuel Gompers' delegate to the British Trade Union Congress, proclaims that

"Their (the Communists) role is all but played out."

This is manufactured propaganda to keep up the morale of the dwindling numbers of the "Socialist" party. It can have no other purpose.

Even the casual reader of the daily press—the capitalist press at that—can glean the fact that the Communist movement has achieved another smashing victory in Europe—in winning over the majority of the Italian Socialist Party for the Communist International.

Hillquit hurried home before this catastrophe to the European Social Democracy took place. He admits he saw the storm coming.

Hillquit's greatest crimes are the crimes of omission. He forgot to tell the faithful that in Thuringia, in Southern Germany, the Communists have just increased their vote 25 per cent, while the "Socialists" got a decrease of 32 per cent.

He forgot to report that in Alsace-Lorraine the first Communist has been elected to parliament.

He forgot to state that in the by-elections in Czecho-Slovakia the Communists have shown gains of 12 places, while the "Socialists" have lost six places.

In lieu of these facts, Hillquit tries to tell us what the issue is that divided the Italian Socialist Party. He said:

"The so-called concentrationalists, under the leadership of Fillipe Turati claims that the reason the election victories of the Italian workers haven't done them any good is because the Socialist Party under Serrati was not ready to make use of its great power in the interests of the workers to collaborate with the bourgeoisie.

"The other faction led by G. M. Serrati, the Maximalist faction, believes that nothing can be done until the workers have all the power and then they will institute the dictatorship of the proletariat. To all intents and purposes they are Communists."

Hillquit, of course, in Italy as in Germany throws his lot in with the "Socialist" collaborators with capitalism and hopes for the best. Hillquit doesn't know, but he has his hopes. Listen:

"I don't know how the Socialist Europe will happen," says Hillquit. "It may be that there will be election victories, giving the Socialists the majorities in different countries. That will be one way. In others capitalism may abdicate. In the face of the fearful problems now before Europe, that isn't at all impossible. In others there may be some sort of struggle. But no matter how it comes, the next thing in sight is a Socialist Europe, and that alone can save the world from utter and complete collapse."

Hillquit's days in Germany seem to have been spent in vain. He says the "Socialists" there are enthusiastic and that Scheidemann and Noske are out. He forgot to show how the German Social-Democracy (United) is the lackey of Stinnes and other industrial Kaisers, how these "Socialists" join with Stinnes to lengthen the workday to help "produce" for capitalism. While Scheidemann and Noske are under eclipse right now there are plenty of other Scheidemanns and Noskes among the German "Socialists."

Hillquit didn't attempt to show that the one task of European "Socialists," from Pilsudski in Poland, to the Hendersons in England, and the Turatis in Italy, is to combat the social revolution.

The Hungarian White Terrorist Horthys will laugh at Hillquit's theory of the peaceful abdication of capitalism.

The "Socialist" supporters of the German military machine are to-day winking their eyes as medals are being pinned on those brave German soldiers who aided the Finnish white terror drown in blood the victory of the Finnish workers following the Red Revolution in the spring of 1918. These decorations are given by the present White Finnish Government. These German "Socialists" will smile at Hillquit's "election victories." They will also smile as they remember the butchery they committed in the murder of the Bavarian Soviet Republic.

Capitalism will never quit as long as there are workers supporting the traitor "social-democracy" in aid of it. When the workers turn to Communism in large enough numbers, as they will, then capitalism will fall and the traitor "Socialists" will go down with it.

There were those who professed to be horror-stricken that the Communist International should single out Hillquit and point to him as representing a tendency that was not wanted in the International.

That was in the days when Hillquit was still calling the League of Nations "the Black International" and denouncing the traitors of the Second International.

Hillquit's definite stand with the traitor "Socialists" of Europe shows how correct the Communist International was in its first estimate of him.

It is the duty of those workers who have listened to Hillquit's sugary phrases in the past to decide now whether they will continue to stand with him and other "Socialists" in support of capitalism, or whether they will join the Communist movement in its struggle for the abolition of capitalist wage slavery.

An impressive meeting will be held by Local New York, Workers Party, to honor the memory of John Reed who died in Russia while fighting in the ranks of the proletariat. The meeting will be held Tuesday, evening, Oct. 17, at the Park Palace, 110th St. and 5th Ave.

The speakers will be Captain Paxton Hibben, who has just returned from Russia, Arturo Giovanitti, of the Italian Chamber of Labor, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and Fred Biedenkapp of the Workers Defense Union. All the speakers were intimately acquainted with John Reed and are well qualified to speak about him.

John Reed will remain one of the outstanding figures in the history of the revolutionary movement in America. Possessed of a keen sense of justice he instinctively took the side of the oppressed and used the powers of his pen in behalf of the working class. The war and the Russian Revolution made a full revolutionist out of him and he threw himself heart and soul into the revolutionary movement. He was a leading figure in the left-wing movement of the Socialist Party and after the split became the leader of the Communist Labor Party. He returned to Russia and there took an active part in the Revolution and died fighting in the front ranks of the proletariat.

The revolutionary workers of New York will not fail to come to the meeting and honor the memory of America's foremost revolutionary fighter.

Campaign of Workers Party Sees Drive for 5 Congress Candidates

The Campaign of the Workers Party in New York is entering on its last lap. In order to make a more intense campaign it was decided to confine our efforts to five Congressional districts, the 12th and 20th of Manhattan, the 23rd of Bronx and the 7th and 10th of Brooklyn. This will give us an opportunity to make the most use of our available forces.

That the Workers Party has found support amongst the labor unions is evident from the contributions that are coming in for the campaign. The Italian Dress and Waist Makers' Union of the International Ladies' Garment Workers sent in a check of fifty dollars. In the letter that Comrade Antonini wrote to the Local he declares that the Italian workers feel sure that they "are endorsing an Organization which is the real interpreter of the working class." The Amalgamated Knit Goods Workers' Union, the Window Cleaners' Union, Local 8, and the Amalgamated Metal Workers have sent in their contributions and endorsement of the Workers Party.

Special Meeting of C. C. C.

The City Central Committee of New York will hold a special meeting, Saturday, Oct. 14, 7 P. M. sharp, for the purpose of electing a new Executive Committee of the Local.

Due to ill health Comrade Wm. W. Weinstone, Executive Secretary of the Local, has resigned and Comrade Edward Lindgren has been appointed in his place until a new one is elected. Every member of the City Central Committee must be at the meeting in time.

French Ask for Affiliation

At a meeting of the Christopher, Ill., Branch of the French Federation of the Socialist Party, held Oct. 1, at which nearly 200 members of that organization were represented a resolution was adopted calling upon the Executive Committee of the Federation to submit the question of affiliation with the Workers Party of America to a referendum vote of the membership.

In the discussion it was urged that the Workers Party is bringing together all the revolutionary working class organizations in the United States and that every working class group which accepts the principles of the Communist International should affiliate with it.

The Christopher branch will keep up an aggressive agitation to bring about unity with the Workers Party.

With Our Russian Press

In connection with the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic, there will be a special issue of "Rabochy Listok", the Russian monthly published at Room 307, 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

There will be an entertainment Saturday, Oct. 28, for the benefit of the Russian weekly, "Iskra", at the Emmett Memorial Hall, Taylor and Ogden Aves., Chicago, Ill.

The "Socialist" Bankers and Hillquit

By JAY LOVESTONE

Twelve thousand strong of America's financial wizards have just closed their sessions in New York. They were of course devoting themselves to the interests of the workers, or at least to a consideration of these interests. The work of these economic solons is leaving milestones of progress in its wake. Witness the plan regarding the cancellation of debts. The wisdom of our charitable captains of finance is being applauded far and wide. But let's stop to look into this fountain of wisdom.

Where does this wisdom come from? Well, how should we know where bankers get their wisdom? We have a hunch as to where they get their money. But as to their wisdom, we plead guilty to the charge of first degree ignorance. However let's not despair. The New York Call, official mouthpiece of the decadent "Socialist" Party, has come to our rescue. According to The Call, Oct. 5, "The Bankers Debt Plan is an Old Socialist Plank."

At first sight, we blush to confess that we were not surprised at the "Socialist" organ charging the bankers with stealing planks from their platform. Years ago the "Socialist" Party charged the bankers with stealing money from the workers. Today, with 1922 about to bid us good-bye, the Socialist Party thunders over the bankers stealing planks from their platform. What is this but another milestone of progress for the Socialist Party? A milestone comparable in importance perhaps only to the milestones left in the wake of the bankers convention?

The unsurpassed and unsurpassable Hillquit, more indomitable than ever from a recent sea trip and hand-clasping melee with Scheidemann and Noske and their whole entourage of the hangmen of the proletariat, affords us many a gem of Socialist banking.

Says Hillquit: "It is a sign of progress that the bankers are demanding a reduction of European debts, even if it is merely a partial cancellation they ask for and even if it is two years after the Socialist Party demanded it."

We agree. It is a sign of progress for the Socialist Party when, as the Call says, "the bankers of America assembled in national convention," indorse at least one portion of the Socialist Party program. Especially is this a sign of momentous progress when we consider that it is a mass convention—12,000 bankers—that has given this endorsement.

The enthusiastic "Socialists" should garner hope from this endorsement. Who can be so foolhardy as even to dare compare the value of this endorsement with the endorsement of the thousands of poor workers the Socialist platform received in 1917? It is precisely this kind of progress that the Socialist Party has been making since it expelled over 50,000 revolutionary workers from its ranks.

As a good business Socialist Hillquit must now feel highly satisfied and say to himself "Well, a fair exchange is no robbery."

Apparently this is the first principle of Marxian economics as found in the program of the Socialist Party and as endorsed by 12,000 American bankers in national convention assembled. In the political Bradstreet of the Socialist Party any working man will find smeared over every page that it is a milestone of progress for a Party proudly calling itself a party of the working class to have portions of its program endorsed by the most notorious crew of financial pirates ever assembled in one spot.

Catching the bankers stealing the debt plank of the Socialist Party program of 1920 is indeed another feather in the political cap of Hillquit. And the support of the labor-lynching crew led by Loree of The Association of Railway Executives, and Lamont, a partner of J. P. Morgan and Co., must be most encouraging for the bankrupt "saviours" of the American working-class.

Hillquit regrets that the bankers are two years late in accepting this plank, yet he is a faithful adherent of that golden rule of common sense: "Better late than never." Apropos of this Hillquit said rather proudly: "The bankers request for a scaling down comes some what belatedly, but it is a healthy sign that they are realizing that they can't collect a cent." That is all. Here we have it. Common and business sense—all in a nut's shell.

Mr. Hillquit did not find it necessary to comment on the cancellation of the debts charged to the Russian workers by France. These are debts to be paid for services rendered to the Czar in financing his pogroms and Bloody Sundays.

Perhaps Mr. Hillquit's silence is due to the fact that France is the cradle of his beloved bourgeois democracy. Nor do we find in this interview a word from America's newly-arrived wizard of finance, number 12,001, as to the real significance of the epidemic of charity now ravaging our bankers. The fact of the matter is: Our progressive and charitable bankers have not ever advocated and do not now advocate a reduction or cancellation of debts due them—debts for the collection of which American workers died on the battlefields of Europe and debts the payment of which can be made only in the blood and toil of the European workers.

It is only the debts due to the United States government that our "Socialist" bankers are advocating cancelled. Our American bankers, being good business men, are well aware of the fact that unless these debts are cancelled, they stand little chance of collecting the money they themselves put up on the Allies.

This we submit is the Socialism the American bankers are advancing. And this is the progressive sign Hillquit and the Socialist Party are applauding!

The bankers are looking for the best way out of the awful mess in which they find themselves. In trying to bolster up the falling props of their collapsing system they are anxious to reduce or cancel debts not due to them.

This strategy the Socialist Party calls Progress. Oh Progress, what crimes are committed in thy name!

YOUNG WORKER DRIVE

In order to put the Young Worker, official organ, Young Workers League, on its feet financially, the National Executive Committee is making ready for a Young Worker sustaining fund drive. The drive will be in charge of the Business Manager, H. Gannes. The comrades have been lax in paying for their bundles of Young Workers and in getting subscriptions. So we must find means of keeping the YOUNG WORKER ALIVE.

The Young Worker Drive will begin December First. Get ready to push this drive and to help the Young Worker—you Young Worker. Meanwhile—pay up what wou owe for the Young Worker, and get subscriptions.

YCI OBSERVER FUND:

Speed up your collections for the YCI Observer Fund. Send in the money as fast as you fill the lists. The Observer must leave very soon. So hurry in your money quickly.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION:

Work together with the Workers Party in celebrating the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Workers Republic, November 7th. That is the big day of all workers everywhere. Help make it the hugest success ever achieved by the revolutionary workers of America.

WORLD WAR VETERANS:

The World War Veterans has proved itself to be a working class ex-soldiers organization, and as such deserving of the support of all working class labor and political bodies. The Young Workers League should do all it can to aid the World War Veterans as its answer to the scab American Legion. Therefore the National Executive Committee requests all members of the Young Workers League who are veterans of the war to join the World War Veterans, and asks all members, not veterans, to join the Auxiliary of the World War Veterans.

A NEW PAMPHLET:

A new pamphlet is on hand. It is an excellent work of 16 pages, primarily addressed to all adult workers. It is entitled "A Word to All Adult Workers" and it explains to the adult workers the position of the young in relation to the adults. It should accomplish much toward advancing the movement of the youth. All branches should prepare for its distribution as it will soon be sent out.

OFF TO PETROGRAD

Editor, The Worker:—On Oct. 4th, on the steamship Esthonia a group of ten workmen left New York for Petrograd where they will join their comrades of the Lettish Workers' Co-operative of Petrograd.

Among them were millwrights, carpenters, shoemakers, tailors and cooks. Supplies that went with them for the co-operative's use were valued at between six and seven thousand dollars. Also some of their household goods they took along.

Bidding good-bye to their American comrades they said: "No matter what difficulties and obstacles we may encounter on our way over, and despite the warnings of frightened or envious friends and malicious tongues we shall let nothing deter us from reaching our goal which is Petrograd. It has been our desire for a long time to set out for Petrograd and extend a helping hand to the upbuilding of Soviet Russia."

The present New York local office of the Petrograd Lettish Workers' Co-operative is at 110 West 40th St., Room 301, New York, N. Y., Ed. Tabban, Secretary.—K. Stradin.

Win Fight to Speak on Streets in Jersey City

Judge McCarthy, of the Court of Common Pleas, Jersey City, has overruled the decision of the lower courts in imposing a fine of $10 against Martin R. McDonald, now candidate of the Workers' Party for governor of New Jersey.

McDonald was arrested with John W. Marshall while speaking at an open-air meeting at Central Ave. and Lincoln St., Jersey City, it being charged that they didn't have a permit. Judge Lee S. Sullivan in criminal court fined MvDonald $10. It was found that there was no ordinance demanding that speakers have a permit, and Judge McCarthy ruled that the charge of loitering and unlawful assembly did not hold.

Solidarity Among the Bankers

Frank A. Munsey, the millionaire magazine and newspaper publisher, told the American Bankers' Association in convention in New York City, that there are no longer any big outstanding issues between the Republican and Democratic parties.

In a lengthy address he urged the consolidation of the two old parties, to meet "force with force, organization with organization" in the war upon rising radicalism. The bankers liked his speech so much that they decided to publish it in pamphlet form and spread it broadcast over the country.

Munsey is just repeating what intelligent workers have known for many years. He even admits that the sole task of these two agents of capitalism is to create artificial differences, "to work up issues, without which they would cease to exist as political parties."

Munsey believes that such a united party, combining the conservatives of the South with the reactionaries of the North, would hold the balance of power against the radicals. Munsey doesn't distinctly state what he means by "radical," but he includes in his "conservative" party all who think alike "as concerns property rights," meaning all who support the capitalist system.

There can be but one opponent of property rights and that is an independent working-class political party fighting for human rights, warring against the capitalist system and all its inherent evils.

Munsey includes among the symptoms indicating the coming change the amassing of great fortunes, the spirit of unrest, the spirit of Bolshevism and the demand for the shorter workday.

We must give Munsey credit for plain speaking. What he intimates he wants is a capitalist class party and a working class party, the only two real divisions in present-day society. The boasted middle class is disappearing. In any event, in any crisis, its members always take their stand with one or the other of these classes as circumstances dictate. Almost without exception it is on the side of capitalist reaction.

The consolidation of the two old parties cannot come too soon. Labor can hasten it by showing the same class-consciousness as their exploiters and hurrying the consolidation of their own political forces for independent class action.

The Workers Party calls upon all organized labor to consider the class solidarity displayed by the organized bankers, and to develop in their own ranks the same class unity.

Now that the Stillman divorce case has been settled, the columns are cleared in the capitalist press for the next scandal "among our best families."

"Me und Godt"

Governor Nathan Miller, of New York, in his campaign for reelection reminds us of the late German kaiser in that he calls God to his aid when lacking in argument. With "Bill" Hohenzollern, in his palmy days, it was "Me und Godt," while in New York State we may expect a lot of "Me and God" from Miller in this fall's campaign.

Thus Governor Miller declared at Poughkeepsie the other day that it is not the function of the State to "make life comfortable," that God intended it to "be a struggle" and that it was the function of the state to maintain equal opportunity for all.

That was not intended for the comic sections of the Sunday papers, or for a funny dialogue in a vaudeville show. That is serious republican party political thinking in the year 1922, A. D.

We take it that Governor Miller already has the support of the parasitic few who have been made comfortable by the capitalist state, whether in the hands of republicans or democrats.

Governor Miller needs the votes of the uncomfortable many, those who are compelled to struggle, every day in the year, Sunday most often included, and every year of their lives. It would not be wise, therefore, to blame the misery of the multitudes on the republican administration, either at Albany or at Washington, and so God is the victim, he is made the goat, he intended it should be that way, according to Governor Miller.

That reminds us of that other appeal to the skies by that sterling republican, William Howard Taft, now Chief Justice the Fat head of the United States Supreme Court. When asked how the unemployment question was to be solved, he replied, "God only knows!"

If the candidates and spokesmen of the old parties still intend to stick up in the heavens, there are indications that the masses are getting down to earth. The strikes of the miners, railroad shopmen and the textile workers indicate that labor is developing a "HERE AND NOW!" philosophy.

The American workers are giving more and more thought to the ideas of the Russian revolution. They want to know what this Communism means, and why so many Russian workers and peasants are willing to sacrifice so much to achieve its victory over the forces of reaction.

The workers will learn and they will reply to Governor Miller that it is the function of society to make life comfortable, which means only to build for a better and a more perfect civilization.

The workers will learn and they will reply to Governor Miller that if all join in contributing toward the common well-being, then work becomes a pleasure. No one will then be compelled to struggle, in the sense that we now use the word, because the idle rich and the jobless poor—the great standing army of the unemployed—will unite to lift the heavy burden of labor from the shoulders of the sweating, agonizing, exploited wage workers.

It is rather peculiar that God should have foresaken Wilhelm Hohenzollern in his greatest hour of need. Perhaps he will play the same trick on Governor Miller on election day. Let us hope, at any rate, that Miller's speeches will cause thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of workers to desert the republican ranks and result in their enlisting under the standards of the Workers Party, to help it wage its struggle for Communism, that will make the well being of the many its affair, that will make of life an uplifting joy and not a crushing struggle.

Landis Gets Mobbed

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, erstwhile federal judge, now commissioner of baseball at $50,000 per year, felt the heavy hand of the mob at the Polo Grounds during the world's series in New York City the other day. Landis has not yet given out an interview on how it felt.

Landis has hitherto been the inciter of mob spirit, not the victim of it. He showed himself an adept at this art during America's participation in the world war. On every occasion he incited opposition to those opposed to the war, and to Germans luckless enough to be living in this country during the war.

He showed his adroitness during the I. W. W. trial when he even led William D. Haywood into thinking the "wobblies" were getting a fair trial. He then cashed in, however, on the mob spirit born of the war when he dealt out 20-year sentences wholesale, with other long terms of imprisonment, sentences that are still keeping scores of workers in prison. Other war objectors were given similar treatment.

It was Landis that mustered what mob spirit could be aroused in favor of the open shop in support of his "Landis Award" that meant the smashing of every building trades union in Chicago.

This mob leadership was food for Landis' vanity. He loved it. He was happy in the columns of publicity it brought him in the kept press.

But this New York City baseball mob, cheated of an extra inning in a tie game, was no respecter of persons. It did not recognize its own. It mobbed one of its recognized leaders. In the words of the New York Times, "Five thousand fans hurled jeers and insults at the high commissioner of baseball," who, "After attempting to pacify the crowd, had to be escorted from the Polo Grounds under the protection of a cordon of police."

Landis is a quick thinker. He is resourceful. The mob must be satisfied. He therefore ordered that all the day's receipts be turned over to the fund for disabled soldiers, and to New York charities.

Landis, the inciter of mobs, didn't add a single cent of his own $50,000 salary to that contribution, a great part of which came out of the pockets of the players, helpless pawns in the profiteering game of organized baseball.

Landis may have made a run for home instead of a home run when the baseball mob got after him, but he came back strong the next day on the front pages of the kept press, at the expense of others, as usual.

The three Trans-Caucasian Republics of Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan are demanding seats at the Turco-Greek peace conference for the settlement of the Dardanelles problem. The Paris allies had better hurry or they may have some more Soviet Republics to deal with.

"Socony" Distributes $150,000,000

"Socony" is short for Standard Oil Co. of New York, one of the selling names of the Standard Oil Trust, just as the National Biscuit Co. is made famous by that cracker, untouched in the making by human hands, "Nabisco."

While the coal miners had to conduct a long strike to maintain their wages, under capitalism's claim that labor had to be deflated, we find that the stockholders in "Socony," holding $75,000,000 worth of stock, are planning to distribute a matter of $150,000,000 among themselves.

Wall Street calls this "cutting a melon." It sure is a rich, ripe, juicy melon for those who hold stock in the Standard Oil Co. of New York, that is doing just as good if not a better business than the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, or any other tentacle of the John D. Rockefeller's oil trust.

The techincal term for this procedure is "declaring a stock dividend," in this case of 200 per cent. It is much better to declare stock dividends than it is to distribute this money in profits, because excess profits may be taxed, but not so stock dividends that are holy and must be kept free of any such taint as that inflicted by taxation.

The Standard Oil Co. of New York hasn't had a stock distribution since June, 1913, when it enjoyed a 400 per cent dividend. For every $1 that "John D." or his friends had invested in "Socony," they put just $4 more into their pockets. They have plenty of pockets, because the poor Dubbs who buy gasoline, or any of its by-products pay almost any price asked without protest.

The $150,000,000 distributed now by the New York tentacle of Rockefeller's oil business includes the war profits saved up, deducting the regular annual dividends as usual, of course. But why wait until now to make this distribution? The reason is very obvious.

All the little fellows, the small stockholders, many wage earners among them, that own a few shares of Standard Oil stock, have no doubt been forced to sell out because of the hard times that have liquidated their savings, their liberty bonds and their war savings stamps.

In last week's issue of THE WORKER we pointed out that the number of stockholders in the Steel Trust had decreased by 3,205 during the last three months.

The fool workers who thought that they were going to rival "John D." in the oil business by "taking an interest" in the Oil Trust to the extent of a few shares will now wake up and see how they were swindled, how the big fellows bought up their isolated shares and then voted themselves $2 for every $1 they had in stock.

This form of highway robbery is perfectly "respectable" and absolutely safe, and the heads of the Standard Oil Co. of New York like it so much that they are already planning to spread their net for a bigger haul next time. The par value of "Socony" stock is going to be reduced from $100 to $25. It will be easier for the poverty stricken "public" to buy $25 shares than $100 shares. So more suckers will be roped in, they call them "lambs" in Wall Street. And during the next "hard times," when the Kings of Standard Oil get ready to declare another stock dividend, the "lambs" will be sheared. They will be gently deprived of their stock because they must sell to get the dollars needed to pay for food, rent and clothing, and then, the Millionaire stock holders will divide the new stock among themselves.

This is a process that is going on in all industries. It results in the control of industry falling into fewer and fewer hands. It creates a larger and larger class of penniless wage workers interested ultimately in only one thing, the breaking of the shackles that bind them. The capitalist system thus makes enemies for itself. When those enemy workers become numerous enough and act intelligently enough, then they will unite for the creation of a social system that will liberate them from this system that plunders and exploits them to the last penny. They will unite in the struggle for the realization of Communism upon the ashes of this nightmare, called capitalism.

Communists are being attacked by the "Socialists" in the Ruhr (Germany) mining district because they protest against the coal miners working overtime for German and French industrial kaisers. The "Socialists" are having a hard time explaining their championship of long hours and overtime work. The workers don't seem to get excited over the plea that it is all for the capitalist republic.

That body of self-sacrificing American citizens known as the Army Ordnance Association is still at work.

This crowd of bankers, lawyers, manufacturers and business men never noticed that there was held the Washington Disarmament Conference. They are going right ahead "preparing" for the next war.

In connection with their annual meeting at Aberdeen, Md., recently there were demonstrations, reports the Associated Press, of "Shells and tractors that seem to think for themselves and other postwar marvels of ordnance development."

There were shells with fuses that withhold their detonation until they touch the cloth of an airplane wing.

There were projectiles of 2,000 pounds the fuses of which wait until 16 inches of armor steel has been penetrated before they explode their destructive charges.

There were flares with sufficient power to light a whole field of action below for 6 or 7 minutes with a glare equivalent to that of 10,000 ordinary electric bulbs.

This Army Ordnance Association, that is displaying all these preparations for the next "Human Slaughter House" is a mobilization of former dollar-a-year men, headed by Benedict Crowell, former Assistant Secretary of War.

We discover that the "pay-triotic" inspiration that keeps them awake nights is the fact that the war department's appropriation has been increased from $377,246,944 to $814,000,000. There is an increase of almost half a billion dollars to be captured in army contracts.

That is "Pay-triotism" at $500,0000,000; a mere matter of $5 more each in taxes upon the heads of every man, woman and child in the land.

The "pay-trioteers" like it. They grow fat on it. How about you?

In the Wake of the Strike

It is getting to be the customary thing for the militants in labor conventions to score telling victories.

Thus the "insurgents" among the 1,600 delegates attending the convention of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Laborers outvoted the conservatives four to one and secured the adoption of a resolution declaring for amalgamation into one body of all railroad workers.

> "Adoption of these resolutions means beyond the shadow of a doubt that emissaries of Soviet Russia or of the I. W. W. are secretly sitting in this hall, disguised as loyal men, and this convention needs no further proof that the affairs of this body, for the time being at least, are under the influence of William Z. Foster, known wherever labor is organized, as ultra-radical."

The report was even sent out that Foster was in Detroit when, in fact, it was well known that he was touring the east, making speeches in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other cities for the Labor Defense Council. But that is easy for the kept press. If it can put Foster in Michigan when he is in Chicago, why not in Detroit, when he is in New York.

We offer the suggestion that the big vote that was rolled up for amalgamation was the direct result of Grable's sabotage of the railroad crafts that went on strike.

The $25,000 president of the Maintenance of Way Men was bribed into keeping the members of his union at work with the promise of the Railroad Labor Board for a two cent increase in wages, from 23 to 25 cents an hour. So he kept the men at work, altho they had voted overwhelmingly to join the strike.

There is good timber among these maintenance of way workers and they want to stand with their fellow workers on the railroads in all future struggles. They want to be joined so closely with other railroad labor that no mere president can split their ranks in the future and throw victory into the lap of the railroad owners.

The militants in other railroad crafts should be cheered by the stand of the maintenance of way men. The demand for amalgamation grows. Soon labor will, because it must, stand united in one solid array on the railroads.

Entering the Universities

This is the time of year when the universities are filling up for the academic season 1922-23. The one outstanding fact, in Soviet Russia as well as capitalist America, is that there isn't room for all who seek a higher education.

But how differently Russia and America meet the situation. Gold is the key that opens the doors to an American university. Money talks here as elsewhere. Millions of the sons and daughters of workers are barred from an education because they "cannot afford it."

No real effort is made, not even in the state universities, to adequately take care of all comers. A long waiting list is an excuse to increase rates.

In Soviet Russia, too, the number of students desiring admission is much greater than the facilities can take care of. But in the Workers' Republic, even under the new economic policy, money can only buy from five to 10 per cent of the places in the universities, and these are won as the result of stiff entrance examinations. Practically all of the places are filled by the various trade unions, Communist Party locals or government departments.

Such students, springing directly from the ranks of the workers, receive not only their tuition fees, but also free lodging and food in a university commune, and a small sum of money for incidental expenses.

In time Soviet Russia will have sufficient accommodations for all her students and will then be in a position to develop a real working-class culture. The workers' universities will be open to all who really wish to study.

In capitalist America the same conditions that now prevail will continue. University life will more and more be used to furnish a social environment for the sons and daughters of the idle rich. The mental training given in the universities, as in the high schools and grammar schools, with the accommodations offered, will continue to be typical of the bankrupt capitalist system under which we live and suffer.

The working men and women of this country will not achieve a real education until they have established their own Soviet Rule. The entrance door to the university worth while is the working-class revolution that abolishes capitalism and sweeps on to the building of a Communist Society.

"Democracy" As It Is

> "The capitalist bourgeois calculates," 'while I have in my hands lands, factories, workshops, banks: while—and this is most important of all—I retain control of the army, the apparatus of democracy, however you construct it, will remain obedient to my will . . . . . I will corrupt, deceive and terrorize the more privileged or the more backward of the proletariat itself. By means of these measures, I shall not allow the vanguard of the working class to gain the ear of the majority of the working class, while the necessary weapons of mastery and terrorism remain in my hands.'
> "To this the revolutionary proletariat replies: 'consequently, the first condition of salvation is to tear the weapons of domination out of the hands of the bourgeoisie. It is hopeless to think of a peaceful arrival to power while the bourgeoisie retains in its hands all the apparatus of power. Three times over hopeless is the idea of coming to power [illegible]

BOLCOMS

Edited by I. D. W. TALMADGE

TO OUR NEIGHBOR "THE WORKER"

Dear Colleague:—Our attention has been called to an editorial which appeared in the last issue of your publication. It is entitled, "A Monument for Marx" and describes the grave condition of the resting place of the greatest philosopher of the working class.

We fully agree with you that the workers of all countries should join in erecting a fitting Marx Memorial; yet, we don't believe that it should be done immediately.

It is well known that our pecuniary status isn't any too bright. Consequently, we must make only such expenditures as are of immediate importance. Therefore, may we not suggest that the drive for a Marx Monument be postponed until after we succeed in raising enough money for a wedding gift to Ex-Kaiser Bill.

Fraternally yours,
The Bolcoms.

THE LATEST:

The A. F. of L. is also against a Marx Memorial. "Being a truly proletarian organization," stated one of their officials, "we can't donate any money to erect a monument for a man who left so great a "capital."

MANIFESTO OF THE BOLCOMS

To the Workers of America:—

At last that for which we have strived, prayed and hoped all these days has now been realized! It is no longer a wild utopian dream. It has finally become a reality. In these sad days of reaction, it is one of the greatest consolations for the American working class. How happy will our foreign comrades be when they'll learn of it. How unfortunate it is that Marx, Liebknecht, Rose Luxemburg and the others didn't live to witness it! What a tremendous encouragement this is for the new and old workers in our movement. How much better will we now be able to fight our class enemies! It has poured new vitality into our veins. No longer will we fear oppression and jails, we can now endure most anything. Workers of America, cheer up! Don't worry any more about the high cost of living, unemployment, or strikes, rejoice instead!

Hail the Greatest Victory of the Working Class. THE GIANTS WON THE WORLD SERIES!!!...

Bolcomsly yours,
THE BOLCOMS.

Dog-Hearty, H. M.—Attorney and General Nuisance.

He was born when very young a child of his parents. From early boyhood he showed tendencies for officialism—he never went to school unless accompanied by a truant officer. He always was very industrious; in fact, his friends claim that he was the most industrious sleeper they've ever known. After he got married he worked very hard—opening his wife's pay envelopes. Later on for some altruistic service that he performed, he got a contract from a judge to work several years for the government, as a star boarder of a Southern penitentiary. When the jails became more and more crowded and every cell was needed for radicals, brother Dog-Hearty was transferred from the penitentiary to the cabinet. No one ever knew how great a statesman he was until he admitted it himself. He's quite an authority on political science; he has made a thorough study of Marxism from the pages of the Police Gazette. He always proved himself to be a loyal friend to Labor. His heart was breaking when he saw the sad condition of the trade unions in this country. He couldn't endure their suffering so he decided to enjoin them. Although as a child he was never dry, he's lately become also a very prominent prohibitionist. His fame is so great that we find his name mentioned three times in one of our leading national magazines. So far during his time he's made but two important errors: that of being born and that of remaining alive. . . . . —Ivy.

Big Federation, Hitherto Reactionary, Joins Eight Other State Labor Organizations in Giant Struggle for Unity of All Workers

Workers Party, in Spite of Burns-Daugherty Raids that Sent Most Active Officials to Jail, Plans Big Campaign for November Elections

Altho many of its most active officials were swept into jail at St. Joseph, Mich., as a result of the Burns-Daugherty raids, and kept there during the most important opening weeks of this fall's campaign, the Workers Party is exerting every effort to make a big showing at the polls on Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 7.

This week the platform of the party is being spread to the workers of the nation thru millions of leaflets. It is also being published in full in all the party publications. Numerous speakers have been secured, who will be routed thru all the important districts.

C. E. Ruthenberg, national secretary, is directing the campaign from the party headquarters in New York City. Caleb Harrison, after being released on bail, returned to Cleveland, O., to resume work in this district. Charles Krumbein, in the Chicago district, and T. R. Sullivan, in the St. Louis district, who were also recently released on bail, are back in their offices directing party campaign work. The same is true of Max Lerner, for the Seattle, Wash., district.

Their work was broken up somewhat [illegible] this week because of their [illegible] forced to appear at the court [illegible]

Edward Lindgren, district organiser for New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, was arrested in his office in New York City as a fugitive from justice, and held for the Michigan authorities.

When extradition hearings came on before Governor Miller, at Albany, one secret service sleuth alone testified he saw Lindgren at the alleged Communist Convention in Michigan.

Governor Miller thereupon turned down Michigan's demand for Lindgren and now Magistrate Moses R. Ryttenberg, on motion of Assistant District Attorney Thomas A. Aurelio, has dismissed all charges against Lindgren in Jefferson Market Court, New York City.

All this persecution came at the time when the work of filing petitions for candidates in the three states had to be attended to, when the petty obstructions raised by old party election officials had to be combatted and overcome.

In New York City's 12th Congressional District, Ben Gitlow, who has been returned to Sing Sing Prison, was the party's candidate for Congress. His name was ruled off the ballot by the election commissioners and J. Louis Engdahl, editor of THE WORKER, has been nominated instead.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOV 7th, 1922

The workers of the United States face a crisis. Government by injunction, government by naked violence has become the order of the day. The constitutional rights of the workers have been swept aside completely in the vicious effort of the capitalists to grind down the workers to a bitterer industrial slavery.

Step by step, after the war, the capitalists deprived the workers of all the gains made by labor during the war. Wages have been mercilessly reduced, hours of work increased. Millions of men were thrown out of work to beg and scrape in order to keep alive. A nation-wide open-shop campaign was launched in order to destroy the labor unions of the country. Strikes and lockouts have followed one upon the other in the workers' struggle to defend their organizations and to maintain endurable living conditions.

For decades the American capitalists have maintained spies, guards, gunmen and even paid deputy-sheriffs to provoke trouble among the workers in time of strikes. They have stirred up one section of the working class against the other, natives against aliens, white against black, organized against unorganized

Thru their agents the big trusts have not hesitated to resort to bomb plots, train wrecks and lay the responsibility at the door of the workers. They have kept Mooney in prison. Only the protest of the workers all over the world have saved Sacco and Vanzetti from death.

The American Legion, Ku Klux Klan, Vigilantes and Sentinels of the Republic are maintained by the American capitalist class to terrorize the workers and working class organizations. The raids on the strikers' meetings

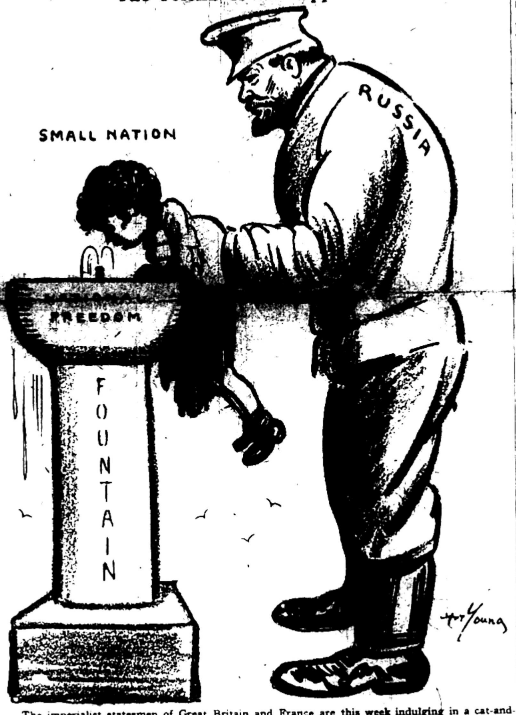
The Friend of the Oppressed



The imperialist statesmen of Great Britain and France are this week indulging in a cat-and-dog-fight to decide, "Who stopped the war." Lloyd George says he did. The French say they did. And all the time they know it was Soviet Russia's stand on behalf of the small nations of the Near East that chained the war dogs in their kennels in London and Paris. A new war in the Near East might result in a Soviet Turkey, a Soviet Persia, a Soviet Mesopotamia and a Soviet Anatolia, side by side with the Soviet Republics of Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaidjan, and so the imperialists have temporarily adopted the slogan, "Stop and think!"

New Complaint Filed in Michigan Case

(Special to The Worker)

COURT HOUSE, ST. JOSEPH, Mich., Oct. 17.—A new complaint was filed today by the prosecution in the case of Wm. Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg, Caleb Harrison, Wm. F. Dunne and others charged with violation of the Michigan State Criminal Syndicalism Law.

The growing demand in the ranks of organized labor for amalgamation of the forces of the workers is sweeping eastwards.

This is shown conclusively in the decided stand for amalgamation taken by the Ohio State Federation of Labor, in annual convention at Canton.

The convention went on record as favoring not only the amalgamation of the 16 railroad shop craft organizations, but also demanded the organization of all labor along industrial lines.

The disapproval of these resolutions by the organization committee found a voice on the floor of the convention thru only Adolph Kummer, of Cincinnati, chairman of the committee, and Henry Raisse, of Cleveland.

This action by Ohio labor makes the Ohio State Federation of Labor the ninth to endorse the amalgamation program of the Trade Union Educational League. It came almost simultaneously with the endorsement of this program by the big convention of the Maintenance of Waymen at Detroit, Mich. And this was accompanied by the news that the South Dakota Federation of Labor had adopted amalgamation resolutions introduced by Delegate Carl Anderson, of Sioux Falls. South Dakota edged out Ohio for eighth place among the growing number of state labor organizations taking their stand for amalgamation.

The seven other state federation conventions that have endorsed the amalgamation program are Washington, Wisconsin, Indiana, Nebraska, Utah, Michigan and Minnesota.

The Ohio Federation also passed a resolution unanimously demanding the impeachment of Attorney General Daugherty and his removal from office, and an investigation of whether Judge Wilkerson, at Chicago, had not exceeded his authority in granting Daugherty's plea for an injunction against the shopmen.

The Ohio Federation refused to give an endorsement to Vic Donahey, Democratic candidate for governor, an endorsement already granted by Gompers' non-partisan committee, and by the four rail brotherhoods.

The full report of the convention's proceedings as received from the special representative of THE WORKER, is as follows:

Here's the Complete Report

The 39th annual convention of the Ohio State Federation of Labor met in Canton, Ohio, Oct 9th. The convention hall was an immense auditorium capable of seating many thousands.

A large oil painting of the late Wm. B. McKinley, former president of the United States, overlooked the assembly. That in this immense auditorium was almost lost. The voices of the delegates could hardly be heard because of the poor acoustics producing a reverberation thruout the immense hall that created an effect almost uncanny.

The selection of a hall of this character for such small delegation is just a sample of the intellectual magnitude of those who arranged it. In these surroundings for four weary days the delegates impatiently sat and listened to asinine stupid speeches to the effect of what a wonderful fellow the worker is and how much they all love him and what they are all going to do for him by and by.

On the second day, one little thing of interest occurred. A representative of the Workers Health Bureau appeared before the convention and made a talk on occupational diseases that afflict the workers in various industries, and quoted some very valuable figures on the actual conditions the workers are suffering under in modern industry.

Until the fourth day, on which a resolution, bearing on the question of light wine and beer, was introduced by a favorable report from the committee, there was practically no dis

Judge Rules It Immaterial if Anti-Laborists Are on Jury to Try Communists

OAKLAND, Cal.—How fair a trial the five communist defendants being tried here for criminal syndicalism are going to have was indicated on the first day of the trial when Judge Samuels informed C. H. Dolsen asked talesmen whether they or any of their families belonged to anti-labor or militarist organizations. These questions Samuels pronounced "immaterial and incompetent."

Don't Throw This Paper Away Pass It on to Your Neighbor

Amalgamation's Tidal Wave Sweeps Away Dynasty of Reactionary Union Officials

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The first dynasty of international union officials has fallen.

The Maintenance of Way Employes in convention at Detroit, Mich., with something like 1,500 delegates in attendance, have not only put their organization unmistakably on record for amalgamation and industrial unionism, but as a guarantee of the sincere purpose behind their resolutions, adopted practically unanimously, have made a thoro cleaning of the officialdom of their organization.

President Grable of odoriferous memory in connection with the railway strike has been defeated by a rank and file convention in so decisive a manner and on an issue so clean-cut as to show conclusively that the membership was fighting no mere insurgent movement, but was committed to the program of amalgamation.

Into the discard with Grable went his henchmen. The momentum which the movement gathered after its first victory in the elections is shown by the fact that while Grable in the first test of strength was defeated by something over three thousand majority by the amalgamation candidate; Pegg, the international secretary, was beaten by 54,000 majority. Had there been another election that day there is little doubt but that the administration candidates would have received only their own votes.

From the first day of the convention the rank and file delegates found themselves facing the most bitter opposition on the part of the machine. Not only once, but four times delegates were forced to reiterate their stand on amalgamation.

The administration forces finding the sentiment for industrial unionism and the resentment against the betrayal of the other railway workers too strong to combat openly with any prospect of success, resorted to the usual tactics of a desperate official. The reactionaries tried to get contradictory decisions from the convention on the amalgamation question so that an excuse for inactivity during the ensuing year could be had.

Some of these attempts were successful—for a short time! Always, however, the rank and file delegates recognized their mistakes, reconsidered the question and drove another nail into the coffin of officialdom.

While the debate was raging, a squad of ten uniformed policemen invaded the hall, one after another. No one apparently knew the reason for their presence there until an investigation committee had been appointed by the convention to discover why a peaceable assemblage of workingmen was being hounded by minions of the law.

In the minutes of the convention is found this paragraph:

"Mr. Keller: For the information of those who are interested in the presence of the policemen, I want to say that your committee on the advice of the policemen in front, went to the 9th precinct on John R. Street, and the inspector there informed us that there had been a request for ten policemen to be sent to this hall; that they were expecting trouble."

This revelation of the fact that the officialdom had appealed to and were using the officers of the law in an attempt to intimidate the rank and file delegates only deepened the resentment of the men who were there to "clean house" in their organization.

To show the sentiment that existed in the convention in Detroit, Mich., I quote from the minutes of the convention as follows:

"Resolved, that we favor the amalgamation of the sixteen standard railroad unions into one organization covering the entire railroad industry and that we call upon our general officers to take the necessary steps so that a joint convention of all these

[illegible] and the defendants after waiving preliminary hearing are now bound over to the circuit court on four counts, charging (1) distributing literature advocating sabotage and crime as a means for accomplishing political and industrial reform, (2) advocating the general strike as a means of accomplishing political or industrial reform, (3) assembling as members of the communist party of America, which is defined in the complaint as a party advocating violence, and (4) belonging to the communist party of America.

The conspiracy charge, under the Michigan statute carried with it a penalty of only 90 days in the county jail, and it was probably for this reason, as well as the difficulty of proving conspiracy, that this count was dropped.

Conspiracy under Michigan statute is only a misdemeanor and as the original complaint charged a felony to wit, violation of the criminal syndicalism law, the defendants would have had to be tried by a justice of the peace and in the circuit court respectively, an impossible procedure under the Michigan law.

The bonds of the defendants have not yet been reduced, but a petition for the reduction of bail will be heard in the circuit court next Monday.

All respondents out on bail will be permitted to renew their present bail bonds, and present sureties will be accepted until Nov. 27, the day set for the arraignment in the circuit court of Berrien county.

The strenuous opposition of defense attorneys Seth Wesselius, of Grand Rapids, and David J. Bentall, of Chicago, in which they charged the prosecution with gross unfairness resulted in the present bonds of those defendants now out on bail being allowed to stand.

Last night the little town of St. Joseph was swarming with operatives of the department of justice who from all appearances have taken complete charge of the Berrien county jail, St. Joseph city hall, in which is located the local chamber of commerce, and the general administration of justice in Berrien county. Burger, legal expert of the department of justice from Washington, D. C. was present giving the local prosecutors the benefit of his advice and counsel. The attorney general of the state of Michigan was also present.

If one wishes to see the defendants still confined in the Berrien county jail, admission must be secured thru operatives of the department of justice who are stationed there continually.

The St. Joseph Herald tonight devotes much of its space to recent developments in the case, and publishes in full the new complaint in which about fifty new names of individuals are mentioned for whom warrants have been issued.

Washington Is Silent.

(By The Federated Press.)

NEW YORK.—Efforts to discover by what authority the department of justice directed federal agents to conduct the raid and prepare evidence against the communists seized at Bridgeman, Mich., in August and now held for trial under the state criminal syndicalism act have been unsuccessful, the American Civil Liberties Union announces, after correspondence with the attorney general. The organization protested to the attorney general against the department's participation when there is no federal statute authorizing them to make arrests under state laws, and when the appropriations granted to the department cover only the enforcement of federal laws.

Following a rather surly letter from an assistant attorney general refusing to account for its actions, the Civil Liberties Union wrote again, but the department has ignored this letter. It says:

"We receive with surprise your suggestion that it is not the right of any citizen to be informed as to whether or not officers of the federal government are acting outside of the scope of their functions authorized by law."

The Civil Liberties Union is preparing to raise the issue of the participation of the department of justice in this raid at the hearings in Congress in December which will be held on the impeachment resolution brought against the attorney general.

We Live in a "Free Country"

DAVENPORT, Ia.—Federal Judge Martin J. Wade, who sentenced Kate Richards O'Hare to the penitentiary for a speech made during war time, said in an address in this city "There never was a government in the world having the guarantees of freedom of speech, of the press, and of worship that now exists in America today." Then, in the same breath, in referring to Borah's plea for amnesty, he said: "This senator favored the release of Eugene Debs from prison and his utterance was warmly applauded by 5000 people. Debs ought to be in prison now."

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS CO[illegible] THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

The Platform of The Workers Party

in Mingo County, West Virginia and at Herrin, Ill., the raid on the convention of the Trade Union Educational League, and on the alleged Communist convention at Bridgeman, Michigan, show what regard the capitalists have for the rights of the workers.

When the workers make a courageous resistance to the capitalist assault upon their standard of living and their organisations the capitalists call in the government to beat them into submission.

Government Acts Against Workers

During the recent great strikes, the coal, railroad and textile strikes, which involved more than a million men and threatened to tie up the country, the government openly used its power to defeat the workers. Injunctions were issued by the score forbidding strike activities. State troops were freely used to terrorize the struggling workers. What the United States Government did in Mingo County, West Virginia when it sent federal troops to put down the workers struggling to establish the rights to organize, was done by the government on a national scale.

Thru industrial court legislation, the workers are robbed of the right to strike to protect their interests; thru the Coronado decision of the Supreme Court, the unions are to be destroyed by levying enormous sums as damages caused by strikes.

The Daugherty injunction robbed the workers of all their fundamental and constitutional rights with one sweep of the pen of a puppet judge acting for the employers. The right to strike and picket are taken away from the workers. The rights of free speech, free press and freedom of assemblage are denied them. Government by injunction and violence, the government with the hypocritical mask of "democracy" torn from its face—acting the open agents of the railroad kings, the coal barons and industrial magnates has become a fact in the United States.

The "Democratic" government of the United States pretending to stand for "all the people" in practice puts all its resources at the disposal of the greedy capitalists.

Bleeding the Workers

The workers are again to be bled of billions of dollars as a result of an outrageous tariff. Hundreds of millions are being demanded by ship owners as subsidies but not a penny was available to aid the 5,000,000 unemployed who were denied the opportunity to earn a living last winter. Not a penny could be found to pay a bonus to the soldiers who risked their lives and received a pittance in wages while the capitalists amassed enormous profits. A million and a half children still work in the factories and on the fields of the United States for whom there is no protection because an organ of the capitalist government, the Supreme Court, declares child labor laws unconstitutional.

The open service of the capitalists and brutal attack upon the workers of the Republican Harding Administration is not to be distinguished from the same actions of the Democratic Wilson Administration. The Wilson Administration used the injunction and federal troops against the steel workers and miners of 1919. The Cleveland Administration shot down the railroad workers in 1894. Altho administrations may change from one capitalist party to another, the government is always the tool of the capitalists used to beat down the workers.

Urge Labor Organize Politically

The workers of the United States must organize their strength in a political party of their own which will fight in their interest against the capitalists. This party can have no other goal than to take from the capitalists the political power which the capitalists now use to oppress the workers and to use that power to secure for the workers all those things they need in order to live—the land, the mine, mills and factories, the railroads and other means of distribution.

Wall Street now controls the government of the United States and uses it against the workers. Against the dictatorship of the financial kings and industrial magnates the workers must establish a dictatorship of the workers. The Democratic and Republican parties are the instruments thru which the capitalist dictatorship expresses itself. A vote for either of these parties means a vote to continue the dictatorship of Wall Street.

"Socialists" Deceive Workers

The Socialist Party misleads the workers thru its efforts to make them believe that the road to freedom lies thru petty reforms achieved thru the existing legislative bodies. No program of merely electing candidates to public offices will free the workers from the oppression and exploitation of the capitalists. The Socialist program is a program of electing candidates and legislative reforms. They deny the need of the use of the mass power of the workers in their struggles for freedom. In endeavoring to make the workers believe that they can win their freedom thru adherence to such a program, the Socialists are deceiving and betraying the workers.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

Members of the Workers Party who are delegates to the Labor Defense Conference which will be held Friday evening, October 27th, 8 P. M., at Beethoven Hall, 210 East 5th Street, must report at 6:30 P. M., Friday evening, Oct. 27th, 208 E. 12th Street, New York City.

The Workers Party declares that the workers will free themselves from the exploitation and oppression which is their lot under the existing system of industries thru the use of their mass power. This power must be used to end the existing dictatorship of the capitalists by establishing the workers rule thru a workers government. It is only after the workers dictatorship is established in place of the dictatorship of the capitalists that the working class will be able to enforce those changes which will end the capitalist system.

The Workers Party calls upon the workers, the farm laborers and farmers, all of whom are exploited by the capitalists to organize their power and fight for the establishment of a working class government.

Demands of the Workers

In nominating its candidates it does so in order to carry on propaganda to unite the exploited for the realization of the goal of a working class government using its power against the capitalist and for the workers. Its candidates, if elected to office will carry on a similar campaign from the legislative halls of the capitalist government.

In order to strengthen the position of the workers as a class the Workers Party proposes as the slogan of the immediate struggles the following:

The workers must demand:

1. The unrestricted right to organize, strike and picket. The right of organization is not questioned in the case of the capitalists who have formed trusts, syndicates and every manner of manufacturers' and bankers associations. This right also the workers must have. Without the right to strike and picket and to carry on all trade union activities, trade unionism becomes a mockery.

2. The unrestricted right of free speech, free press and free assemblage. The workers must assert their constitutional rights, which have been suspended in the reign of capitalist terror at present ruling the country.

3. The abrogation of government by injunction. The capitalists shall be granted no injunctions during labor struggles restricting labor activities.

4. The abolition of anti-syndicalist laws. Laws of this nature are not intended to protect the government from violent assaults, but merely as an excuse to suppress all militant labor organizations.

5. Prohibition of the use of guards, gunmen, deputy sheriffs, militia or federal troops in labor struggles. Violence in strikes is provoked by the presence of troops and guards. To preserve peace in labor disputes, the strikers shall deputize men from among their own ranks.

6. The abolition of all industrial court laws. The purpose of such laws and institutions is to take away from the workers the right to strike. There is no such thing as an "impartial" court, hence submission to a court of this nature is to stultify the labor movement.

7. Removal of anti-alien and alien-restriction laws. The foreign born are the most oppressed section of the working class of America. Imported in large numbers by the trusts to defeat the labor movement, the foreign-born are the major elements in some of the key-industries. Every obstacle is put in their way to becoming citizens, in order that these oppressed people naturally more radical, may not become the supporters of a radical party.

8. Abolition of secret anti-labor organizations. The capitalists maintain such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan, and other extra-legal though open bodies, such as the Vigilantes, Security League, Sentinels of the Republic, to destroy militant and radical labor organizations. These organizations terrorize and use violence against labor bodies for the purpose of breaking them up.

9. Protection of the lives and civil rights of the Negroes. Lynching has become an established American institution. The American Negro is disfranchised in many States. This situation is a crying disgrace to the working class.

10. Abolition of child labor. A million and a half children of school age are at work, while adults are unable to obtain employment. The exploitation of child labor must cease at once.

11. A bonus for ex-soldiers and unemployed workers. The government professess to be unable to raise the money necessary to pay the bonus to ex-service men while granting extravagant sums to the capitalist railroad and ship owners. The soldiers should continue the fight for the bonus. They should demand four-fold compensation for the wages they lost during the war. The workers who could not be given work during the unemployment crisis should be paid union wages for the time out of work.

12. Trade relations with and recognition of Soviet Russia. Soviet Russia is a country of the workers. [illegible] have already [illegible] the Soviet Regime as the government of the workers and [illegible] of Russia.

13. Withdrawal of [illegible] from Haiti, Santo Domingo and Porto Rico and Nicaragua. The last two-named countries were seized by military force during the war. Without heeding the wishes of the inhabitants of these countries, the American government has maintained troops and a military dictatorship there in the interests of the banks, big sugar and tobacco interests. The troops must be withdrawn and military dictatorship ended at once.

14. Non-intervention in the Near-East affairs. The peoples of the Near-East are demanding the withdrawal of the imperialistic forces of the Great Powers. In the Near-East countries, there are rich oil fields, which are being competed for by British, French, Italian and American interests. The American workers should demand that there be no interference in Near-East affairs, since such intervention will merely denote war.

Lerner Speaks at St. Louis

ST. LOUIS.—Max Lerner, Seattle, one of the victims of the Michigan red raid of Aug. 21, spoke before the first public mass meeting of a series planned by the St. Louis branch of the National Labor Defense Council in behalf of the defendants in the Michigan cases.

"Most of the men arrested in the raid are American-born citizens," Lerner said, "and the department of justice will hardly be able to broadcast thru the capitalist press the cry, 'Here is a band of foreign reds shipped to this country by the Russian government to overthrow the United States government by force.'"

T. R. Sullivan, St. Louis, also a defendant in the Michigan cases, presided over the meeting. Sunday, Oct. 22, at 8 o'clock, Jack Carney, editor, The Voice of Labor, will address a mass meeting under the auspices of the local defense council. The subject will be "The Michigan Raids."

The local council is canvassing St. Louis for possible persons willing to assist in providing bail for the men who are still in jail. A representative of the council visited Kansas City this week. Chas. Blome, Molders' Local 59, is temporary chairman of the local council.

[illegible] Maintenance of Way Men Costs Grable His Job as President

By H. M. WICKS

E. F. Grable, of Detroit, was overthrown as grand president of the International Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers at the convention of that organization last week. His defeat was clearly a revolt against his shameful betrayal of the rank and file last July, when the strike of the shopmen was called.

After an overwhelming vote in favor of a strike against the wage-cuts imposed upon a number of railway unions by the United States Labor Board the Grand Lodge of the Maintenance Men, headed by Grable, ordered the 400,000 members to remain at work.

The men felt keenly the position of union scabs in which they had been placed by their traitorous officers and immediately started the agitation against Grable that resulted in his removal from office.

This is the first case on record in the American labor movement where repudiation of a traitorous official followed so closely the exposure of his perfidy. The case of Grable was unique. He was not so much a conscious traitor as hundreds of other reactionary officials of labor, but he was primarily the victim of his own ignorance.

Elevated to the head of a great labor organization from the ranks of the workers he lost all sense of perspective when his duties brought him into contact with the high salaried and sleek flunkies of the capitalist class who served upon the Labor Board and other organizations maintained for the purpose of holding labor in subjection.

When considering his case we are forcibly reminded of the saying of Victor Hugo: "A nod from a lord is a feast for a fool".

Suffering from the blighting and paralysing effects of a bourgeois psychology, he soon forgot his life as a worker and fell an easy victim to the flattery of the mortal enemies of the working class.

While the great newspapers thruout the nation praised his act of betrayal as an example of efficient leadership of labor, the militant workers everywhere denounced him and declared that he should be eliminated at the first opportunity. The opportunity was soon to come with the convention of the organization and he has now retired to the ranks where he will soon be forgotten, even by those who used him against his own rank and file.

The new president of the Maintenance of Way Men's organization is F. H. Fljozdal, of Dauphin, Manitoba, who upon announcement of his election issued a statement to the effect that immediately upon assuming office he would make an appeal to the Labor Board "setting forth the need of the maintenance men for higher wages and improved working conditions". The new president is practically an unknown quantity in the labor movement, altho he has served a number of years as a vice president of the organization.

The secretary of the organization, S. J. Pegg, was also defeated for re-election by Elmer T. Milliman, of Mount Morris, N. Y., because of his action in supporting Grable in the betrayal of the membership.

Shortly before the result of the election for President was known Grable sent a telegram to the Labor Board appealing to them to grant a larger increase than the two cents announced to all classes of workers in the brotherhood for fear that "loyal members of our brotherhood may adopt extreme tactics, fostered by questionable leaders, to remedy their just grievances of long standing".

Since his appeal to the membership had failed, Grable hoped to publicly discredit his successor, but only succeeded in discrediting himself still more in the eyes of the membership of his organization. To be branded as a "questionable" leader of labor by such an inferiority and unconscious servant of capitalism as Grable will be interpreted by militant labor as a compliment to the new president of the way men's organization.

The rank and file of the membership in the other unions in the railroad industry, particularly the "Big Four" Brotherhoods should follow the example of the maintenance of way men's convention and act quickly and decisively to eliminate their reactionary and traitorous officials and substitute therefore a leadership that will create effective forms of organization to meet the assaults of the capitalist class.

ALL ARE NOT BLIND

In listing the things which in his opinion must be done to save Europe from its present economic chaos, Senator T. H. Caraway of Arkansas, just returned from a sojourn in Europe, gives first place to the need of immediate recognition of Soviet Russia. "So long as America withholds recognition," he says, "the stability of the world cannot be assured."

He should pass on these views to the White House.

An Artist Sees Lenin

Oscar Cesare, an artist for the New York Times, has been traveling over Europe sketching prominent statesmen. These sketches have been reproduced in the Magazine Section of the Sunday Times, where they have been the object of some comment.

It was not until Cesare paid a visit to Nikolai Lenin, in the Kremlin, at Moscow, that the artist got on the first page, not with his sketch, but with the story of his visit to the most prominent guide of the destinies of the Soviet Regime.

We are most interested in Cesare's declaration that:

"Lenin is not only right back on the job, but is as fit as a fiddle. I watched him for the best part of an hour, and if he is a sick man, I never saw a well one".

Cesare said he told Lenin that he had been in Moscow two months and that he had been much struck "by the order of the city, the cheerful faces of the people and the busy work of painting and repairing everywhere".

"Lenin seemed much simpler than Lloyd George. When I sketched the latter at Genoa he spoke cleverly and epigramatically, as if wishing to make an impression. There is none of that with Lenin".

We shall anxiously await the appearance of Cesare's sketch of Lenin.

Importing the Revolution

Now that Burns and Daugherty once more claim they have killed the revolution in the United States, the Woman Patriot, Washington, D. C., foe of feminism and Bolshevism, has come forward with a warning against the importation of revolution.

It hangs its tale of woe on the permission granted Jean Longuet to enter the country for a lecture tour. It mixes Longuet with Trotzky, Kollontay and Isadora Duncan in the following excitable words:

"Surely our government will not repeat with Jean Longuet the monumental blunder made with Leon Trotzky, who was allowed to come to the United States and edit undisturbed the revolutionary Novy Mir and conduct unmolested a lecture campaign to overthrow what he called 'this damned, rotten, capitalist Government.' (Overman committee hearing, page 7, Feb. 11, 1919.)

"The two American agitation tours of Alexandra Kollontay, key woman of the Russian revolution, were no less disastrous. Under the auspices of the German Language Federation of the Socialist Party, she addressed more than one hundred pacifist demonstrations from New York to San Francisco in 1916 and 1917. She came avowedly to tear women out of their indifference and wake up their sleeping emotions and political passions."

"Only a few days ago Isadora Duncan arrived here directly from Moscow, and, despite the effort of the Department of Justice to prevent her entrance into the United States, she is now dancing and talking for a union between the red blood of Russia and the red blood of America, as she flaunts a flaming red robe before her listeners. (See New York Evening Telegram, Oct. 8, 1922.) means literally nothing less than importation of revolution."

The women patriots are no doubt so far gone by this time that it will not help them when Longuet disowns Trotzky and Kollontay, and perhaps Isadora Duncan also, upon his arrival.

Branstetter? That's All!

We reprint in this column this week a short statement that appears in the current issue of "The Voice of Labor", Chicago, as follows:

"Otto Branstetter, national secretary of the Socialist Party, is afraid to come out in the open and challenge the arrested men in the Michigan case. Instead, he crawls around to the unions and pursues the same policy that his predecessor, Adolph Germer, pursued against Tom Mooney. Only a man qualified for the position of national secretary of the Socialist Party would stoop so low.

"It is charged by Branstetter that all funds raised to defend the arrested men in Michigan will go towards building up an underground movement to "destroy the labor movement." We invite the attention of Eugene V. Debs to the statement made by his alleged comrade. It is significant to note that when the various unions recognize the necessity of standing behind the Michigan defendants that the national secretary of the Socialist Party should deem it necessary to stand alongside of Daugherty, W. J. Burns and other noted anti-laborites.

"We hardly think it worth while to spoil your reading appetite by mentioning the name of Branstetter. We just want to keep the record straight. That is all!"

Attorney General Daugherty: "Pretty good, Bill. But it lacks something. Can't you paint him pushing over the Government—and get a little more red into the beard?"

[illegible] Forward on the F.S.R.

After two months of study, the investigating committee of five which probed the charges of irregularity made against the Friends of Soviet Russia by the Jewish Daily Forward has made its findings public. In a long and detailed report the committee deals with every one of the accusations specifically, reaching this conclusion:

"We have no evidence of the diversion of funds into other channels. There was no showing of extravagance or of irregularities which offer any ground for real criticism."

The attack on the relief organization was made by the Jewish publication editorially early in August. The outstanding charge was that funds collected for relief were used for political propaganda. The organization denied this and all other charges emphatically, and designated a group of men whose integrity is unquestioned by any of the parties to the controversy to investigate all the records of the F. S. R. The committee consisted of Roger N. Baldwin, chairman, of the American Civil Liberties Union; Robert Morss Lovett of The New Republic; Timothy Healy of the Stationery Firemen's Union; Norman M. Thomas of the League for Industrial Democracy; and Walter Nelles, attorney.

It is this committee which now has rendered a report. It is signed by all but Mr. Nelles, who refrained because one of his law partners has recently been employed as counsel for the F. S. R. He concurs, however, in all the findings of fact.

As typical of the charges and the facts revealed by the impartial investigation may be cited the accusation that funds collected for relief were used to subsidize communist papers. The committee and its own certified accountant found that of the total of $16,719.63 spent in advertising (an expenditure amply justified by the results) less than $5,000 went to publications of a communist bias.

"It seems to the committee natural," the report reads, "that the Friends of Soviet Russia should have distributed its advertising as it has, in view of the people whom it is endeavoring to reach with its appeal for funds. The organization considered that the liberals and the radical working-class groups were those most likely to help, and placed their advertising accordingly. The committee does not know what discriminations may have been made among the foreign-language papers, but they were unimportant. It is perfectly clear that no communist paper was subsidized by advertising and that the communist press as a whole received but a small and proportionate share of the total amount spent in advertising."

Summarizing the result of its work on the whole issue of diversion of money and communist propaganda, the committee states as follows:

"In general the committee finds that the charges are not borne out by the facts, although it is perfectly clear to any one who looks at the letterheads of the Friends of Soviet Russia that it is pro-soviet and controlled by members of the Workers Party. But it must be remembered that the organization is committed by its very name to the Soviet regime in Russia. The nature of the Friends of Soviet Russia has been so clear all along that any one who objected to giving to an organization friendly to the Russian Government could easily have gotten the facts. Those who gave should not now criticize its motives. Its work has been conducted with real and single-minded devotion to the cause of famine relief."

In regard to insinuations made by detractors of the Friends of Soviet Russia on the ground of extravagance in its conduct of business, the investigators found that the charges "are not borne out by the examination of the facts." The committee went further, however, and made a comparative study of the costs of raising funds and distributing foods, revealing that the F. S. R. overhead was "not high compared with other Russian relief organizations."

"The charges of irregularities are, as the facts above show, due to misunderstandings of the complicated business of the organization and have no basis in fact. The committee is convinced that the business practices of the organization are considerably above the average, and that not as much ground for criticism can be found as with the average organization making public appeals for funds. Mr. Chase, in commenting on the methods of auditing and reporting, says: "I would like to state that Mr. Woods' published reports dealing with the finances of the Friends of Soviet Russia have set a new high level in the technique of report writing. I know of no other charitable or relief organization the country over which is furnished with statements of a like character and excellence."

"The committee was impressed with the soundness of Mr Chase's observation after going over the reports published in "Soviet Russia", and having in mind the reports of most such organizations."

The committee does take exception to the fact that in their free time many of the organizers for the F S R engaged in political controversy. It admits however, that the difficulty of controlling the actions of employees in the hours when they are not working is almost insuperable.

Because of the standing of the members of the committee in the labor and progressive movements of the country, the report has great weight and may be counted upon to dispel the misunderstandings caused by attacks which have interfered with obtaining aid for the workers and peasants in Soviet Russia. The organization is launching two big drives worthy of whole-hearted cooperation by American workers; one for the support of destitute Russian orphans, the other for the sale of shares in the Russian-American Industrial Corporation.

In transmitting the report to the F S R the chairman of the committee, Roger N Baldwin, says in part

"The committee asks me to say that it will be glad to continue in service if necessary to answer any further criticisms which may be made as a result of the publication of the report. It will be glad to meet any of the critics in conference and to explain further any matter which they may feel is inadequately covered."

In the World of Books

By MAX SCHACHTMAN

ONE OF OURS, by WILLA CATHER $2.50. A. A. Knopf.

On his father's farm in an Arkansas town, Claude Wheeler grows up constantly groping painfully for the secret of Life. He fails, however, to make himself understood to any one, except, perhaps, to his sympathetic mother. Home, college, Mrs. Erlich, David Gerhardt, all seem, at first, to offer an answer to his quest: all are rejected or lost. His marriage to Enid Royce—a unique combination of Hedda Gabler and Agnes Lanens—is the last blunder. On an impulse he joins the army. He is shot in an engagement in France just as he acquires a faint gleam of power, a momentary mastery of men. Tho his death is a stroke of irony, it is an evasion. One wishes that the logical end were attained: his return to the disillusion which he was spared.

This searching of the American soul which is being done by the literati is not new, but it is socially significant. It is significant because it represents a desire to gauge the effects of our environment—neurotic, crassly materialistic, uncultured—on the individual and the mass. The answers vary from the agnosticism of Dreiser to the bitter satire of Sinclair Lewis, from the irony of Mrs. Wharton to the sympathetic semi-pessimism of Miss Cather. The historian of the future will draw on these books for a conception of the social and intellectual life of bourgeois America, as Taine did in his history of English literature.

EARLY CIVILIZATION, by ALEXANDER A. GOLDENWEISER. A. A. Knopf. $3.50.

To those unfortunate people who are unable to give up their time to research among primitive folk there remains the, what seems to me, more interesting, and certainly less fatiguing, vicarious experience and pleasure obtained in reading a book like this one of Dr. Goldenweiser's.

There are not many subjects more absorbing than this delving into the customs, the beliefs, the general life and industry and art of little-known peoples, or more stimulating than the speculations and theories of the sociologists and anthropolists.

Despite the necessarily scant material which the subject offers, Dr. Goldenweiser describes five typical primitive communities and proceeds with enlightening chapters on early industry, art, religion, social organization. He ends with critical expositions and analyses of the theories of Spencer, Frazer, Wundt, Durkheim, Levy-Bruhl and Freud. There is a fine concluding chapter and a bibliography, and the introduction should be read by, or to, all apologists for Imperialism, the chanters of the "White Man's Burden."

The author sadly neglects the economic factor. This book is not recommended as, nor is it, a Marxian analysis, it is interesting and instructive.

Prof. Ross calculates all problems from the Liberal meridian. The high birth rate of migrating Asiatics, the moral physical and intellectual degeneration of rural communities are causes for alarm, women can purify politics, lawyers have their good points and so on.

He treats of wages and prohibition, war and trained experts. Sometimes you think he sees the light as in the matter of Charity, but always he fails. The stream of the genus Professor Americanus Liberalis can not rise above its source: a love for the Status Quo.

To the capitalist it says: Do everything for the worker, but remain in the saddle. To the worker: Do anything, but don't dislodge the rider.

J. A. Hamilton,
35 Miller St.,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Comrade:—Enclosed you will find a check for $500, this being the first response of the workers of New York City to the cry for help sent out by the starving miners of Fayette County. We can well imagine what these brave miners have to struggle against, and we shall bend every effort to help them in their fight. We have only just begun to work, but we feel sure that class-conscious workers here in New York City will respond in the same generous spirit as in the case of the West Virginia miners.

Please acknowledge check by sending me an official receipt.

Fraternally yours,

Workers Party Congress and State Candidates in N. Y., N. J. and Connecticut

Among the state and congressional candidates of the Workers Party in the three states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut are the following:

NEW YORK STATE

Governor: William F. Dunne.
Lieutenant-Governor: Ludwig Lore.
Secretary of State: Gustave Walters.
Comptroller: Richard J. Verhagan.
Treasurer: Frederick Shuman.
Attorney-General: Rose Weiss.
State Engineer and Surveyor: Dr. Bemcil Hoffman.
United States Senator: Alexander Trachtenberg.
For Congress, 7th District: Iago Goldston.
For Congress, 10th District: James P. Cannon.
For Congress, 12th District: J. Louis Engdahl.
For Congress, 20th District: Jacob B. Salutsky.
For Congress, 23rd District: Luigi Antonini.

All the congressional candidates will appear on the official ballot but those on the state ticket will not. Party members and sympathizers should do everything in their power to have their friends write in the names of the state candidates on the ballot on election day in the space provided for that purpose. If they cannot write in all the names they must see to that the name of William F. Dunne, the party candidate for Governor, is written in.

NEW JERSEY STATE

Governor: Martin R. McDonald.
United States Senator: Louis F Wolf

These names will be found on the official ballot; all party members will see to it that they and their friends cast a vote for these candidates.

CONNECTICUT STATE

Governor: John Blanck.
Lieutenant-Governor: Otto Bruening
Secretary of State: Mary Dworkin
Treasurer: Simon Feldman
Comptroller: Isador Spector.
United States Senator: Konrad Loski

Because of corrupt practices on the part of several of the town clerks in the state who refused to return petitions which had been given to them to certify, the names of the Workers Party candidates will not appear on the official ballot. Workers of Connecticut voice your protest against the action of these capitalist hirelings by writing in on election day the names of the Workers Party candidates on the official ballot.

Don't Throw This Paper Away Pass It on to Your Neighbor

Sympathetic organizations are requested to make no arrangements for DEC. 22, 1922, as the YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE, Local New York, will hold its SECOND ANNUAL BALL on that date at 1347 Boston Road.

[illegible]

But let us not leap to conclusions before we think. Let us think this matter over a bit and we may be able to penetrate Gary's semblance of charity.

The old Judge is no fool. He is not of the type that seeks to invent new reasons for old expedients. He is content with giving us no other reason for this outburst of generosity than the old, staid reason given by the divine Baron, land baron, coal barons, and oil barons; namely, that to them "the welfare of humanity is of the first and highest consideration."

Gary is a level-headed business man of the first order and is an old-timer at the game. He knows that it pays to rob in wholesale and give in retail. And at this game there is none better than the United States Steel Trust!

With the Twelve-Hour day a commonplace and the right to organize dead in the industry, the United States Steel Corporation can very well afford to be charitable. The Steel Trust must resort to such "welfare" investments to blind the workers and to kill their movements of protest with kindness.

Yet, why the voluntary increase in wages? Especially, how does it come about that the defeated, unorganized steel workers are given a raise in wages at a time when the highly organized miners were fighting with their backs to the wall to hold their own, and the powerful railway unions were going down in defeat?

The Steel Industry

During the war the steel industry was mainly devoted to meeting war needs. As a result, its production fell down badly in many lines of construction and equipment. The period after the war brought us into the general business slump and iron and steel production were cut down still more. This shortage is today particularly evident in the building industry and certain railroad construction work. The dearth of houses and railroad cars has made itself severely felt in the exorbitant claim of rent on the pay envelope of the worker and in general demoralization of the railway system.

Sooner or later this shortage was to be made good. It is now being made good. But to make good a shortage in industry workers are needed. Hence, the present revival in the steel industry. Supplying this steel shortage is in large measure responsible for the increased demand for workers.

The genral business depression had scattered the steel workers. Then came the wave of emigration sending them back to Europe by the thousands. The usual source augmenting steel labor shortage—immigration—was no longer available because of the existing restrictive legislation.

The acuteness of the shortage of men was temporarily allayed by the mine strike. First, the mine strike produced a slackening in the demand for steel. Besides, during the strike, many miners turned to the steel mills for work. With the settlement of the coal strike the miners deserted the steel mills. Moreover, the resumption of coal mining stimulated the demand for steel. The railway strike had a paralyzing effect upon business in general and transportation in particular. The steel industry was not immune from this paralysis. As the end of the rail strike was drawing near the steel trust was faced with an unimpeded demand. To meet this demand adequately the steel corporation issued a call for more workers, and issued it effectively—the increase in wages.

Another reason for the Steel Trust's hurried voluntary wage increase is the fear of a new strike following on the heels of the revival of its industry. There is talk in the American Federation of Labor of waging a strong campaign of organization among the 250,000 workers in the metalliferous mines.

This is more than talk, for the metal miners in the West are now out of the stage of talk and are ACTUALLY ORGANIZING. These metalliferous mines are basic to the steel industry. A strong organization of these miners would undoubtedly tend to stimulate the desire for organization amongst the steel workers. To Gary the wage advance is an attempt to insure himself against the recurrence of a strike of the proportions of 1919.

Steel Business Takes Big Jump

The revival of the steel industry has to date reached about 70 per cent capacity. Gary is already meeting difficulties in recruiting his labor forces. In the last monthly report of the United States Steel Corporation we find that its business has taken a big jump. On Sept. the 30th its unfilled orders were 741,502 tons greater than on August 31st. There are today on the books of this corporation unfilled orders amounting to 6,691,607 tons. And according to the [illegible] Wall Street Journal of October the 16th the forecast of steel business is steadily rising. Railroad and construction purchases form a very large proportion of the orders.

Steel is king today. The revival of the steel industry is having its effect on other industries. The cement industry, the independent steel concerns, and the textile industries, are following the example of the Steel Trust in raising wages.

Is This Wage Advance Permanent?

At this point it is pertinent to ask: Is this wage increase permanent? Will it affect the whole industrial situation to the extent of bringing in its wake a new wave of prosperity? In answer to these questions the September Bulletin of the National City Bank says: "With regard to the industrial situation as a whole and for the long run, this advance of wages in the iron and steel industry cannot be regarded as a favorable or a helpful development. It is rather one of the spasmodic and temporary movements characteristic of a time of general unsettlement, such as the war occasioned." (Bold Face mine.) In order to balance the wage increase on its books and in order to make up for the recent period of depression, the Steel Trust has begun a campaign of price raising. On October the First the price of steel rails was advanced three dollars per ton. The Steel Trust is preparing to amass fabulous profits whilst the amassing is good. In the meanwhile, we should not forget that even after the twenty per cent increase, the average pay for a ten-hour day in the steel mills will be only $3.60.

From our experience with the Steel Corporation we can very safely deduce that the wage increase will not be permanent. As soon as the prosperity spurt is over, the present starvation wages of $3.60 per day will be branded exhorbitant. We will again hear the cry of high wages being responsible for high prices in the steel industry. The press will again be flooded with heart-rending stories of the terrible losses suffered by the "People's Trust." Our sycophantic editors will deliver sermons, acres and acres of them, on the need for deflation—of the workers' pay.

Bookkeeping in Steel Making

The Steel Trust is perhaps the largest employer in the world. It is the biggest open-shop industry in the country and has the blackest record of plunder and oppression. Its notorious history is replete with exploitation and theft of the vilest order. We need but cite the letter sent to Judge Gary by former Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Williams. In this letter Mr. Williams proved on the basis of the Steel Trust's own reports the following

(1) The Steel Trust, in one year, charged $100,000,000 to operating expenses, maintenance, repairs, etc in order to hide its real profits and cut down its taxation bill

(2) Besides disposing of these profits by such juggling of accounts the Steel Trust, on Dec 31st 1919 carried on its books $200,000,000 to the credit of "depletion depreciation, and replacement of funds." This huge sum was unexpended and available for use by the corporation whenever it felt that it needed it

(3) From March 31st 1915 to Dec 31st 1919 the Trusts net surplus, after payment of interest, dividends, and excess profits tax, and after putting aside enormous reserve funds for possible future contingencies, was increased by more than $400,000,000, according to the Trusts own official report.

(4) The Steel Trust has made a practice of hiding millions of profits in depreciation and similar funds.

(5) The Trust would be able even to double wages, lower prices, and still pay dividends.

In the light of this history of the Steel Trust we can easily understand the present mangificent raising of the common laborer's wages to a little over $20 per week for a ten-hour day. We can also understand the advance in price of steel. Last but not least we should be prepared very soon to hear Gary crying to the Gods about his poverty and the need for slashing the wages of his highly overpaid workers in the interests of "the welfare of humanity".

The STEEL INDUSTRY is the greatest SCAB INDUSTRY in the world! In the steel industry we find the most wretched working conditions. The steel workers are most ruthlessly oppressed. A twelve hour-day for the privilege of renting a wretched company shack is the steel workers lot. The Steel Trust owns his school, his press, and even his God.

Temporary wage increases cannot help the steel workers. Only organization can free them. The steel workers need for a union is greater than ever. The time for an extensive campaign of unionization is here. The Steel Workers of America must prepare for a struggle to throw off the shackles of the most orpressive tyranny of capitalism. Too long has the dictatorship of the Garys, Morgans and Rockefellers remained unchallenged. Their day of reckoning is long over due. There can be but one answer of the workers—ORGANIZATION!

The resolution committee reported that "It does not concur on account of believing it has the appearance of the One Big Union." Again quoting from the minutes:

"Mr. Miller: (310) I move for the adoption of that resolution.

"Grand President: For the information of the brother in the rear, the committee made a motion for the adoption of its report, not on the resolution. It was seconded and the motion was announced. Let us get this clear.

"Mr. Miller: (310) I make a motion that we adopt the resolution.

"No. (487) I second that motion.

"Grand President: It has been regularly moved and seconded—

"A delegate: I want the support of One Big Union so that our men can band together.

"A delegate: I am in favor of the One Big Union,—when we are all members of the One Big Union,—and we can go down to the Labor Board and say, 'We are all one hundred per cent agreed on a strike'—let me tell you we will get justice—when we can get a man to go down and represent all the workers in the United States—they will listen to us.

"Mr. Dunn: I want a moment to tell you about this Big Union business—it's such a lie—do we want the barbers and the waiters in our union—don't we want to have a union of railroad workers only—Let the railroad workers have one big union just as the United Mine Workers have one big organization.

"Grand President: The adoption of the resolution has been called for—all in favor show by the usual raising of hands. Contraries. NONE. Motion carried. (Applause.)"

[illegible] submitted [illegible] tion, the same as the one [illegible] with the further provision [illegible] that copies should be sent to the Grand President, General Chairman, Assistant Chairman, The State Federation at Washington, and the American Federation of Labor. The resolution committee reported as follows:

"Committee does not concur as it is not in line with craft organization."

The following debate, again indicating the inflexible purpose of the rank and file delegates, took place:

"Mr. Hemingway: I move for the adoption of the resolution.

"A delegate: I second the motion.

"Grand President: It has been regularly moved and seconded that the resolution be adopted—all in favor signify.

"Mr. Dunn: (913) (Mr. Dunn appears—perusual of the minutes shows—to have been one of the floor leaders of the administration. He did what he could, but his arguments had but little effect, yet I give them in full to show the tactics used by the machine, and the fact that they made no impression whatever upon the rank and file delegates.) I didn't expect that the question of amalgamation would come up this afternoon. I am not prepared as I would like to have been—my papers are in my room—papers in connection with so-called amalgamation—I have considerable knowledge on this question, but I would say this: I have a whole lot of knowledge in connection with this One Big Union stuff. I want to say further that I believe that every delegate here wants to know the truth, about this so called amalgamation, for it plans for the destruction of bonified labor organization in America.

"Chorus of delegates: Sit down!

"Dunn: Give me an opportunity [illegible] every man who is interested in the trade union movement in America to please give me a chance—that you all may know the treachery of this amalgamation plan which is brought up here. I have it from the lips of the conscientious objector who signed his name to the amalgamation circular—issued on the first of July—he spent two years in prison as a conscientious objector—I have it from his lips about this one big union plan, and I will ask you to give me an opportunity to show you plain that it means destruction.

"A delegate: Move that the resolution be adopted.

"A delegate: I second it.

"Grand President: It has been regularly moved and seconded that the resolution be adopted—all in favor show by the usual raising of hands.

Contrary. None.

Motion carried.

Resolution No. 64 called for "Cooperation between the various railway unions." It was evidently one of the resolutions that by passing, the administration hoped, to get a divided decision on the amalgamation question, but the rank and file delegates were watching. The committee moved the adoption of this innocuous resolution, and then the delegate from No. 310 rose and said:

"We have already adopted three resolutions on amalgamation, what's the idea of bringing this up? I am opposed to the resolution.

"No. 914: (An administration henchman) I am quite satisfied, Mr. President, that it will not be necessary for me to rise to this floor to [illegible] We are for co-operation, but we are not for the One Big Union.

"Grand President: Vote the resolution down or approve them is the privilege of the floor, and get the results desired by the delegates.

"Mr. Carroll: Yesterday we adopted a resolution approving the amalgamation of the sixteen standard railway organizations, and as this body has already gone on record favoring amalgamation of the sixteen standard railway organizations into one—I submit to you that this one is out of order.

"Grand President: The chair feels that this resolution is in perfect order subject to the action of this convention, either to approve or not approve.

"Lodge 1071: Just for information—is it not a fact the first resolution, Mr. President, yesterday—Mr. President wasn't it signed by the Grand President—. Will the record show that?

"A delegate: Is this for cooperation on amalgamation?

"Grand President: That can be seen by the records, Brother. Delegate, proceed.

"Mr. Hemingway: Does the chair consider if this resolution was passed that it would conflict with the one that was passed yesterday?

"Grand President: No, I do not.

"A delegate: Can I have a reading of the resolution that was passed yesterday on the question of amalgamation?

"Grand President: All this is in- [illegible] Law and Order, and I believe it is the intention of the delegates [illegible] people at home to be orderly. Since I have been here I have noticed that there are a good many of the delegates who are not representing the people back home. I want all those at least whose hearts are right. I want you men to open up your eyes, and to open your ears, and to open up your hearts to the constitutional rights and give me the closest attention that you can, every one of you. I don't know that I will ever address you on a matter that is so close to my heart—the matter of placing you right in the way of the trade union movement in America. The way of law and order and constitutional proceeding. I look into your faces, men and women, and I believe it is the desire, as I stated that most of you want this organization conducted along constitutional lines, for that reason—

"Chorus of delegates: Sit down!

"Grand President: Your time is up, Brother.

"Delegates: Question. Question.

"Grand President: We will vote on the motion—all those in favor of the adoption of that resolution, show by the usual raising of hands.

[illegible] amalgamation committed to the same [illegible] policy [illegible], but the number of officials was decreased, the salary of the international president reduced from $15,000 per year to $8,400; the wages of executive-board members cut from $25 per day to $15, and the vice-president's salary reduced in proportion. The headquarters of the organization will be moved from Detroit to either Chicago or St. Louis.

The defeat suffered by the reactionaries at Detroit is the first real intimation to the trade union bureaucracy that the amalgamation movement consists of something more than sentiment and resolutions. The Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes is numbered among the five largest unions in the American Federation of Labor. The victory won by the amalgamationists in that organization will give new hope and enthusiasm to the other railway workers; and will have a far-reaching effect on the whole American labor movement. It is the most significant occurence for a decade, so far as the labor movement is concerned.

There is much scurrying around and calling of conferences in the headquarters of international unions since the Detroit convention. The continual adoption by state federations of amalgamation resolutions by overwhelming majorities is now seen to be the result of a new movement that has taken a firm hold on the hearts and minds of the intelligent workers in the organized labor movement.

More than one international officer today is echoing the statement made by one of them recently at a conference of union heads and organizers: "Save your money, boys, amalgamation is coming!"

cussion whatsoever except from the platform, and that could hardly be called either discussion or oratory. The resolution on light wine and beer was carried by an overwhelming majority. Late in the evening Resolution 27 was reported by the committee on organization for non-concurrence. A couple of delegates who no doubt represented the rank and file, timidly rose up to defend it, with the result that within a very few minutes the convention was boiling with excitement, especially after one delegate asked the secretary of the Committee on Organization if a like recommendation to non-concur would be made on Resolution No. 57, which was much more comprehensive.

This delegate was told very shortly that the same recommendation would be meted out to Resolution No. 57.

This caused a sensation and the hour of adjournment drawing near the officers of the federation took full advantage of that situation and adjourned the convention in the midst of the discussion until the next morning.

An attempt had been made earlier in the day to make the election of officers the order of business at 10 o'clock the next morning. This was defeated on motion of one of the progressives in the convention.

After adjournment and thru the night frantic efforts were made to block the passage of Resolutions 27 and 57, so that when the convention reconvened on the morning of Friday the 13th, the fakirs were very confident of defeating these resolutions.

The day previous the storm of approval of the principle of amalgamation arising amongst the rank and file delegates of the convention so took the fakirs by surprise that not one of them dared take the floor.

However, on Friday morning Adolph Kummer, president of the Cincinnati Labor Union and chairman of the Committee on Organization which recommended non-concurrence on Resolution No. 27, arose to speak in support of the Committee's recommendation.

He stated that he was not going to exert himself; however, before he got fairly well started his voice reverberated thru the immense auditorium like the bellowing of a bull telling the delegates that the American Federation of Labor had ruled that they were already on record with a policy covering this proposition.

He of course referred to the decrepit resolution of 1905, and intimating that it was not the function of the state convention to tell the American Federation of Labor or its affiliated international unions what to do.

However, his remarks were received as noise, and immediately upon his sitting down half a dozen delegates were on the floor in support of the resolution and against the recommendation of the committee.

The miners, printers, and machinists reiterated their stand of the previous afternoon, and shortly afterwards the convention by a large majority turned down the report of the Committee to non-concur, and by a similar majority endorsed Res. No. 27. Afew resolutions of no great importance were then introduced, reported on favorably and passed without any discussion. After which in an air of tenseness and expectancy, the following Res. No. 57 was read by the Secretary of Committee on Organization with the recommendation to non-concur.

Inasmuch as the real discussion and fight had developed on Res. No. 27. A few resolutions of no spoke in favor of No. 27 mentioned that they were for No. 57 as being the real thing, the discussion in favor of it when it was actually introduced was of a mild character. However one of the higher men of the machine was forced to take the floor in defending the Committee's report.

He was obviously scared in doing so, but no doubt had to do the bidding of the old guard. His remarks were received as being humorous and very shortly the convention by a tremendous majority again turned down the recommendation of the committee on motion by the same majority approved the resolution.

In view of the fact that the Ohio State Federation of Labor is one of the most conservative and reactionary in the United States, this action is very significant because it comes from the rank and file.

The leadership of the Ohio State Federation of Labor is absolutely dead insofar as mental leadership is concerned. The one issue that had at all any interest for the rank and file delegates, and which was continually played up by the officers and speakers who appeared before the convention, was Workmen's Compensation. This is, of course, a vital matter in the lives of the workers of Ohio, and the fakirs have seized upon it as being an issue that is more or less harmless and at the same time gives them a continual topic of conversation and creates the idea that they are achieving something.

From the action of this convention, it is apparent that the rank and file of the workers composing the unions affiliated with the Ohio State Federation of Labor are not going to be satisfied with all this talk about Workmen's Compensation, especially in view of the fact that they have to be crippled or lose their lives to get the benefit of it.

The workers of Ohio like every other state in the Union are absolutely upon their toes demanding some real attempts be made to bring the warring crafts together, so that they can present a united front against the onslaughts of the highly organized employers.

The Socialist Party and the Second and 2½ Internationals

By ISRAEL AMTER

One year ago, the Socialist Party declared it to be its supreme task to build up an organization, which, once its powers were collected, could then consider the matter of international affiliation.

It is true that to have affiliated with any international organization would have meant merely to add the ciphers of a practically non-existent organization to a list of membership.

It was surely the task of the "S. P." to build up its organization; but how could any working class organization really reconstruct its forces when it abjured international relations, which alone will enable a labor organization to exist and fight! Similarly to the American Federation of Labor, the "S. P." decided to remain aloof from "international complications," and build up the revolution alone.

The last convention of the "S. P." however, recognized the untenability of such an attitude. The matter of relations was reconsidered and a desire to affiliate with the 2½ International expressed. Good friends Hillquit, Lee and Panken were despatched to the conference of the 2½ International in Vienna to join up the party with that body. And thus the "S. P." of America became an integral part of the 2½ International with good friends Hillquit and Lee on the Executive Committee of that august body.

But alas and alack! The "S. P." wanted to be a real revolutionary party. It did not want to have anything to do with the reactionaries—with the yellows who betrayed the masses. No! The "S. P." had held up the banner of opposition to the war, and, altho Berger had bought Liberty Bonds, London had continually failed to vote against the War Budget, Lee had voted for a memorial arch to American soldiers who shot down Russian workers who defended their Soviet Republic, altho the Party had done nothing to resist the war except to expel those who demanded that it act and not talk so much—still the party was a "revolutionary" party.

When Kerensky took office, the "S. P." was jubilant. When Kerensky went out and the workers under the Bolsheviki took power, the "S. P." hesitated, became critical—it had not been done in the orthodox socialist fashion—a la "S. P." of America.

When the war broke out, the "S. P." first criticised, then excused the Social-Democrats of Germany for their betrayal of the working masses. The "S. P." excused the socialists of every country for becoming nationalists of the rankest order and outdoing their capitalist masters in patriotism.

But what living worker could excuse the criminal conduct of the German Social-Democratic leaders, who handed over the party, body and soul, to German militarism! What living worker would excuse the active co-operation of the socialists of Belgium and France who entered the governments of their masters and carried on the most intense war activity? The ten million dead are the accusers of these betrayers of the working class!

Vandervelde, royal minister of Belgium, Troelstra, aide to Her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, Branting, Premier of Sweden; the socialist cooperation in France; the honors had been too great for the socialists of the world. They succumbed in the embrace of working-class prostitution to capitalist desires!

When the German revolution occurred, the Socialists again jubilated. At last a socialist party would succeed to power, to rule in the orthodox socialist fashion, according to the books! The socialists of Germany did rule; a socialist president acting for and in behalf of the capitalists of Germany! Ebert and Stinnes, the eight-hour day for the workers and unlimited control and profits for the capitalists! The German workers began to see the betrayal of the revolution. Liebknecht, Luxemburg, Mehring! Leaders of the workers who began to rebel against the conditions that the socialists were imposing upon them in behalf of the capitalists! Ever worse conditions resulted, more exploitation under the lash of the socialist-bourgeois government with a socialist president and a socialist minister of war! Ebert, Noske, Scheidemann! These names represent the most hateful that the workers of any country can conceive.

The murder of Liebknecht and Luxemburg by the socialist butchers who sat in governmental office was followed by the shooting down of thousands of striking workers in the streets of Berlin, in Saxony and Bavaria. Ever greater tyranny, more exploitation in behalf of capitalist profit, and to-day the workers of Germany stand face to face with the probable loss of the eight-hour day, the last relic of the "revolution" that the socialists brought them.

And the socialists of Italy! Betrayers of the uprising in 1920! Since then, one of their leaders, Mussolini, has become the head of the Fascisti, the Ku Klux Klan of Italy, killing the workers, destroying their buildings and plants and disrupting their organizations. The socialists of Poland, with Pilsudski at their head, who accepted French gold to make war on the Russian Soviet Government. A single line of treachery to the working class of the world!

The Social-Democrats of Germany, to be sure, belong to the Second International—in fact they are the leading spirits of that body. The Independent Socialists of Germany, the Independent Labor Party of England, the Socialists of France and the Social-Democrats of Austria are far more "revolutionary." They belong to the Second-and-a-Half International. They believe in the dictatorship of the proletariat, but it must come ever so mildly, sweetly, with as little disturbance to the present order of things as possible. They are sympathetic to Soviet Russia, without promoting any action in support of her. The grand vacillators whom time was bound to eliminate!

And time is eliminating them. Kautsky, Bernstein, Crispien and Breitscheid, "theorists" and "revolutionists" of the 2½ International, have clasped hands with the butchers of Berlin, Scheidemann, Ebert and Noske! The Social-Democrats and Independents have united into the United Social-Democratic Party of Germany. This is but the prelude to the unity of the Second and the Second-and-a-Half International!

Thus, thru affiliation to the 2½ International, the Socialists of America will return to the fold of the Second International. The murder of Liebknecht and Luxemburg, the slaughter of the German workers, yes, even the betrayal of the eight-hour day w... be forgiven. In the name of unity—for the war and against the war—for the dictatorship (the official stand of the 2½ International), against the dictatorship (the American Socialists and the German Social-Democrats)! What are the odds? The war has been over long enough for the workers to forget.

But the workers will not forget. The call of the Third International is reaching the workers. Unity of the 2nd and the 2½ International reveals the ferment that this call has caused. Neither the 2nd nor the 2½ International can stand alone. The capitalist governments recognize that the 2nd International is the best support of the counter-revolution. Thru the bodies affiliated to the 2nd International and thru the Amsterdam Trade Union International, which stands in close relation to it, the capitalists have built up power in Europe since the war.

The workers who have had faith in these two Internationals, and especially the American workers who still believe in the Socialist Party will at last have their eyes opened. The murderers of the working class, royal ministers and premiers are hardly fit leaders for the workers. Ebert, Scheidemann, Hillquit, Schlesinger, Kautsky, Adler, Noske, Lee, Pilsudski, Bernstein, Daszinski—what lovely company!

The Communists of America welcome this unity of the 2nd and 2½ Internationals and congratulate the leaders of the Socialist Party on their open embrace of the counter-revolution.

The American Legion Meets

The annual bacchanal known as the convention of the American Legion is being held in New Orleans. And New Orleans is trying to live up to the reputation established last year by Kansas City, where booze ran like water and where the revelry never ceased.

Mayor Andrew J. McShane told the visitors on the opening day that the city was theirs, "the French quarter, new New Orleans and everything." The only thing missing was the gambling halls and the saloons. The gamblers declared that they were too patriotic to accept Legion money and would remain closed for a week. From newspaper reports the Legion delegates and visitors brought their own gambling paraphernalia, consisting mostly of dice, as crap games were in full blast in the lobbies and on the mezzanine floors of the principal hotels.

The saloons were closed by a federal court order procured by the prohibition commissioner for reasons we are not familiar with, unless it was to arouse the particular ire of labor-skate George L. Berry, vice-president of the Legion and who also befouls with his vile presence the chair of president of the Pressmen's Union. This odious specimen, who was convicted of embezzling funds from his own union and who by fraud and trickery retained his job as head of the union after he had been defeated by referendum vote, was called upon to respond to the address of welcome and declared that the Legion had been insulted by the Federal authorities who were responsible for the injunction that closed the booze parlors.

Berry is a candidate for the presidency of the Legion and defends booze in order to secure votes. Samuel Gompers, another booze champion, is also to appear before the convention very soon in order to propagandize an alliance between his reactionary machine and the Legion.

It will be remembered that at the Cincinnati convention of the A. F. of L. both Gompers and Berry made overtures to the Legion for an alliance.

There is a sinister motive behind this move of the A. F. of L. officialdom that will bear the closest scrutiny by the rank and file of labor. It does not require profound knowledge of history to perceive in this rapprochement a conspiracy to launch the American fascisti in order to crush the growing militancy in the labor movement.

The widespread agitation in the labor movement in favor of more militant measures against the exploiters of labor has alarmed Gompers and his reactionary aggregation, so he reaches forth his palsied hand to grasp the bloody fist of the American White Guard, whose whole career has been one of criminality against labor.

In a letter addressed "to all legionnaires" and published in the official program of the convention the old buzzard suggests a "soldier-labor alliance," which in reality means an alliance of the officer-controlled Legion with the bureaucracy of the A. F. of L. against the labor movement of the nation.

Wolfe Lindenfeld has fallen upon evil days in Warsaw, Poland, where he is supposed to have given the representatives of Detective "Bill" Burns a 10,000 word confession on the Wall Street explosion. Wolfe has now been arrested charged with obtaining $900 from unsuspecting persons for whom he promised to get American passport vises. Burns should at least school his pupils to keep out of the toils of the law even if they cannot refrain from the enjoyable pastime of law-breaking.

FIGHTING THE GAG

An appeal to over 800 lawyers associated with the American Civil Liberties Union to take free of charge any and all cases arising under the clauses of the injunction against the railway shopmen which restrict freedom of speech, press and assembly has been sent out by the officers of that organization.

The Union has already offered aid directly to each of the persons so far arrested under these clauses, and will supply bail, defense funds and organized support wherever practicable.

LOS ANGELES—Harry Clayton, Roy Leonard and Lawrence Gross will be tried here for criminal syndicalism Oct. 31. Attempt of the court to postpone the trial till Jan. 4, keeping the defendants in jail in the meanwhile, was frustrated by the defense. Claude Erwin, arrested recently in Long Beach will probably be tried at the same time.

Lectures in Brownsville.

The Brownsville Branch of the Workers Party opened its winter lecture course last Sunday night with its hall at 296 Sackman st. crowded. J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The Worker, spoke on "What Constitutes Revolutionary Working Class Action".

White Uprising Crushed

By SETH NORDLING

The flames of discontent fostered by MacMillan, Reynolds and Bechtold flamed into open revolt on the date of publication of the first issue of the Daily Worker.

While the proletariat rejoiced over the new weapon added to its arsenal the forces of disorder seized on the occasion to make a last desperate attempt to overthrow the dictatorship and establish their fake democracy on its ruins.

While the editor was taking an afternoon nap and the strident voices of newsboys selling the Worker would be heard in the streets a band of terrorists led by MacMillan raided his office, seized him and attempted to rush him into a dungeon and hold him for ransom.

They almost succeeded. Most of the administration forces were asleep, but Major Sullivan was unexpectedly awake. As he walked back and forth the Rue de Bathtub, smoking a cigar, he saw the editor struggling in the arms of three desperadoes. Without dropping his cigar he sounded the alarm and blocked their path. Like Horatius on the bridge he shouted, "Thou shall not pass."

He held his ground until Generals Harrison and Krumbein brought up the reserves. From then on the result of the battle was not in doubt.

The contestants on both sides fought bravely, but justice triumphed, as it always does, ("in the movies") and Reynolds and MacMillan were taken prisoners. They were both seriously wounded.

Reynolds was banished from the jail and MacMillan put in irons. Bechtold fled but was discovered hiding on the roof. He renounced his former colleagues and is now released on parole.

Major Sullivan lost a collar button during the encounter and the collision of O'Flaherty's nasal appendage with the lighted end of a cigar gave that organ a rummy appearance. In behalf of the masses Erickson, Mihelic and Tallentire denounced the rebels and pledged their loyalty to the administration.

TEMPERAMENTAL POET ATTEMPTS SUICIDE

The inmates of the jail were thrown into a state of excitement this morning on hearing muffled roars from the cell occupied by Norman Tallentire, poet and poker sharp.

Jake Shakerautoky, of Ukrainia, his next door neighbor, burst open the door of the cell from which the mysterious sounds issued and found its occupant at the point of death with a heavy horse blanket wrapped around his neck.

After he was released from the blanket, he seized a milk bottle and rushed out into the corridor shouting, "Damn those poker sharps, this is no place for a minister's son."

It was learned that he lost $3 at the poker game the previous evening. Caleb Harrison who was the heaviest winner kept his cell bolted.

According to Tallentire's statement to the Daily Worker representative he was the victim of a gang of confidence men who unknown to him used a deck of cards containing four jokers.

The joke was on Tallentire. He is now confined to his cell, the victim of nervous hysteria. All dangerous weapons were removed from his reach. The jail physician has barrell all free verse poetry (?) from the jail while the patient is convalescing.

Great International Sporting Event Ended—Angora Bearcat Beats Greek Banana—Poincare, Lloyd George and Lenin Referees

By BILL DUNNE

ANGORA (by wireless). Since I fought Pug Nosed Kelly, champion bruiser of the Anaconda Mining Company, in 1908, I have witnessed many ring battles but never have I eyed a more interesting fistic encounter than that which was staged in the great amphitheater in Asia Minor between Kemal Pasha known as the Angora Bear cat and General Avoirdupois, the famous Greek Banana.

Betting on the fight was indulged in freely on an international scale with the odds in favor of Kemal Pasha.

Lenin bet his precious volume of Das Kapital on Kemal, Lloyd George recklessly bet Thrace and all the Balkans on the Greek while Poincare bet the French American debt on the fighting Turk.

Eamon De Valera was willing to bet Belfast on the Turks but this was turned down by the Musselman who thought De Valera was trying to put something over on them. They did not want any more trouble.

The battle opened with the Greek landing an uppercut under Kemal's mustache. The Turks squinted and countered with a kick in the shins which severely skinned the Banana. John Bull shouted "Good" but Lenin hit him on the head with Theses on Tactics. This ended John's interference. It was Kemal's round.

The second round opened with the Greek Banana reading a proclamation accusing the Turks of murdering 120,000 Greeks. Kemal did not move an eyelid and surprised the fans by kicking the Greek half way across Asia Minor. Kemal's round.

The Third round. It was no longer a fight it was slaughter. John Bull protested against the violation of the Marquis of Queensberry rules, threatened to call out the American army and organize a caucus against Lenin and Kemal. Lenin simply said, "Damn your caucuses, go right ahead." The Greek could not leave his corner. John Bull claimed his foot slipped therefore he was entitled to the decision. France and Russia put up a united front and John surrendered. The battle was over. The Angora Bear Cat was victorious.

John Bull promptly paid his bets. He turned over Thrace and other Greek possessions to the Turk. The gate receipts go to Russia, France gets Kemal's gloves as a compensation for the loss of the lightweight championship of the World to Battling Ski. Everybody is fairly satisfied but the Greeks.

LERNER DASHES AWAY

While Max Lerner was delivering a lecture on "How to determine the value of a commodity" in which he used Erickson as a standard of value, a deputy sheriff shouted, "Lerner, get your hat and coat." Max in his haste to leave us, mistook the cuspidor for a hat, one of Bechtold's socks for a necktie, dropped his lighted cigar on Krumbein's foot and decamped with the paper which was purchased for the next issue of the Daily Worker.

Lerner travelled so fast that he was back to where he started from within half an hour. At the rate he travelled he should have made a round trip of the world by now and be back in Berrien County for the hearing on the 26th.

[illegible] Celebration at Lexington Opera House

The 5th Anniversary of the Russian Revolution and the opening of the 4th World Congress of the Communist International will be celebrated by the workers of New York, Tuesday, Nov. 7, Election Night, at the Lexington Opera House, 67th St. and Third Ave.

The intentions were to hold the celebration at the smaller Yorkville Casino, Sunday, Nov. 5th. The "Freiheit", however, planned to hold a celebration Nov. 7th and to avoid confusion and possible conflict it was decided to combine the two and hold one grand demonstration at the Lexington Opera House, Tuesday evening, Nov. 7th.

The combined celebration under the auspices of Local New York, Workers Party, and the "Freiheit" will be the greatest celebration of the Russian Revolution ever held in this country. What lends additional interest to this year's celebration is the fact that the 4th World Congress of the Communist International opens on Nov. 7th. Had the Madison Square Garden been available for that day the celebration would have been there. As it is the Lexington Opera House which can accommodate about 4000 people will have to suffice.

In addition to prominent speakers delivering addresses, famous artists will perform. Sonia Ra'in will sing Russian and Ukrainian Folksongs. The Mandolin Orchestra of the Workmen's Circle will play. An International Chorus composed of Ukrainian, Finnish, Lettish, Lithuanian, and German singers will sing revolutionary songs.

Tickets will be 50 and 75 cents. All Nov. 5th tickets for the Yorkville Casino that were paid for can be exchanged if the additional sum is paid in. Tickets can be exchanged at the Local Office, 208 East 12th St.

Gitlow Disqualified in 12th District; Engdahl to Run Instead

Ben Gitlow, who is now in Sing Sing serving out his term to which he was sentenced because of his activities in the labor movement, was disqualified by the Board of Elections from running as candidate in the 12th Congressional District.

J. Louis Engdahl will make the race instead.

The campaign in that district promised to be an interesting and exciting one as the Workers Party has a great deal of support among the workers living there.

The fight will be between the opportunism of the yellow Socialist Party typified by Meyer London and the revolutionary working class principles of the Workers Party expressed by Comrade Engdahl.

Educational Activities of Local New York to Start in November

The educational committee of the Local has outlined a comprehensive plan for the educational work in New York. The best part about the plan is that it will be carried out.

A central school for all party members and for all workers will begin functioning in November. M. J. Olgin is to give a 25-session course in Marxian Economics. Ludwig Lore, a 12 session course in the European Labor and Socialist Movement. Benj. Glassberg is to give a 12-session course in American Social and Industrial History. Classes will be arranged in other subjects as soon as competent instructors will be obtained.

Local to Hold Dance Thanksgiving Eve., Wednesday, Nov. 29th

The lighter part of the activities of the Local are not forgotten. A Dance and Novelty Ball has been arranged for Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, Nov. 29th, at the Lyceum, 86th St. and Third Ave.

Comrade Blankfield who is chairman of the Entertainment Committee is an expert in arranging affairs and let no party member or sympathizer who wants to have a rousing good time make any arrangements for Thanksgiving Eve except to come to the Workers Party Dance.

Italian Branches in Campaign

A city-wide campaign has been inaugurated by the Italian Branches of the Workers Party thruout greater New York. The committee in charge has already obtained the co-operation of several well-known speakers. Outdoor meetings will be held in all Italian districts.

The following candidates and speakers will appear: Luigi Antonini, General Secretary of the Waist Makers' Union, Local 89, and candidate for Congressman in the Bronx; Frank Bellanca, Editor of Il Lavoro, organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; Tina Cacici, Organizer A. C. W. of A.; Salvatore Iarossi, candidate for Assemblyman for the second Assembly district; Ignazio Camarda, National Secretary Italian Federation of the Workers Party; Giovanni Sala, organizer A. C. W. of A., and Ettore Frisina, campaign manager.

The campaign got under way with a huge open air rally Monday night at 187th St. and Camberling Ave. Fully 1,000 workers listened to Frank Bellanca, J. Louis Engdahl, Ettore Frisina, A. Presi and A. Di Biasi.

[illegible] approaches the fifth anniversary of the revolution that brought her into being, assured of her place as a world power among the nations.

The Turkish successes have had something to do with stripping the Paris Allies of their diplomatic and military offensive. But the biggest factor making of Soviet Rule a power demanding recognition, is the rapid economic recovery of the First Workers' Republic.

If Soviet Russia were in need of alms from capitalism she would not have rejected the Urquhart Concession for opening the Ural mines.

Instead she uses this concession as a weapon to force British recognition and to secure a seat at the conference for the settlement of the Near East question, where she will demand freedom of commercial navigation thru the Dardanelles.

"We are not making threats and are not rattling the sword," is the way George Tchitcherin, Soviet Foreign Minister, puts it. "But we do insist upon proper consideration in all questions relating to the Near East, particularly the commercial freedom of the straits."

The Soviet spokesmen point out that Russia has recovered and is a world power to be reckoned with. Russians believe that the action of the Allies in blockading the straits, thereby cutting off trade from southern Soviet ports, "while we are striving to reestablish our economics by our means despite the failure of Genoa and the Hague conferences to help us, is very unjust, and we will act accordingly."

The Berlin Communist daily, Rote Fahne (Red Flag), in commenting on Moscow's refusal to ratify the Urquhart pact, says: "Without complete recognition of the Soviet Republic there will be no more business contracts or concessions. Soviet Russia has power to force capitalist states into recognition."

Workers thruout the world will greet Soviet Russia in thunder tones as the sixth year of Soviet Rule dawns. They see in its growing power, as confessed by retreat after retreat on the part of capitalist forces, the approaching day of their own deliverance.

The Work Goes On

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The latest stunt of the department of justice, the Michigan red raid, in which William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg and 18 others were arrested and charged with violation of the Michigan criminal syndicalist law, does not seem to be having the effect anticipated by those staunch defenders of American liberties—Attorney General Daugherty and William J. Burns.

The Locomotive Engineers Journal, official organ of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in its issue of October 19th makes the following comment headed "Daugherty's Palmeresques":

"William Z. Foster and his Trade Union Educational League have been getting a little more than their share of the brunt of official idiocy. Evidently feeling some alarm at the progress of the league, the powers-that-be seem to be determined to crush it or its leading spirit. Their first stunt, running Foster out of Denver on August 6th at the order of Adjutant General Hamrock, who boasted that "no law need be consulted", has been followed by equal intelligence and sagacity. Following a train wreck on August 20th at Gary, Ind., the league's headquarters were raided for evidence to connect it up with the wreck, and so for as one could tell from newspaper accounts, the evidence was overwhelming. This mischievous maligning of Foster was smeared over by the retraction of the charges made against him appearing on inside and obscure pages of a few dailies.

Another attempt to "get" the league came on August 22d, with the arrest of more than a score of alleged communists in the Michigan woods, gathered there at a supposed convention. Foster was sought as a runaway criminal violator of the Michigan anti-syndicalism act, and is now held under $10,000.00 bond in Michigan, altho official evidence now proves that he was in Chicago at the time of the so-called illegal meeting. The first annual convention of the Trade Union Educational League held in Chicago late in August was treated to another raid, Palmeresque style, when the audience was combed for participants in the alleged communist convention in Michigan.

"If Attorney General Daugherty wants to make a national martyr out of Foster, and spread his teachings from one end of the continent to the other, he has chosen the most direct road. If what Mr. Foster teaches is false, then the less said about it the better, for folly soon succumbs to a natural death. But if what he propounds is economic truth, then all the persecutions from Pilate to Palmer cannot suppress it. Perhaps Attorney General Daugherty, like his predecessor, sees red things at night. If so, we suggest that he retire to a nerve sanitarium, or else begin prosecution of the war fraud grafters for a change."

The Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, at their recent convention held in Detroit seem also to have taken the action of the agents of American capitalism with reverse English. At this gathering, despite the fevered protests of President Grable, the delegates by something like 4 to 1 adopted a resolution for amalgamation of the sixteen railway organizations—the program sponsored by the Trade Union Educational League headed by Foster.

The Michigan case has aroused new interest in the program of the League and it is becoming the ordinary thing for labor bodies to endorse the amalgamation plan and select committees of action to further it.

Nothing like this has been witnessed before in the American labor movement. It is beginning to look like the liberties of a score of militant workers is a small price to pay for the awakening of the rank and file of organized labor in the United States.

Local Greater New York Prepares for Big Dance On Eve of Thanksgiving

The Workers Party, Local Greater New York, is arranging one of the biggest affairs since it was organized. It has secured the large Lyceum, 3rd Ave. and 86th St. for THANKSGIVING EVE. A first class orchestra will insure the comrades good music for dancing.

The committee had great success with selling tickets to members of various unions. It is comparatively easy. You just have to tell them it is the Workers Party running the Dance, and the rest is easy. There are hundreds of sympathizers who will be glad to come if only notified of the affair. The admission is reasonable. 50 cents per ticket.

Every comrade ought to see that this dance is made a big success. Every one must be on the job from now on selling tickets. Some branches took 500 tickets. Every comrade must come and try to bring some of his friends with him. If this is done we can be sure of a big financial return.

This will be the BIGGEST BALL OF THE SEASON.

[illegible] Defeat the [illegible]

By MARGARET UND[illegible]

In most of the larger cities of this country, throngs of Lithuanian workers assemble in mass meetings to protest against the enactment of the proposed Johnson bill (The Registration and Naturalization Act). These mass meetings are held by the combined efforts of all Lithuanian workers' organizations. Resolutions of protest against the enactment of the bill are being adopted by unanimous vote.

The Lithuanian workers realize that the main purpose of the Johnson bill is to keep the working class of America divided by creating antagonism between the American born and the foreign born workers. The only chance to defeat this bill is the combined action of the workers of the United States, therefore the Lithuanian workers should not only call mass meetings by the joint effort of the Lithuanian organizations, but should bend their energies in influencing all working class organizations in their city to participate in the calling of such mass meetings.

In New York City two mass meetings were held under the joint auspices of 19 various Lithuanian organizations. In Chicago a great mass meeting was called jointly by 44 organizations. In the smaller cities similar mass meetings were held with good results.

The William Morris Choir of Glasgow, Scotland, refuses to sing "God Save the King," claiming it is "sanguinary nonsense." Do we hear that this is another anti-British plot prepared in Moscow?

Mustn't Make the Government Dance

If Ellis Island had any fears for Isadora Duncan, she seems to have lost them during the enthusiastic receptions she received at her Carnegie Hall performances in New York City.

At the conclusion of the fourth and last of her appearances, the New York Times tells us, she "wrapped herself in an enormous red flag and won a truly Soviet burst of applause," and that in spite of the anti-red flag law in New York State.

Miss Duncan has been making speeches after her dancing and on this occasion she is reported as saying:

"I was asked at Ellis Island if I came here to overthrow the government. I told them, 'No!' but that I would like to teach the government to dance. I want to teach the children, not to dance up here before rich, overfed people, but to have a new idea of life."

Miss Duncan also appealed for funds for the children of Moscow, which should bring down upon her the wrath of Herbert Hoover, who claims to have a monopoly of such activities.

Perhaps, if Miss Duncan gets her new idea of life into the heads of a sufficiently large number of children, they will in their turn, as they grow up, make this government dance, dance out of existence.

Miss Duncan is planning to appear at Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. We advise her to be careful of the anti-syndicalist laws of these states. No doubt the Burns' sleuth-hounds are camping on her trail. Miss Duncan may dance. But she must not try to make the government dance.

The standing army of the unemployed in Great Britain still registers 5,000,000 working men and women. No wonder Lloyd George was willing to risk a war with the Turks in the Near East. Anything to get the hungry millions to forget their misery as they are prepared for new agonies.

The Drive for Independent Action

Large groups of workers in increasing numbers are showing that they are not content to await the results of the November elections before declaring for independent political action of the working class.

Thus the New York Typographical Union, No. 6, or "Big Six" as it is called, on the eve of the election, declares that non-partisan political action has proved a flat failure. It was this Gompers' non-partisan action that was endorsed by the Chicago Conference, last February, and that comes up for consideration at the new conference called for December, after the elections.

It is well for all workers to consider the resolution as adopted by the big organization of the New York printers which reads:

> "Whereas the sixty-seventh annual convention of the International Typographical Union, held at Atlantic City, having placed itself on record in favor of the formation of a political labor party;
> "Be it resolved, That New York Typographical Union No. 6, in regular meeting assembled, heartily approves of such action, believing that recent experience points clearly to the absolute necessity of such a course, non-partisan political action having proved a flat failure as well as having a strong tendency to lower the quality of leadership in American labor unionism."

The theory of the Chicago Conference last winter was to give the Gompers' "reward and punish" idea a try-out at the November elections. This "try-out" has already resulted in considerable demoralization in labor's ranks, some of labor's officials being bought up by the Republican party, others by the Democratic party.

The action of the printers, and of other labor unions, already indicates that the Chicago Conference at its first meeting adopted a wrong policy, that it must revise its stand in favor of effective, independent political action of labor at the December gathering.

"The Red Army and Navy have completed their first manoeuvres," and I am very much satisfied," are words reported to have come from the lips of Leon Trotzky, Soviet War Minister. Which is the best kind of warning to the Allied imperialists to keep "Hands Off!" Soviet Russia.

Who Will Bleed for Gasoline?

The big brother of the Standard Oil Group, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, has announced a stock dividend of 400 per cent. This doubles the stock dividend of 200 per cent declared by "Socony," the Standard Oil Co. of New York.

This means that the stockholders owning the present $110,000,000 capitalization, will see their stock inflated to about $500,000,000 while 4,600,000 shares, value $115,000,000, "will be held in the treasury to meet the needs of the company as they arise."

It is declared that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is $52,000,000 richer as the result of this financial manoeuver that has sent Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey stock from $145 to $241 per share in a year. John D., Jr., owns 452,000 shares in this oil trust tentacle.

The strength of the Standard Oil Trust can well be judged thru its ability to divide among its stockholders such great amassed wealth. It is doing this after distributing 20 per cent dividends, or $5 a year on each $25 par value share.

This is the world power that reaches its greedy tentacles out into every corner of the world, that has its fingers in the oil wells of Mexico, and foments trouble there, as well as dabbling in the oil situation in Mesopotamia, Anatolia, Persia, and other countries of the Near East, where the struggle for oil threatens to develop into a new world war.

We may well ask, as we witness the growing power of the Standard Oil Trust, if the workers are ready to bleed for John D.'s oil and gasoline. They must be ready, if they allow John D.'s oil monopoly to live, to give of their blood in war that John D. may have new sources of production, that he may find and hold new markets to exploit. "Coal and iron" brought on the last war. "Oil!" will bring on the next.

This Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey is the largest of the tentacles of the old Standard Oil Trust that the government at Washington "busted."

Where the old oil trust was all body, we find that the present octopus, like every good octopus has sprouted long arms. The [illegible] of great wealth, is the Carter Oil Co. [illegible] the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana, [illegible] the Standard of Bolivia. It has [illegible] control which were incorporated in France, Holland, [illegible] Denmark, Germany, Canada, Roumania, and Italy, aside from companies which were incorporated in various states of this country.

So the possibilities that the Oil Trust offers for getting you into trouble on its behalf are almost limitless.

The offspring, or subsidiaries of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, are also healthy and growing. Two of these especially, the Humble Oil Co. of Texas, and the Imperial Oil Co. of Canada are said to be in good condition to declare stock dividends.

"Wall Street is inclined to believe," says the New York Times, "that further distributions thruout the Standard Oil group are now in order."

So just watch the Standard Oil octopus stretch itself. The Standard of New Jersey stock dividend makes the fourth this year. We have already told about the 200 per cent dividend of the Standard of New York. The Standard of California has announced a distribution of 100 per cent, and the Standard of Kentucky of 33⅓ per cent, small pickings beside the New Jersey showing.

It is these huge profits from the private ownership of oil and gasoline, of coal and iron, and other natural resources and the big basic industries, that rule in Washington, that dictate legislation and force declarations of war, wars to be fought by the workers for the dollars of their exploiters.

If you do not want to bleed for John D.'s gasoline wake up and join other workers in taking over all power in this and other countries, so that national and trust barriers will be swept away, and resources developed and industries operated for the common welfare and not for the sole purpose of pouring a golden stream of wealth into the lap of an idle, parasitic class.

Capitalism, the present social system, declares its dividends in gild edged stock certificates. Communism, the new social system, that is coming rapidly on the heels of passing capitalism, will declare its dividends in human happiness, in the laughter of merry-making children; for grown-ups the joy that comes from living a full life.

The Coming Election in England

An election is approaching in England. The date hasn't been decided as yet but the campaign speeches are already being made, and all sides are jockeying for position.

Austen Chamberlain, conservative leader, in a speech at Birmingham, declared the struggle to be one of "Coalition vs. Labor," and he is out in defense of the "coalition" and Lloyd George rule.

Chamberlain sounds the note of warning that the Labor Party, a coalition of all labor's forces, may win a majority of the seats in parliament if the anti-labor forces are divided. He declares:

> "And if thru our discussions and our differences the Labor Party obtains a majority, heavy will be the responsibility of those who have contributed to the result because they could not take a broad view of national obligations at a moment of national danger. (Cheers.)
> "I venture to warn you that if this happens it will not be the moderates of the Labor Party who will prevail. Direct action, which a strong national Government has been able to defeat, will triumph over a Government in which the leaders, as Clynes himself complains or explains, are not allowed to lead but must take their instructions in every crisis from the concourse or mass meeting."

With these threats Chamberlain works to develop a united front of the unionist (conservative) and liberal parties. It was this coalition that put the Lloyd George government into power, and has kept it in power when the war premiers of all the other Paris allies have lost their jobs and been forgotten, and the rulers in the central empires have been hurled from their thrones.

It is announced that the Labor Party will contest 400 seats. The Communist Party has withdrawn its candidates where the Labor Party is in the field, and will support the candidates of labor's united front.

"A general election is imminent," announces the Daily Herald, Labor. "The flowing tide is with labor, and if it is taken by the men and women workers thruout the country it will lead to a great electoral triumph."

If British labor wins this triumph, it is hoped that the men and women workers, who are now appealed to for their votes, will proceed to cleanse their ranks of social patriots of the type of Clynes, Henderson and Thomas, who fear to take their inspiration from the masses. Having won the majority let labor proceed to the erection of its own Soviet rule for the complete liquidation of British capitalism.

Capitalism Knows Its Enemies

Telegraphic communications between Morris Hillquit, of the "Socialist" Party, and Secretary of State Hughes, at Washington, give us the information that Jean Longuet, French "Socialist," is free to come to the United States for his lecture tour under "Socialist" auspices.

For weeks the "Socialist" forces have been very much chagrined that a spokesman for their "100 per cent American" party should be denied admission.

Now that everything has been beautifully arranged, The Call proudly announces that "the admission of Longuet means that the (Harding) administration is disposed to get rid of such of its Wilsonian heritages as it can without offense to its right wing bigots."

That certainly sounds reassuring with the Burns-Daugherty raids in Michigan and Chicago, and the Daugherty injunction against the railroad shopmen, but a thing of yesterday.

Among those who attacked Longuet's entrance to the United States was Miss Mary G. Kilbreth, of the Woman Patriot, at Washington, who charged that Longuet once said:

"We absolutely unite in supporting our Russian comrades. We are fighting with all our strength against the miserable efforts of Paris and London to destroy the first great Socialist government the world has ever seen."

But Longuet has changed. He now attacks Soviet Russia. He is in the same class with Hillquit, Berger and Schlesinger. He has changed, just as the Socialist Party and The Call have changed from the days of 1917, when the Russian Revolution took place, almost in the same hours that the United States entered the world war.

It is these betrayers of Socialism who have changed. The Harding administration hasn't changed. The Republican party hasn't changed. Harding and the Republican party are just as adamant against revolutionary working-class action as Wilson and the democratic ever were.

But the Harding administration knows that the Socialist party, The Call and Longuet have changed, that they are harmless. Longuet is admitted as Burns puts a double cordon of sleuths around the U. S. A. to prevent any spokesmen of the Communist International or the Red International of Labor Unions from entering the country. Capitalism knows its friends and it also recognizes its enemies.

Governor Allen, of Kansas, is giving up his strike-breaking activities long enough to fight the introduction of H. G. Wells' "Outline of History," as a text book at the Kansas State Normal School. It is declared the book "hits at religion." Allen claims he is going to protect old institutions, even at the cost of calling out the militia. In the meantime more copies of Wells' "Outline of History" are being sold than ever before.

[illegible] Walsh as the defender, will be an historic one. It will go to the depths of the titanic clash between capital and labor in this country this year. Unwilling witnesses will be compelled to disclose the great forces that are in hiding, but which are directing the attack on Foster, Browder, Ruthenberg, Dunne and the others arrested.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., J. Ogden Armour, and a host of other big capitalists, still remember the searching painful cross-examination that they were compelled to undergo at Walsh's hands when the latter presided over the deliberations of the Industrial Relations Commission.

Labor unionists recall the splendid service that Mr. Walsh rendered the stockyard workers, the Colorado and Kansas miners and the workers everywhere in their fight against the organized exploiters of the nation.

He will conduct the defense not so much as a legal case coming to him as a part of his work but as a challenge to organized labor to defend itself against the vicious attacks of the bosses.

Berrien County will be the scene of one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in the courts of America. It will be one in which the campaign of the employers will be exposed to the public and the sordid game they are playing shown up in its true light. In such a task Labor Defense Council could not have selected a better champion than Frank P. Walsh.

Every possible weapon must be placed in Walsh's hands to help him carry on this fight. For this purpose funds are needed. Every reader of THE WORKER has received a contribution list to gather in the contribution of the workers everywhere.

Put this contribution list at work and keep it busy. If you have no list get in touch immediately with the Labor Defense Council, Room 307, Federation Bldg., 166 West Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

United States Senator Borah was given as one of the founders of the "American Sentinels." But when Borah came out for the political prisoners and for recognition of the Russian Government, he found "the Sentinels" fighting him. Borah is having a hard time co-ordinating his progressive views with his reactionary affiliations.

The Race to Electrify

The use of electricity is probably more common in the United States at the present time than in any other nation. In the Russia of the Soviets it is just beginning to have its day.

Yet there is developing what will be a very interesting race to see which nation makes the most progress in the use of this "white coal"; Soviet Russia, struggling to provide the workers and peasants with the latest form of power without profits accruing to itself, or the Capitalist United States, where great power trusts sell electricity as a means to declare dividends and enrich their already bloated stockholders.

Great plans are announced for the development of electric power in the United States. Frank E. Watts, New York, editor of the Electric Record, told the annual convention of the National Association of Electrical Contractors and Dealers, at Cincinnati, Ohio, that within the next six years 300 billion dollars would be spent on additional electrification.

This was music to the ears of these contractors and dealers. They no doubt immediately began to figure how much in profits that would mean to them.

Mr. Watts said, eight million homes are now wired in America, and that half of the remaining six million would be wired during the next few years. More profits, profits that will prevent those three million homes from being wired.

It was declared that $750,000,000 had been spent during the past year in new development of central power stations, that $4,000,000,000 would be spent during the next six years.

It is claimed that for every dollar the central power stations spent in development other people who make use of this service expend in buying motors, home appliance, etc., etc., an average of $80, every dollar of which carries its burden of profiteering.

That looks like a formidable lead for the Workers' Republic to overcome. But we believe the workers and peasants will do it.

They will do it because the whole plan of electrifying Soviet Russia is in the hands of the workers' government. That means that the plan to electrify is a centralized, national plan that is not crippled with the demand for stock dividends. It will be a national service, not a national hold-up. The workers' government will give something while here in the capitalist United States the government allows the power profiteers to take all they can get and, as the popular saying has it, "a little bit more."

Soviet Russia announced her plans for electrification several years ago. It was one of her first ambitions, halted by civil war, intervention, famine and plague.

The drive to electrify is now on, however, to make this white power drive all trains and ships, furnish light during the hours of darkness, not only in the offices of Lenin in the Kremlin, Moscow, but in the hut of the lowliest peasant on the slopes of the Urals or within the Arctic Circle; to put a phone at every fireside, electric stoves in every kitchen, electric lights on every highway, and electric power into the driving of every plow and other farm implement tilling the soil, planting the crops and reaping the harvests of food, for man and animal, in the Soviet Republic.

All Soviet Russia is developing the great desire to harness the white magic. The workers and peasants look to their government as an instrument to realize their dream of turning magicians and directing this great force to lift toil from their own shoulders.

American workers and farmers would also like to turn magicians to make the waterfalls, the rivers and the tides labor for them. But capitalism stands in between. Electric power flows thru wires, just as blood flows thru human veins, to make the wheels of industry turn that Wall Street may fill its golden chests with profits.

That is why Soviet Russia will be completely electrified before the capitalist United States. Russia of the workers and peasants will win the race to electrify, because the workers and peasants are accomplishing this task for themselves and not for the profiteers. And the workers of America, always proud to win, will ask why they lost. And in the day that the blame is laid at the door of the profiteers, the days of capitalism on this side of the Atlantic will be numbered, and the struggle for the new society—for Communism—will be on even here with the earnestness that always crowns its efforts with victory.

The big issue in the New Jersey campaign is whether the dry candidates really did drink wine at a "political banquet." And all that the New York Call can see in the very important convention of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, that voted for amalgamation, is found in the headline, Oct. 13, "OHIO LABOR FOR BEER."

Reports are now coming in that the anti-Soviet forces at Vladivostok have surrendered to the Red Army of the Siberian Republic. This comes on the heels of repeated "White" victories. Just as in the days of Denikin, Kolchak, Yudenitch, and all the other "white" hopes of the yesteryears.

CAMPAIGN ISSUES

(To show our broad-mindedness we have permitted the capitalist parties to print in our columns reasons why the workers should vote their particular ticket.—Editor.)

DEMOCRATS:—

Every worker should vote a straight Democratic ticket because the Republicans have been proven time and again to be as crooked as a cork screw. They are but a gang of thieves, robbers and scoundrels, and the American Labor Party is just as bad as they are.

REPUBLICANS:—

It is needless to say that the Democrats are high way robbers, crooks, charlatans and grafters—you all know that and therefore it is up to you to vote a straight Republican ticket. As for the American Labor Party it's but a miniature Democratic Party.

AMERICAN LABOR PARTY:

The old parties are hypocritic, corrupt, dishonest and crooked. They have always been and forever will reamin that way. Hence it is up to the workers to annihilate them and vote a straight American Labor Party ticket.

OUR REPLY:—

We fully agree with ALL of you, dear friends. Each and everyone of your above statements is correct.

"GOMPERS HITS PRESIDENT AS FOE OF LABOR"—HEARST HEADLINE

Its Interpretation by Easembay

"Now you stop it," said short Semke as he "hit" tall Warry with a chicken feather "You ought to spank the rail executives with the big stick instead of issuing injunctions against the poor striking workers. Had you done that it would enable me to brag that it was done thru my influence, as a progressive labor leader. But I know I can't say that, therefore I hit you. (Don't laugh, someone might see us.) Really, Warry, your injunction is not "right". Though the workers are dumb yet some of them may think. Those damned red radicals are after them every day trying to put some common sense into their craniums. Something very terrible might happen to me if I do not hit you . . . . at least in a newspaper headline" . . . .

"Labor and Capital must go hand in hand," agreed Warry.

To the tune of "United we stand, divided we fall," Samke and Warry marched off happily hand in hand. "Nevertheless, if you'll run for president next time, I'll again indorse you as Labor's Liberator and Friend said Semke and smiled on . . . .

ANSWERS HIGH PRIEST

"But, in that case, in what do your tactics differ from the tactics of Czarism?" we are asked by the high priests of Liberalism and Kautskianism.

You do not understand this, holy men? We shall explain to you. The terrorism of Czarism was directed against the workers. The police of Czarism throttled the workers who were fighting for the Socialist order. Our Extra-Ordinary Commissions shoot [illegible] who are striving to restore the capitalist order. FIVE YEARS OF VICTORY!

Russia, the Victor; Germany, the Victim, on the Fifth Anniversary of the Soviets, Nov. 7, 1922

Workers of America! Study carefully the conditions of the two nations, "RUSSIA, THE VICTOR" over allied capitalism, and "GERMANY, THE VICTM" of the Versailles Peace, on the Fifth Anniversary of the First Workers' Republic, in the accompanying declarations:

Cyril Brown, in a Berlin wireless to the New York Times, Oct. 23, states that "Chancellor Wirth this morning startled political circles by submitting for discussion at a Cabinet Council the question whether in view of the utter collapse of the mark Germany ought not to declare general reparation bankruptcy and default in payment in kind as well as in cash. He recently reiterated the popular slogan, 'FIRST BREAD, THEN REPARATIONS.'"

Gregory Zinoviev, chairman of the Communist International, told the Fifth All-Russian Trade Union Congress recently that, "The international position of the Soviet Republic is now stronger than ever. The First Workers' Republic has become an independent world power. The German Republic has declared to us that, under the oppression of the Treaty of Versailles, she stands on the verge of an abyss, and requested that we make this known to the Russian people!

International Capital Is Sinking Into Ruins! The Future Belongs to Us!

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV, Chairman of the Third (Communist) International

In what condition does the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Bolshevik Revolution find the country? The international position of the First Workers' Republic is stronger than ever. We can say this without fear of exaggeration. The Soviet Republic has become an independent world power. Even if we look only at the foreign events of the past weeks, we cannot fail to see that the international political position of our country has been strengthened. A few weeks ago the German Republic, headed by a bourgeois-menshevik coalition government, declared to us that Germany under the oppression of the Treaty of Versailles stood on the verge of an abyss, and requested that we make this known to the Russian people. This as well as other facts prove clearly how greatly our [illegible] has grown in the field [illegible] politics. The [illegible] with Japan [illegible]

The Versailles Treaty is cracking, and every day deals it fresh blows. The crisis in the East sharpens daily. No one can speak of a World Revolution which will be victorious only in Europe. It will only be a World Revolution when the hundreds of millions of the East rise against their oppressors. And as the revolt grows in the East, so does the importance of our country in the eyes of the Eastern peoples. It is therefore no exaggeration when we say that the international political posi-

Greetings! Victors!

This issue of THE WORKER is our Special Fifth Soviet Anniversary Edition. It is the first time that THE WORKER, established Feb. 2, 1922, only nine months ago, has had an opportunity to spread the anniversary greetings of the First Workers' [illegible]

On behalf of all our readers and sympathizers, THE WORKER sends its message of cheer to the victorious workers and peasants of the Soviet Republic, the only nation that has come victorious out of the great world war.

It is our only regret that this issue of our paper is not able to carry the words of our spokesmen to all the millions of toiling men and women of the United States, to give to them all its message of encouragement, and to arouse in them all an unconquerable desire to achieve their own victory over the black forces of capitalist reaction.

But the workers of America, today, are watching Raymond Poincare, premier of France, bitterest enemy of the Soviets, now humbly sending his emissary in the person of Edouard Herriot, the "radical Socialist" mayor of Lyons, to Russia, to plead for the opening of commercial relations.

Among the worst attacks levelled against the Workers' Republic by the world imperialist press have been those of the Paris Temps that now says:

> "To have a European policy we (France) must henceforth take account of Russia. Since the beginning of 1922 Russia has made her diplomatic re-entry into Europe."

It was only a few weeks ago, on Oct. 6th, that this same Paris Temps, in dealing with the participation of Soviet Russia in the Near East Conference, declared that:

> "The Government of Moscow is not recognized by the powers. It does not conform to the laws which control the relations between nations, and in consequence it would be difficult indeed to permit its representation at an international conference which would imply its recognition without its having fulfilled those conditions indispensable to recognition."

And in the wake of the Temps follows the Matin, nationalist organ, with an apology for the attacks of Imperialist France on Russian Soviet Rule, declaring that the real reason for the Russian desertion of the Allied cause was that the French government in 1918 refused to give its moral and material support to the army of Lenin and Trotsky. Clemenceau, who is soon to visit the United States, was that time head of the French government.

By this the Matin is no doubt trying to convey to the minds of its readers the idea that French Imperialism has fallen in love with Soviet Russia, trying to hide the fact that Moscow stands triumphant over Paris, preparing another crushing blow for West European capitalism.

Of great significance, too, is the fact that during this anniversary season the Red Army of the Republic of the Far East (Siberia), supported by Soviet Russia, is marching back into Vladivostok, so that Soviet Rule now stretches toward three oceans, the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Arctic.

The Japanese soldiers are withdrawing to the islands of the Mikado and taking with them the last White Guards of the Versailles Allies.

All of which prompts the New York Times, the American counterpart of the Paris Temps, to open up a campaign for the recognition of the Chita (Far Eastern Republic) Government, in spite of its "dubious relations with Moscow."

> "But there seems to be no doubt," continues The Times, editorially, Oct. 24, under the heading, "Russia and Vladivostok," "that it is the de facto government in its own territories, and that it is fulfilling the functions of government as satisfactorily as could be expected."

It then concludes:

> "A decision of this question (of recognition) must rest on careful balancing of all the factors involved, but it seems time to take it up once more for renewed and careful consideration."

Imperialist France, watching her crippled and despairing victim, Germany, falling into the arms of Soviet Russia, is knocking, bag in hand, at the front door of the Workers' Republic. The United States, fearing that her oriental rival, Japan, will get favorable trade concessions, is urged by The Times to get busy hammering at the back door of Soviet Rule, in far off Vladivostok.

In the meantime, not only Soviet Russia, but the Soviet Republics of Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan, have been invited to co-operate in the settlement of the problem of "The Straits" (Dardanelles), at the Near East Peace Conference called to assemble at Lausanne, Switzerland, Nov. 13.

We cannot help but repeat again the words of Gregory Zinoviev, chairman of the Communist International, that "International Capital is sinking into ruins! The future belongs to us!"

of Jewish "Forward" ...news Vicious Attack on ...ief Work for Soviet Russia

...the report of the impartial investigating committee, that inquired into the charges ...by Abraham Cahan, editor of the Jewish Daily "Forward," against the Friends of Soviet ...was revealed a couple of weeks ago, we thought it would silence Cahan and his whole ...of traducers of the men and women who have been conducting relief work in the United ...since appeals for help first came out of Russia.

The report was such a crushing refutation of the malignant charges emanating from this ...of Socialist Party malice that it was almost inconceivable that anyone would have the audac- ...to again question the motives of this organization.

But Abraham Cahan, desperate in face of the threat from the ranks of the militant workers that will eventually result in his exposure before his own readers as an enemy of the working class, does not dare admit that out of mendacity he conceived the infamous charges against the Friends of Soviet Russia in an effort to buttress his tottering political prestige. Since he does not dare openly oppose the personnel of the committee, which consisted of Roger N. Baldwin, chairman, of the American Civil Liberties Union; Robert Morss Lovett of the New Republic; Timothy Healy, of the Stationery Firemen's Union; Norman M. Thomas, of the League for Industrial Democracy; and Walter Nelles, attorney, he deliberately perverts their report and claims that it justifies his vile insinuations.

In a harangue that was reproduced in English in that organ of reaction, known as the New York Call, Cahan again refers to the Communists as union-breakers, thereby repeating the propaganda of Gompers and the entire retinue of the reactionary officialdom of the American labor movement. According to Cahan the entire labor movement protested against the selection of this investigation committee by the Friends of Soviet Russia, declaring that it is an unheard of thing for a defendant to appoint a "jury" to decide its own case. Cahan holds the notion that he, as a bitter enemy of Soviet Russia and of the Communist movement, should be permitted to select jurors from the camp [illegible] yellow Socialist Party [illegible] lies could be verified [illegible] committee, and thus [illegible] brain contortions [illegible] order to twist a d[illegible] tion of his infamy into an apparent vindication of his charges.

Cahan's Lie Nailed By Kalinin

In the screed published in the New York Call, Cahan makes the statement that:

"We still charge the Friends of Soviet Russia have been collecting money under false pretenses. They advertised broadcast that they were collecting funds for the starving people of Russia, whereas the funds they collected have largely been used for the building up of the Communist movement in this country and for breaking up the very unions that have contributed so generously to their funds."

At the very moment Cahan, thru his own publication the "Forward" and its twin in infamy, the English daily of the Socialist Party, the Call, were hurling their last venomous diatribe against the Friends of Soviet Russia, the president of Russia, M. Kalinin, was sending a message of congratulation to the Friends of Soviet Russia for the tens of thousands of lives of workers and their children that had been saved by the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of goods that had been shipped to the famine region for relief. The facsimile of the telegram appears on this page, with a translation which gives the lie to the assertion of the enemies of the relief work that funds collected are being used for Communist propaganda.

Cahan charges that all the 41 organizers engaged by the Friends of Soviet Russia were members of the Workers Party. He then adds that they were also members of nuclei in labor unions, "every one of whom was known to be working for the destruction of the Cloak Makers' Union, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, of the Furriers' Union, the Railroad Unions, the Miners' Unions and all the other radical unions, and of the Socialist Party."

When he accuses any class conscious worker, who possesses an elementary understanding of the history of the revolutionary movement and the infamous role of the Socialist Party of America in that movement, of desiring to destroy it he is stating a fact that will never be denied by any member of the Workers Party. But when he includes labor unions in the list with the Socialist Party he is defaming every labor organization in the United States and endeavoring to enlist their support in order to rescue the discredited Party of which he is a member. It is the duty of every militant to do all in his power to destroy the Socialist Party as an enemy of the working class, and it is also to the interest of every worker to endeavor to defend and strengthen the labor unions in order to develop them into more efficient organs of resistance against capitalism. The charge that the Communists are enemies of the organized labor movement originates from the reactionary officialdom of labor who well understand the significance of the amalgamation propaganda being conducted thruout the entire movement and which heralds the decline of this same leadership. Like all reactionary labor fakirs, Cahan interprets an attack upon himself and his treacherous policies as an attack upon the entire labor movement. It is a part and parcel of their inordinate egotism to visualize themselves as the entire labor movement.

It is amusing to see Cahan pretending to defend the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, considering his recent performance at the convention of that organization where he tried to indulge in some of his customary political shysterism and was promptly rebuked by Sidney Hillman, president of that organization. Since that time Cahan has endeavored to use the nefarious machinations of his clique to crush the Amalgamated, but has miserably failed. Instead of wrecking the Amalgamated, the members of that organization who are wise to his game have started a backfire against his sinister propaganda that in the end will wreck Cahan.

In another part of the screed Cahan wrote against the F. S. R. he declares that some of the funds might have been diverted for the printing and distribution of a leaflet "attacking the honesty and integrity of the officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers." The leaflet referred to is one that attacked the honesty and integrity of a few minor officials who are members of the Socialist Party and who were using the Cahan tactics of endeavoring to create dissention in the ranks of the entire organization. Cahan tried to convey the idea that an attack had been directed from Communist sources against the entire organization, when as a matter of fact it was simply an exposure of the trickery of some of Cahan's own satellites.

The principal reasons for Cahan's attack upon the Friends of Soviet Russia and other radicals, aside from his hatred of Russia and the desire indelibly implanted in his yellow heart to see capitalism re-established in that nation, is a frantic effort to recover his waning influence among the Jewish workers in the needle trades of the United States. His influence in the Amalgamated has practically vanished, while among a considerable proportion the rank and file of the International Ladies' Garment Workers his very name is held in contempt. His insane desire to throttle the rising tide of militancy and to defend the most reactionary traditions of the American Federation of Labor has started Ca- [illegible] ganizers are all members of the Workers Party, it is stated in the report of the investigating committee that they are all either members or sympathizers. But the report goes on to state that:

"There is no evidence offered to show that any of the organizers of the Friends of Soviet Russia did not faithfully discharge his duties in collecting funds for famine relief and turning in all such funds to the organization. There is no evidence that any of them diverted such funds collected for famine relief to political purposes."

It is hardly logical to presume that an organization endeavoring to aid the famine sufferers of Russia would employ avowed enemies of Soviet Russia and its policies, such as the hangers-on of the Jewish Forward and other capitalistic rags. It would undoubtedly have been more to Cahan's liking if Mr. Samuel Gompers had been permitted to appoint the organizers of the Friends of Soviet Russia, with the approval of the editorial staff of the "Forward". But since the famine relief work is a serious matter, the officials of the Friends of Soviet Russia took the necessary precautions to assure themselves that the people they paid to carry on the relief work would be sympathetic with the starving population of the famine districts. To have done otherwise would have been criminal folly and would have played directly into the hands of the Gomperses and Cahans so that the relief work would have been sabotaged from within.

Perverting the Report

Another piece of studied mendacity on the part of Cahan is his assertion that the report vindicates his charge that funds were used to purchase advertising space in Communist papers in order to subsidize these publications. He deliberately distorts the report of the committee to read "an undue proportion of the advertising has gone to the [illegible] Communists)." When in reality it stated just the opposite. The exact words of the report were:

"The Committee has been furnished with a list of all papers in which the organization has carried paid advertisements, together with the amounts and dates of payments. The total amount spent for advertising in periodicals up to June 30 is $16,719.63, which seems to the Committee a moderate amount as related to other expenditures. That covered a period of eleven months and averaged therefore, $1,519.16 a month. It is obvious that that is not enough, even at best, to subsidize more than a few small papers. As a matter of fact it was distributed over 27 papers, of which 14 were published in English and 13 in foreign languages. Out of 27 papers in which advertisements appeared 6 are liberal, religious or labor periodicals without political connections, 4 are socialist and 17 are Communist or have Communist tendencies. By that we do not necessarily mean that they are organs of the Communist Party, but that their obvious political and economic basis is Communist.

"Judging by the number of Communist papers in this list it would appear that an undue proportion of the advertising had gone to them, but an examination of the cost of advertising in the various papers shows that they received less than $5,000 of the total of $17,000 spent in advertising. The largest amounts went to non-political, liberal, labor and religious periodicals, printed in English."

Thus is clearly revealed the trickery of the contemptible scoundrel, Cahan, who will sink to the lowest depths of depravity in order to strike a blow at the vanguard of the working class.

The report of the Committee has goaded him to fury because it has exposed him as an unprincipled prevaricator, an enemy of Soviet Russia and the working class of the United States and a servant of capitalism, deserving of nothing but the eternal execration of intelligent workers.

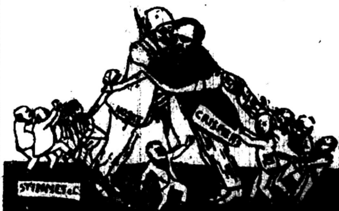
Italian View of German "Socialist" Unity



The above cartoon appeared in L'Ordine Nuovo, the daily organ of the Italian Communist Party, published at Turin, Italy.

It shows Noske, the bloody butcher of the Majority "Socialists," embracing Crispien, the Independent "Socialist." Hanging on the coat tails of the former are Stinnes & Co., with an array of German industrial kaisers and monarchists, while behind the latter are found Levi and other Communist renegades, who discovered the German Communist Party to be too revolutionary and too much working class for them.

The Russian Revolution and the American Communist Mov

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, Secretary of the Workers Party

It was the Russian Revolution — the Bolshevik Revolution of November 7, 1917 — wl created the American Communist Movement. There had been a left wing in the Socialist Pa for a decade or more. Its existence was manifested in dissatisfaction and criticism of the official policies of the S. P. This left wing had no clear conception of what was wrong with the program of the Socialist Party. It was against the reformist policy of the party and demanded a revolutionary pro- [illegible] it was never clear as to the principles which were to be embodied in the "revolutionary program."

In 1912 this left wing supported Haywood and the I. W. W. It emphasized the importance of industrial organization—industrial unionism— in achieving the emancipation of the workers. This emphasis on industrial organization expressed itself in the literature of the movement of that time in such pamphlets as "Industrial Socialism" by Haywood and Bohn, "The New Socialist" by Robert Rives Lamont, "Labor Union Socialism and Socialist Labor Unionism" by Robert Rives Lamont.

The answer of the Hillquit-Berger machine to this movement was the adoption of the famous, or rather infamous, article 11, section 6 of the S. P. Constitution, defining political action as the participation in election campaigns and in the work of the legislative bodies of the capitalist government, and prohibiting the advocacy of sabotage or violence — after the manner of the criminal syndicalist laws of today. The result of the adoption of this constitutional provision was that some forty or fifty thousand members were driven out of the Socialist Party and the left wing movement and the "new Socialism" disappeared from the party.

The St. Louis Convention of the S. P. was another manifestation of the existence of left wing sentiment in the S. P. To St. Louis there came an overwhelming number of delegates who were determined that the party go on record in uncompromising opposition to the war which the United States had just entered. They were clear and determined however only on the one point. Having gained that point in the adoption of the St. Louis Manifesto they permitted the Hillquit-Berger machine to remain in control of the party—to sabotage and make ineffective the decision of the convention in regard to the war.

It was the Bolshevik victory—the November Revolution—which transformed those vague left wing gropings within the Socialist Party into a definite movement with a clear-cut program.

No sooner was the icy grip of the censorship, which during the war stilled all expressions, somewhat shaken—after the signing of the armistice—than there swept thru the Socialist Party the demand that the party program be revised in harmony with the lessons of the Russian Revolution.

The principles underlying the Bolshevik policies and determining their actions had long ago been expressed by Marx. Many Socialists in this country had studied these principles and endeavored to have them expressed in the party program. But not many understood these principles. Their full meaning was whittled away by interpretation.

Experience was required, the application of these principles in actual life, in order that they might become the basis of a proletarian movement which clearly grasped them and founded its policies and tactics upon them.

Marx had said that in the development of the proletariat we could trace "more or less veiled civil war, raging within existing society, up to the point where the war breaks out into open revolution, and where the violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie lays the fondation for the sway of the proletariat." He had said that "There lies between the capitalist and communist society a period of revolutionary transformation of one into the other. This period has a corresponding political period of transition, during which the State can be nothing else than a revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat."

The Bolsheviki acted upon these principles. They mobilized the mass power of the workers and peasants and established the sway of the proletariat. The government which they established is a "dictatorship of the Proletariat."

For half a century the words of Marx had been read and accepted. But not until after the Proletarian Revolution in Russia did the principles laid down by Marx become a dynamic force guiding and directing the tactics of the proletarian movement.

The Communist Movement in the United States—just as elsewhere the world, owes its existence clarity of purpose to the splendid monstration of the correctness o principles laid down by Karl given by the Russian workers in th victory on November 7, 1917 and in scores of great victories which th Proletarian Dictatorship has wo since that time.

Without the Russian Revolution there would have been no Communist Movement in the United States. There would have been no clear grasp of the guiding principles which will lead the workers to victory and their emancipation. In celebration of the 5th Anniversary of the victory of the Russian workers we should not only have in our minds the determination, the will, the courage, the willingness to suffer for their cause which has thus far maintained the power of the Soviets, but also the contribution they have made to our cause in showing us the road we must travel to win our victory and establish the proletarian sway in the United States.

THE CUMULATIVE CATASTROPHES that have assailed this workers' republic—war, blockade, famine—have left hundreds of thousands of children homeless, starving, in broken health.

FATHERS WHO WENT TO DEFEND the Soviet Government against the Kolchaks, Denikins and Wrangels never returned.

AND THEN CAME THE FAMINE, and parents, giving the last crust of bread to their children, went in search of food and never returned.

THE PROBLEM THIS HAS CREATED IN RUSSIA IS COLOSSAL! Hundreds of thousands of the coming generation, future heritors of the Russian Revolution, are threatened with extinction.

THE WALL STREETS OF THE WORLD DON'T CARE! Billionaires and millionaires look on and shrug their shoulders. Soviet Russia is their foe.

BUT WE, AMERICAN WORKERS AND FRIENDS OF SOVIET RUSSIA, DO CARE! Upon us rests a heavy responsibility. Soviet Russia must live. It is an outpost in the battle of the workers for freedom.

IF SOVIET RUSSIA IS TO LIVE, ITS CHILDREN MUST LIVE. The future is built upon children. It becomes our duty to adopt thousands of these orphans, to give them homes and food and care.

TO THIS TASK WE ASK YOU TO GIVE TIME AND MONEY. First: Adopt an orphan yourself. Second: Get other individuals and families to adopt an orphan. Third: Get your labor union, your fraternal, social, benefit organization to adopt a group of orphans. To work at once.

POOR, LONESOME, HUNGRY LITTLE CHILDREN PLEAD WITH YOU FOR COMFORTING ARMS AND A BITE TO EAT—YOUR DOLLARS WILL WORK WONDERS, AND WE PLEAD WITH YOU TO PUT YOUR DOLLARS TO WORK IN THIS GREAT CAUSE!

PLAN: Soviet Russia will give the buildings for Children's Homes. In many cases these buildings will be the homes of the former nobility. Soviet Russia is helping mightily. Hundreds of homes are already in operation. But Soviet Russia needs help. The plan is to outfit homes to contain one hundred children each. Ten such homes will constitute a children's colony. Each colony will have one hospital. The cost per child to outfit homes is $5. The maintenance cost per child is $2 per month. Help all you can. Give what you can.

Workers! Celebrate the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic, November 7th

By ALEXANDER B[illegible]

Five years ago the [illegible] capitalists and [illegible] the [illegible] the life of Russia, which [illegible] throughout the world and for a moment set the whole of Europe aflame, had been prepared by decades of oppression.

It was the accumulated hatred and anger of millions of exploited workers and peasants that exploded sky-high in the memorable days of November, 1917,—the proletarian dictatorship came into existence.

The revolt of the masses was inevitable. There was in those days no power on earth to keep the enraged millions in submission any longer. The fall of the Kerensky government could not possibly be prevented. It had to come down with a crash by the weight of its own follies. But the coming into existence of a new government, an orderly government of workers and peasants, was not so inevitable.

History knows of many struggles and revolts of the masses resulting in mere change of political form and not of social substance. The working class had risen time and again against capitalist exploitation and misrule. But never had he consciously challenged capitalist domination in the State, the only exception being the Paris Commune. And even there the workers had to lose because they possessed no clear conception as to how they were going to establish their own rule—establish and maintain it.

Yes, to maintain it, that was the problem. On looking back over the five years of the Russian Revolution, the question that comes most frequently into one's mind is, how did they manage to exist? How did they succeed to retain power in the face of the united opposition of the entire capitalist world?

Of course, the laboring masses of Russia fought splendidly. Their self-sacrificing devotion and class solidarity is beyond praise. No working class had ever stood up for its rights more courageously or manifested a wider vision of its own class-needs as well as the needs of the human race as a whole.

But after all this is admitted, the question still remains, why the Russian working class and not the German or English? Surely the German workers were no less oppressed and betrayed than the Russians. And as to training in the class-struggle, surely, the workers of Germany had a much longer and richer history of organized struggles than the workers of Russia. And yet?

There is a good deal that the workers of the world can learn from the Russian Revolution. But there is one outstanding lesson that every worker must take to heart, and that is the Russian Communist Party. In fact without a thoro appreciation of this lesson no understanding of the Russian Revolution is possible. The moment you leave the Communist Party of Russia out of consideration, the workers Republic and its successful existence for five long and difficult years becomes a miracle that can be explained only by invoking the power of supernatural forces.

We speak of the Soviets as the backbone of the Revolution. And it is true. It is also true that the Soviets, that is the historical form of working class rule, have not been invented by the Communists. The working masses themselves, in the course of their organized struggles against czarism, as early as 1905, created the Soviets. But it was the Communist Party, at that time the Bolshevist faction of the Social-Democratic Labor Party, that discerned in this rough creation of the revolutionary masses, the beginnings of the new proletarian State. It was this Bolshevist faction, known since 1918 as the Communist Party of Russia, that was first to realize the immense potentialities of the Soviets, not only as a weapon in the proletarian struggle for power but also as an instrument of working class rule, in fact, as the only instrument for the abolition of capitalism.

We also speak of the Red Army as the main defender of the Workers' and Peasants' Republic, which is undoubtedly correct. But when you stop to think of how this army came into existence, how it was organized, trained and led into battle, why, it is the Communist Party of Russia again. It not only conceived the idea, but it actually realized it thru its organizers, instructors, educators and propagandists.

Leadership, that's what the Communist Party of Russia supplied—true revolutionary working class leadership. It was the brain and nerve-center of the Russian Revolution. It supplied policy and inspiration, direction and organization. In a word, it was this Party that made the Revolution possible.

But who is it? What's the stuff it's made of? The capitalist press tells us a good deal, in its own fashion and style, about Lenin, Trotsky, Zinoviev and Radek, but very little about the hundreds of thousands of workingmen and workingwomen that make up the Communist Party of Russia.

It is a workers party, consisting of the most advanced, militant and determined trade-unionists of Russia. Every conscious and militant trade-unionist in Russia belongs to the Party, because the Party is looked upon as the directing center of all the various struggles of the laboring masses. Every worker, who thinks as a worker and is conscious of his class-interests finds his place in the ranks of the Communist Party.

That's why the Party is strong and powerful, that's why it maintains itself in power despite the intrigues, opposition and attacks of all the labor-haters and reactionaries of the world.

In celebrating the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic let us take to heart its biggest and most important lesson. Let us remember that the first indispensable condition for the liberation of the working class from the yoke of capitalism is a strong political party of the class-conscious and militant workers.

Certainly not since the [illegible] has the labor movement been so stirred and outraged by a government attack on the militants as it is now over the Michigan Red Raids.

The labor movement generally recognizes that the militants are always greatly exposed to the onslaughts of the employers.

That is why the workers in a trade so often rally behind a fellow-worker who has been outlawed in his shop because of his determined labor activity. Even the unthinking "class-unconscious" workers instinctively realize that the militants must have their full protection.

That is the reason why the Michigan "Red Raid" cases have attracted such instant nation-wide attention, and such unanimous support from every element of the labor movement. The movement realizes that the raids and the cases which arise out of them are not mere attacks on isolated radicals or "foreign agitators," as the capitalist press would have it understood, but a determined blow at some of the most outstanding militants in the American labor movement.

Just as workers in a shop support those who have been the most outstanding and courageous in the dealings with the boss, so labor in America is now rallying to the support of William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg and the others of the Michigan case, who have been conspicuously in the forefront of the battle against the employing class.

Labor in America is largely instinctive rather than conscious in this support. That condition points to a very definite task on the part of the class-conscious workers—to crystallize and make expressive this wholesome reaction of the workers and to rally them to a conscious stand behind these most recent victims of capitalist oppression. "GIVE THE MICHIGAN RED RAID VICTIMS THE FULL PROTECTION OF THEIR CLASS"

. . . Such is the slogan and the aim of the Labor Defense Council.

Where the fourth anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Republic found the American workers in the midst of a wonderful and inspiringly successful task of rallying to the support of the Russian famine sufferers, the fifth anniversary brings them to still another task—to rally to the support of their own labor militants.

FROM MARX AND ENGELS

Intelligent workers will seek the ultimate cause and the great moving power of all important historic events in the economic development of society, in the change in the modes of production and exchange, in the consequent division of society into distinct classes, and in the struggles of these classes against one another.

The ruling ideas of each age have ever been the ideas of its ruling class. What else does the history of ideas prove than that intellectual production changes in character in proportion as material production is changed?

In proportion as the exploitation of one individual by another is put an end to, the exploitation of one nation by another will also be put an end to. In proportion as the antagonism between classes within the nation vanishes, the hostility of one nation to another will come to an end.

Communism deprives no man of the power to appropriate the products of society; all that it does is to deprive him of the power to subjugate the labor of others by means of such appropriation.

[illegible]orporations

[illegible]nders of capitalism, when [illegible]se, is the claim that the [illegible]ses and continue to exist. [illegible]o the nation to heed their [illegible]timent against the striking shop men, altho at that very time they were slicing rich dividend melons on practically every road in the nation.

One of the greatest backers of the drive to smash organized labor is the Standard Oil combination. Its paid publicity agents use the time-worn arguments concerning the approaching bankruptcy of capital if the demands of the workers are met. The propaganda of these valets of the corporations appears in the news pages in the front sections of the metropolitan papers, but when we turn to the financial pages there is an entirely different story. So far this year five of the poverty-stricken subsidiaries of the Standard Oil monopoly have declared enormous stock dividends. In addition to the dividends declared by the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky and of California, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey declared a 400 per cent dividend, the New York concern 200 per cent and this week two of the largest branches, the Ohio Standard Oil and the Vacuum Oil Company declared 300 per cent stock dividends each.

In case of the two latter concerns each of them had a surplus of $45,000,000, which was issued as stock dividends. The original stock was only $15,000,000, therefore the stock issued now totals $60,000,000. In the case of the Vacuum Oil Company there is an additional ten million unissued capital stock in the treasury of the company.

Thus hundreds of millions of dollars in surplus flows into the Standard Oil Trust, and the Rockefellers, in order to evade federal taxes, place the profits in stock dividends, which are non-taxable. So greedy are they that they devise schemes of escaping responsibility of financing their own government. They place the burden of supporting the capitalist government at Washington upon the shoulders of the smaller capitalists, the petty shop keepers, the small property owners and farmers who own the property upon which they live.

The taxes the greedy money barons evade paying on their stupendous incomes alone would enable them to substantially increase the wages of their millions of slaves in industry. Should the taxes actually be paid it would be of no concern to the worker, except to the extent that it strengthened the government, which, as at present constituted, is his enemy.

Probably John D. Jr., who is head of the Oil Trust, feels that it is perfectly legitimate for him to evade taxes to the government, as it is the business of the government to defend the interests of his class at all times, which he imagines it sometimes fails to do, considering the fact that millions of dollars per year must be spent by the labor hating financial and industrial magnates of the nation in order to maintain armies of private thugs and gunmen. If the government would agree to furnish all the armed force necessary in order to establish the "American Plan in Industry," the pious Sunday school teacher would undoubtedly be willing to pay taxes on his profits instead of evading them thru the issuance of stock dividends.

But probably the present argument is best for the capitalist class in the long run, for the government is compelled to maintain a pretense of "democracy" and to openly and continuously employ the use of its armed force against the workers would soon expose it as the avowed enemy of the working class and hasten the day when the rising tide of the social revolution would engulf it.

The first convention of the Workers Party, Dec. 24-26, 1921, in New York City, was a Unity Convention, and the desire for unity voiced at that time is now a fact, that is also a promise of great work to be accomplished before we prepare to celebrate the next anniversary of the victory of our Ruscian comrades over their oppressors.

During its first year the Workers Party received its baptismal fire in the giant struggles of the textile workers, the coal miners and the railroad shopmen. It is as a direct result of our participation in these great industrial upheavals that we come to this years' Soviet Anniversary with many of our most active officials in the hungry clutches of capitalist justice, some still in jail, all facing relentless prosecution in the courts of the master class.

The Workers Party, having developed unity in its own ranks, inspired the workers to greater solidarity in their economic battles and for this it has already felt the sting of capitalism's lash that always descends upon thinking and aspiring workers, fighting for the liberation of their class.

Today, the Workers Party, more effectively than ever before, wages the open struggle for Communism in this country. It carries on the fight for the amalgamation of isolated craft unions into huge, militant industrial unions, co-operating together as one, big organized working class marching forward in a single huge array and not in scattered units. It develops the political struggle of the workers that must in time result in the triumph of Soviet Rule, the liquidation of capitalism and the development of a Communist Society on this continent in harmony with similar efforts on the part of the militant workers in other lands.

To all this we renew our pledge as we stretch our hands across the seas on this Fifth Soviet Anniversary.

For the first time in the history of the American labor movement, this year the cry of the "labor lieutenants of capitalism" has gone up against "The Reds" in the national conventions of the trade unions.

In the gathering of the American Federation of Labor, at Cincinnati, [illegible] the betrayers of Socialism joined for the first time with labor's worst reactionaries in attacks on the First Workers Republic, the Communist International, the Red International of Labor Unions, and the economic and political programs of the Workers Party.

It is true, our forces were weak and not well prepared to meet this bitter and well prepared onslaught of capitalism's henchmen in America's central body of labor.

But the tide of revolt against reaction is rising. This is seen in the adoption within a few months by ten state federations of labor of resolutions demanding amalgamation of the workers' scattered forces.

Under the urge of the Workers Party forces there will develop in a very short time a powerful, well-knit left wing of labor in the trade union movement.

It was this year at Cleveland, Ohio, that the "Socialist" betrayers in power at the convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union were forced to unmask completely in their fight against the militants. And what a hideous face that unmasking revealed. Schlesinger, Hillquit, Cahan, and all the rest of the "Socialists" who had fawned upon the Russian Revolution and proclaimed their sympathy for the First Workers' Republic, stood forth stark naked as cheap tools of black reaction, Judasses all, jangling each his 30 pieces of silver.

These yellow forces of betrayal were routed at the historic convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, at Chicago, where the Russian American Industrial Corporation was organized to help rehabilitate Soviet Russia's shattered clothing industry.

This same traitor element, however, won a temporary victory at the convention of the Workmen's Circle, the Jewish fraternal society that wields a powerful influence in the working class movement.

It was out of this struggle that our Jewish daily, the Freiheit, was launched to become a power, facing not only the bitter assault of Abraham Cahan's Jewish Daily Forward, but also the continuous attack of the English "Socialist" daily, The New York Call. This fight will inevitably bring an English Communist Daily into existence.

These things are mentioned here at this time, so that the Workers Party, on the Fifth Anniversary of the Soviet Revolution, may be judged by

AFTER FIVE YEARS!

By H. M. WICKS

FIVE YEARS, reckoned as the mere passing of time, is a trivial event in the recorded history of mankind. So slow, so imperceptible is the development of society year after year and generation after generation, that there have been very few generations in all history whose privilege it was to live in the transition period from the death of an old society to the birth of a new one.

At such times the even tenor of the social movement seems interrupted by periods of violence wherein all institutions, built up thru years of effort, are shattered along with the traditions that made them sacred. To the sentimentalist and the dabbler in history, who only perceives the movements and the transitions, a period of revolution seems the sum total of abominations, heralding the end of the world. The trained Historical Materialist looks beneath the surface and views the things that move. He is never a victim of the bewilderment that grips the mind and paralyzes the action of those who view the historical process as the result of the predetermined action of great men or who imagine that behind the social movement there is some beneficent force that leads us steadily toward the goal of a perfect society. Historical Materialism teaches us to discern in the constant development of the economic forces of society the gradual formation of the forces of revolution. It was Karl Marx, the theoretical founder of the modern Socialist movement, who gave to the proletariat the mighty weapon that enables us to not only "understand history better than it was ever understood before but to make history better than it was ever made before."

Marx discovered that the cause of historical development is to be found in the changes which take place in the sphere of production. In carrying on production men are forced to enter into certain relations with each other; these relations correspond to definite stages in the development of the machinery with which they work. The sum of all these productive forces forms the basis of society, determining the character of all the political religious and other social institutions. As the productive forces continue in their development they outgrow the old legality, they come in conflict with the systems of law religion and morality that have been created thru a long period of time. The old forms no longer serve to aid the development of the forces of production, but become fetters upon those forces. Then ensues a period known as the social revolution, when a considerable portion of society, that portion that suffers because of the anachronism existing between the obsolete institutions of society and the material forces of production constituting a definite class, rises in revolt against the class that derives benefits from the old order and who endeavor to perpetuate their favorable position. That is why we declare that the history of society is a history of class struggles. The class that strives to defend the old institutions always falls before the onslaughts of the revolutionary class at such a time and their society is supplanted by a society which responds to the demands of the economic forces and yields to a steady development of these forces.

Five years ago the class-conscious proletariat of Russia initiated such a period of social revolution. In the midst of an imperialist orgy of bloodshed wherein millions of workers were being sacrificed to the mighty moloch of war, the workers of Russia arose to the Bolshevist demand for an immediate social revolution and overthrew the last remnant of capitalist political power. The crimson emblem of the Social Revolution of this century floated defiantly to the breeze. From the camps of all the world's imperialists arose a chorus of calumny and vituperation against those who had accomplished the Russian Revolution, thereby initiating the World Revolution.

We, who live to-day are in a transition period where the old society gives way to the new. In all previous revolutions the ideological forms under which the revolutionists fought were exaggerations of the reality they were striving for while the Proletarian Revolution of to-day is fully conscious of its mission. Armed with effective weapons from the arsenal of critical Communism it proceeds to the methodical undermining of the gigantic superstructure of capitalism knowing that history is on the side of the Revolution.

By the calendar these past five years have been no longer than any previous five years but in the history of the working class they will forever stand out as the greatest of all. During those years the servile armies of numerous military adventurers in the pay of German and Allied Imperialism have attempted to crush the revolution, only to meet their deserved doom before the resistance of the Red Army, that from a straggling group of volunteer Communists, untrained in the art of war, has grown until to-day it defies the whole world of capitalism.

While credit is due the valiant Red Army for defending the Revolution with arms, and while the record of its heroism is already indelibly imprinted upon the history of the working class, we, the class-conscious workers in other countries, should not forget the debt we owe to another factor in the revolution that, in its own way on another field of action, has fought heroic battles against enemies just as relentless as those that fought in the armies of Kolchak, Denikin, Yudenich and Wrangel.

The Third International has fought the flunkies of Imperialism, disguised as labor leaders, of the Second the Second-and-a-Half and the Amsterdam Internationals and while all our comrades thruout the world praise the Red Army for its matchless heroism let us not forget the struggles of the International against the Scheidemanns, the Vandervelds, the Kautskys, the Longuets, the Eberts, the Noskes and the Hillquits, who used their peculiar talents in the interest of capitalism in a series of efforts to throttle the workers' movement toward emancipation.

The close of the World war was pregnant with danger to the capitalist class of all Europe. The attitude of the working class in Germany and Italy was menacing to the aspirations of the ruling class. England and France did not dare attempt to move against the Russian Revolution with their armies because of the fear of arousing the spirit of revolt in their own working class. Even in the United States and Canada the reflex of the Russian Revolution was felt. For a few months it seemed that the class struggle would blaze into a white heat in every capitalist country on earth.

After the blood bath the revolutionary workers of Germany received at the hands of the Social-Democratic government and later the debacle of the seizure of the factories by the militant proletariat of Italy, the reformist socialists of the world, who had hastened to the defense of their Imperialist masters, found fertile soil for their venom. The betrayers of the proletariat in 1914 again came to the rescue of the assassins of the workers in 1918-20.

The social-patriots, the "heroes" of the Second International, created the illusion after the war that class antagonisms were being softened; that the Road to Power for the workers lay in a gradual, peaceful, evolutionary advance. The workers, war-weary almost to the point of complete exhaustion, fell under the spell of the necromancy of these fakirs who conjured up phantoms of the dead past as trappings for their living perfidy. These detestable lackeys of capitalism had the immeasurable audacity to again proclaim themselves the leaders of the struggling workers and for a time they achieved their purpose. A revival of the International of the Great Betrayal was achieved and it enabled the international brigands of capitalism to retrench themselves against the onslaughts of the masses, who had been aroused to fury in the months following the close of the War.

This manoeuvering on the part of the social-traitors made imperative the immediate organization of the Third International in order to create a revolutionary world movement based upon the experiences of the War and the Revolution that would ensure complete independence of action against all enemies of the proletariat. The organization and perpetuation of the Third International is the achievement of the Revolution that is of vital importance to the working class of all other countries. It enabled us to definitely break with the traitors to labor and establish a movement that would lead the masses in the path [illegible] in the spirit of that movement, even though in some "democratic" countries we cannot openly affiliate with it because of oppressive laws making such affiliation a crime.

The division between the "right" and the "left" is now clear in the labor movement. At the outbreak of the next World war the centrist and right leaders, standing alone, will expose themselves in their true colors by comparison with the Third International, and will alienate the masses from their standards. The oppressed and exploited millions will then understand, thru experience, that the only section of the labor movement that will not fail them in a crisis is the Communist International.

But the Third International does not wait until the next catastrophe of capitalism in order to expose the treachery of these pretenders of the Second, the Second-and-a-Half, and the Amsterdam International of Labor Unions. At this time, when terrific blows are falling against labor thruout the entire world the Third International issues a demand for unity of action against capitalism for the achievement of the most pressing needs of the workers and is met with flat refusal from the capitalist hirelings. This contemptible action exposes Vandervelde, Henderson, Longuet and Adler and their cliques as opponents of effective working class action, therefore as traitors to the working class. The Communist International is forcing the social-traitors to expose themselves even now as deserving nothing but the undying contempt of all class-conscious workers.

There is a dialectic connection between the Russian Revolution and the Third International so that it is impossible to separate one from the other, especially in the realm of theory. The theory of the Communist International is based upon the experience of the Proletarian Revolution in Russia. And the Russian Revolution is Marxism applied to life. Without the knowledge of the theoretical works of Karl Marx and his collaborators and successors possessed by the leaders of the Russian revolution it is quite certain it would long ago have been shattered in its perilous course.

Had the leaders of the victorious proletariat been less informed in the principles of Marxism they might have fallen prey to the sophistry of those pseudo-Marxists who visualized the constituent assembly as the instrument thru which could be realized the emancipation of the working class. But they were familiar with the lessons the great teacher of the proletariat derived from the experience of the Paris Commune, lessons long forgotten by the reformers and parliamentary traders of the International of ineffable infamy. The two lessons of the Commune that were never forgotten by the leaders of the Russian Bolsheviki were that the proletariat cannot simply lay hold of the ready-made state machinery of capitalism and wield it for its own purpose and that the new form of state must be fundamentally different from the old in order to serve the working class in its task of destroying the foundations of capitalist society.

With their understanding of the scientific interpretation of history they are actually making history better than it was ever made before. To these intrepid revolutionists the mission of the proletariat as the grave-digger of capitalism is clear.

It is hardly necessary to repeat the assertion that is becoming a banality to the effect that the Russian Soviet government cannot be overthrown either from within or without. Neither Europe nor all the world can conquer Bolshevism, but Bolshevism will inevitably conquer the rest of the world because the inexorable march of society is toward the downfall of capitalism and the rise of Communism.

SOVIET RUSSIA, GREETINGS!

Five years have passed since the eventful days of November 1917. Overnight as it were Russia had become a country of the people and by the people in the truest sense of this term. The Bolshevik Revolution abolished the ruling class, composed in Russia, as elsewhere, of the so-called elite, the chosen of God or Capital—and by the same gesture abolished class lines, the millions of ruled having become the rulers. The military struggles of the Revolution seem to be over; and the struggle for economic reconstruction is on; this struggle is slower, more tedious, demands endless patience and perseverance. But the Russian people, generous, creative, intelligent will overcome the economic obstacles as they have overcome the military; and the Communist State in Russia, emerging slowly from these struggles, will serve as a model for the rest of the world.

A. A. Heller,

[illegible] of Five Years of Vict[illegible]

([illegible] One)

[illegible] that international capital still hopes to force its robber conditions upon us.

Opposes Moves for Enslavement

However difficult our economic situation may be, however badly we may need a resumption of relations with international capital, the Soviet Republic is already strong enough not to enter into an agreement which purposes her enslavement and her plundering.

Turning to the inner condition, we may say that the crop did not disappoint the hopes of the country. We may hope that the question of bread may soon be put in the background. This does not mean that all the difficulties of nourishing the country are over. In many important regions, as in the Don Valley, the question of providing food still plays an important rôle. Improvement proceeds but slowly, but nevertheless, may be noted.

The present situation may be characterized shortly in a sentence: The capitalist countries are going down slowly into ruin, while the Soviet Republic, slowly, but surely, is returning to health. I believe that this sentence suffices to characterize the present condition. When we told the workers a year ago that the conditions would improve, many workers remained sceptical. This has changed. The position of the Communists has improved, the confidence of the politically unorganized masses in the Communists is growing. All workers have become convinced that improvement is possible, a fact that improvement has already begun.

Demand Increased Production

The relation between the betterment of the workers' living conditions and the increase of production has never been so apparent as today. All thru the Revolution we have preached to the masses the necessity of increased production in a Workers' Republic. We insisted upon this under most difficult conditions, under such conditions that the worker, depressed by his excessive burdens, lost his faith in the cause.

Today, our propaganda for increased production is finding re- [illegible] trusts, realizes clearly that an increase of wages can only be brought about by an increase of production, and with the help of the trade unions.

That is why we must combat the spread of that idea which we find even in trade union circles: "The economists carry the responsibility for the industry; they control the factories and the shops, and therefore the increase of productivity lies in their hands." This is not the case, and it is self-evident that our Congress can adopt no such point of view; it is self-evident that increased production in a Workers' and Peasants' Republic depends upon the trade unions. And I repeat it, never were the trade unions in a better position for that purpose.

Must Avoid All Friction

Another exaggeration of which many of our comrades active in industry are guilty, is that they refused to reveal to the trade unions all the facts concerning production. This is naturally not the standpoint of our Party. This error must be opposed. The decision of the Party that there can be no business secret for the progressive workers organized in the trade unions, that is, for the responsible organs of the trade unions, must also be well-known to you. The closest cooperation of economic and trade union organs is necessary and all friction must be avoided.

The reconstruction of our economic system requires years, demands that we judge our situation clearly, as Comrade Lenin justly insists. However, we may say that even if the situation of some of our industries is still very bad, even borders on catastrophe in some cases, we have nevertheless, made a step forward and are on our way to recovery.

When, two years ago the question of transforming the trade unions into free associations, and the transformation of industry upon a commercial basis were brought up, there was no lack of prophets who predicted the destruction of the trade union movement and with it, of our Party.

Prophecy of Split Fails

They said that the transition to the new economic policy w[illegible] result in an irreparable split in [illegible] Communist Party of Russia, in ci[illegible] war within the Party, and in the [illegible] age of our Party to the side of [illegible] bourgeoisie.

Over a year has passed since [illegible] introduction of the new econ[illegible] policy. This is not much. But [illegible] know and we see that all the dang[illegible] which could arise therefrom have al[illegible] ready been overcome.

And we have the right and th[illegible] duty to tell the working class re[illegible] presented by the All-Russian Con[illegible] gress of Trade Unions that the Com[illegible] munist Party of Russia today is [illegible] stronger, more united party tha[illegible] two years ago.

The Communist Party of Russi[illegible] has been able to accomplish [illegible] gigantic work of education, organization and discipline.

The trade unions have gained [illegible] much greater influence than they had before. They have become an organization which maintains the closest connection with the working masses and enjoys a very great sympathy among the non-partisan workers.

The Schools of Communism

The trade unions are the schools of Communism and reconstruction of the non-partisan workers. The trade unions have not separated themselves from the masses. The trade unions have not degenerated, nor have they changed their political physiognomy.

They are the same red revolutionary proletarian trade unions they were many years ago. Therefore, let our enemies rejoice as they will, let them say what they will, we answer just this:

The most difficult period is already behind us. One or two more good crops and we are saved. International capital is sinking into ruin. We, on the other hand, slowly but surely are going forward. The future belongs to us.

Machinists for Amalgamation

Cleveland, Ohio, Machinists Lodge No. 584 with a membership of railroad machinists has unanimously adopted the amalgamation plan.

This lodge has over 500 members and has hitherto been known as a most reactionary organization, refusing to allow any discussion of amalgamation to come up on the floor. Elmer P. Beich, Kenneth Young and Tony Wehevek were put on an amalgamation committee to handle this matter.

The Workers Party and the Elections on Tuesday, November 7th

Battle Plot to Bar Party from Ballot

Edward Lindgren, Workers Party organizer for New York, announces that every possible effort will be made to force the Board of Elections to put the name of J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The Worker, on the ballot as candidate for congress in the 12th District (New York's East Side).

The fight will be carried into the county court with the filing of mandamus proceedings against the Board of Elections by Attorney Joseph R. Brodsky, of Hale, Nelles and Sherr, on Wednesday.

The original candidate of the Workers Party was Benjamin Gitlow. When he was nominated he had been recently released from Sing Sing Prison. A later action of the courts returned Gitlow to prison.

A petition with 1,900 names had been filed on behalf of Gitlow before time expired on Oct. 10. The Board of Elections, according to law, had three days in which to rule on Gitlow's petition, the time expiring Oct. 13.

It was not until Oct. 16th, however, that the Board of Elections sent out its notification that Gitlow's name had been ruled from the ballot because he was not considered qualified, not being a citizen, since he had been convicted of a crime and was then serving his sentene.

The letter bearing the notification carried the post office stamp of 7 P. M., Oct. 16th, so that it was impossible to receive the notification and file the certificate of vacancy on that day, the final day for filing such a certificate. The certificate, however, was filed the following day. It was then thrown out. The fight in the courts is now being carried on to force the Board of Elections to recognize the certificate of vacancy bearing the name of J. Louis Engdahl, the filing of which was delayed purely thru the trickery of the election board itself.

Among the state and congressional candidates of the Workers Party in the three states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut are the following:

The Party and the Elections

Election campaigns are an important part of the work of the Workers Party. Election campaigns are not the most important work which the party has to engage in, but it is one of the major tasks of the party to place candidates upon the ballot, to carry on campaigns of propaganda and education in connection with the voting, to secure the support of the masses for its candidates. Voting for candidates who represent its class interests is a primary form of the education of the workers.

What has the party achieved in this respect during its first nine months of existence?

It cannot be said that our achievement is great. We have not been able to build during these first nine months of existence the machinery to enable us to function generally in the coming elections. We have been able to make nominations in only a few states. We have only made the beginning, given an earnest of our intention to make our Party a factor in the elections, and thru that and our work on the general political field a powerful factor in the political life of the country.

In four states we will have state tickets on the ballot—California, Washington, New Jersey and Connecticut. In a half dozen other places we will have local candidates.

That is not a very creditable showing. It tells us that we must carry on a campaign among our own membership both in regard to the necessity and importance of participation in the elections and in the methods of placing our candidates on the ballot.

If our achievement in placing our own candidates on the ballot is not great, at least our party has shown itself capable of meeting difficult situations and keeping in the forefront as the guiding principle of its tactics the fundamental end it is seeking politically—to educate the workers to function as a class politically.

This is shown in the decision of the party in regard to the Illinois elections, where the party will call upon the workers to support the Farmer-Labor Party and in its action in regard to the Birmingham situation, where J. P. Walker, Chairman of the Railroad Shopmen's Strike Committee, a member of the Workers Party, is a candidate, with the consent of the party, on the ticket of the Social-Democratic League.

In both these instances the party decision was based upon the fundamental principle that independent political action by the workers must be encouraged by the party even tho it is not yet class action politically by the workers.

Even the limited participation of the party in the election campaigns makes this election unique in the history of the United States. For the first time a party frankly Communist in its ideals will ask the support of the workers at the polls. That is a step forward. It is the beginning of the road of progress that will bring the day when Communism will boldly enter the political arena to challenge its enemy, capitalism, to a trial of strength in the struggle for political power.

Workers Party Sends Greetings to Russia on Fifth Anniversary

the friends it has won and the enemies it has made.

Altho the Workers Party continues to fight its battles for Communism in the open, it yields no quarter to the capitalist foe, nor does it receive those petty favors from its political and industrial opponents that always go with efforts to maintain a purely legalistic and constitutionalist existence, bulwarked by submissiveness. The Workers Party prides itself that no capitalist or "Socialist" editor has ever found any of its acts worthy of praise and commendation.

We do not bend our heads to the charge that we have foreign language speaking workers in our midst. Instead we stand erect and cry "Shame!" to all English-speaking workers that the beginnings of the struggle for their emancipation must come thru the sacrifices of men and women workers who have but recently come to these shores.

The Workers Party accepts the facts and conditions as they are. It glories in every new recruit gathered to its fold, no matter of what color, race, nationality or religion, citizen or alien. Upon the foundation of Communist theory and practice we build our struggle for the conquest of American capitalism. In the words of Karl Liebknecht, "The future belongs to us!" not only in Germany, or Russia, or in the United States, but in every other land as well.

To our comrades in Soviet Russia, the entire membership of the Workers Party, and its growing host of sympathizers, this aniversary day, Nov. 7, 1922, sends its fraternal greetings and declares, "We are with you for the International Social Revolution, for Soviet Rule in all nations, for a Communist Society thruout all the world."

The big night of all your nights with the films will be the night upon which the Friends of Soviet Russia, New York City division, will virtually "take you to Russia."

Eleven "events" films, chronicling recent happenings in Soviet Russia, films showing the celebration of May 1st in Moscow and Petrograd, films showing the confiscation of church treasures for the famine stricken; films which will take you to Perm and give you a close up of the 20 F. S. R. tractors at work upon a big Russian agricultural estate; and a five reel film entitled "Russia in the Shadows" which will be the feature of the evening, setting forth the old regime, the Kerensky revolution, the historic Nov. 7th, imperialist intervention and the defense, the famine, refugees fleeing, American workers sending relief, ships leaving, old and new methods of agriculture—this will constitute the program. The only fear the F. S. R. has is that it may not be possible to crowd all these reels into one evening. If not, then two nights of motion pictures will be your treat.

The date and place has not been ascertained as yet. But preparations are going forward and you are asked to keep your eyes open for the announcement.

For the "Alba Nuova"!

The Italian weekly of the Workers Party will celebrate the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution at Arlington Hall, Friday night, Nov. 3rd.

For this memorable occasion the entertainment committee has arranged an elaborate program, which no doubt will meet with the approval, not only of the Italian element but of all the other members and sympathizers of our movement.

The evening will begin with a one-act drama entitled: "Roppresaglia" (Reprisal) which will be performed for the first time in America.

The next number will open with a vocal concert sung by Hazel Simonson, Soprano, and Pietro Soldano, Baritone, which will include:

"Prologue" from Pagliacci—Leoncavallo.

"Toreador Song" from Carmen—Bizet.

"Ritorna Vincitor" (Aida)—Verdi.

"Suicidio" (Gioconda)—Ponchielli and other operatic and popular selections.

The third part will be dedicated to modern classical dances, interpreted by the now famous "Morton Dancers."

The fourth number will be presented by the celebrated violinist, Giuseppe Adami.

The ball of course will be the closing event of the evening. Tickets can be bought at the national office of the Workers Party or from the branches. The price is only 50 cents.

Party Fight Invades the Solid South

This congressional campaign is witnessing an invasion of the Solid South by the forces of the Workers Party in the election at Birmingham, Alabama, known in the industrial world as "The Pittsburgh of the South," because it is a great coal and steel district and railroad center.

J. P. Walker, chairman of the Railroad Shopmen's Strike Committee, member of the Workers Party, is the candidate for sheriff in this citadel of capitalism, and the workers are rallying about him as a class, determined to put their spokesman into the sheriff's office, so that this weapon will never again be used against them.

The election manifesto issued in support of the candidacy of J. P. Walker, is a call for the support of the Workers Party Program and reads as follows:

Vote For Workers Party Program!
J. P. Walker For Sheriff!

Workers of Birmingham! You have an opportunity in this fall's campaign to place your own representative in the important office of Sheriff, Jefferson County.

In the position so long occupied by tools of the bosses, you have the power on Election Day, Nov. 7th, to place a representative of the workers in the one political office that is used more than any other as a club to beat you into submission in your every effort to increase your standard of living, better your working conditions, shorten your workday and secure a higher wage.

Walker will serve the workers. The old party candidates as you all know serve only the bosses and the profiteers.

J. P. Walker, Chairman of the Railroad Shopmen's Strike Committee, is your candidate. As workers you should work and vote to elect him.

Due to the election laws the name of J. P. Walker appears on the ballot as the candidate of the Socialist Party. When nominated, however, Walker owed his allegiance, as at the present time, to the Workers Party of America.

The nominations were made by the Social Democratic League, which affiliated with the Socialist Party and decided to use its ticket to meet the legal requirements demanded to get on the ballot.

It is felt that these facts should be made known generally to all working class voters so that they may exercise the right of franchise with a complete understanding of the situation.

All workers will therefore know that J. P. Walker is not making this campaign as an individual. He is not campaigning on the platform of the Socialist Party. He does stand squarely upon and is urging the principles of the Workers Party, that seeks to centralize and direct the struggle of the laboring masses against the powerfully centralized opposition of their exploiters.

The Workers Party courageously takes its place in the vanguard of the American working class to lead it in the struggle for the abolition of capitalism.

Workers! You see the members of your class about you robbed and kept in virtual slavery by the powerful, profiteering owners of the coal and steel industry. You behold the farmers on the land, even as you, plucked and plundered by the profiteers.

The Workers Party claims that no lasting improvement of the conditions of the workers or farmers under capitalism is possible. More than ever before, hunger and want are rife in the ranks of labor.

Every effort on the part of the workers, to better their conditions, as in the strikes of the coal miners and the railroad shopmen, is met with merciless suppression by the master class.

The capitalist government of your city, county and state, as everywhere, openly fight the battles of the employers.

J. P. Walker, candidate for sheriff, asks for support on a program expressing the interests of the workers. Vote for him on Election Day, Tuesday, November 7th. Join the Workers Party and help in building a powerful, class party of the workers to fight your battles in future elections. Aid the struggle for your emancipation from wage slavery.

Mass Meeting at Trenton, N. J.

All readers of The Worker in Trenton and vicinity and all Party members and sympathizers in general are invited to attend a mass meeting under the auspices of Local Trenton, Workers Party, at Arcade Hall, 15 East State St., 8 p. m., Sunday Oct. 29th.

H. F. Simpson, District Organizer, Third District, Workers Party, will address the meeting on General Party Problems and Tactics. All party members must attend without fail and bring friends.

Where Do We Stand?

By C. E. RUTHENBERG

Two members of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party have recently published articles in which there is, in one case, a veiled suggestion that, as a result of the raid at Bridgman, Mich., the Workers Party has met with some organization injury, and in the other the open charge that the Michigan raid has caused fear in the party membership and is responsible for the fact that the party has not been as successful as it otherwise might have been in placing its candidates on the ballot in the November election.

What has happened to us? Where do we stand? Is our party stronger or weaker than before Bridgman? These questions require a definite answer in view of the articles in question and it is not difficult to give the answer when one has more than a long distance acquaintance with the party organization and its work.

The first of these articles appears in the October "Liberator" and the author is J. B. Salutsky. Significantly enough, the article is entitled "Labor Liquidates Revolution"!

If Comrade Salutsky is of the opinion that "revolution" has been liquidated in the United States by the events of the past six or seven months it is not at all surprising that he is also pessimistic about the progress of the Workers Party during recent months.

The fighting spirit shown by the rank and file of the labor movement in the miners strike and the railway shopmen strike, their attitude toward the bosses and toward the government, shows a nearer approach to a revolutionary spirit than has existed in the recent history of the working class of the United States. For the first time a large number of A. F. of L. organizations have gone on record for the mobilization of the whole organized labor movement—for a general strike—to help fight the battles of workers on strike, and we are told that labor has liquidated revolution!

The demand for a general strike, the wide-spread demand by international unions belonging to the A. F. of L. and outside of that body for the labor party indicate that labor in the United States rather than liquidating revolution is making the first weak, tentative steps on the road that will carry it on to revolution. Labor is gaining its first stray glimpses of the fact that the enemy is not only the boss, that the struggle cannot be carried on thru strikes over wages and working conditions alone—it talks seriously about a strike AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT and of a labor party to put labor in control of the government. No, labor has not "liquidated revolution" in the United States. If it has not yet realized the necessity of revolution it has at least begun to move in the direction that leads to revolution.

Comrade Salutsky ignores all this and bases his thesis of liquidation of revolution on the attitude and actions of the officialdom of the labor movement. His treatment of the Workers Party and the Trade Union Educational League in relation to the arrests made at Bridgman, Mich., is of the same character.

Who created the Workers Party, Comrade Salutsky? You? You have contributed something but would it have been in existence thru your efforts and those who hold your views if you stood alone? It is the "romanticist" in attacking whom you rush to the aid of the powers-that-be, that contributed most to the building of this organization in the open, to fight in the open.

And if there is a new development in the trade union movement of this country, if solid results are being attained, if there is at last hope that the organization form and policies of the trade union movement in this country will be changed, who formulated the policy and laid the foundation for this work? You, or those you delight in calling "romanticists"?

Those men and women, Comrade Salutsky, who initiated this work, who can claim credit for it which you can not claim, can be better trusted to see that the work prospers in the future than you who try to ridicule and malign them at a time when they are meeting the hardest blows of the enemy—not only their enemy but the enemy of the whole working class.

The second article, we assume by Comrade Lore, in the form of the "Wochen-Rundschau" in the October 15th issue of the "Volkszeitung" makes more specific statements and is therefore possibe to meet the issue raised in a more definite form.

Comrade Lore in discussing the situation of the Workers Party in relation to the nomination of candidates in the November elections, assigns the Michigan "Red" raid as the reason for the failure of the party to get its candidates on the ticket in many places. Specifically, Comrade Lore charges, that the Michigan raid intimidated the party membership thru fear of general arrests, and, that the raids came at a time when the whole energy of the party should have been put into preparation for the elections and the diversion of the party energies into defense work made it impossible to do the election work.

Both these statements are incorrect. They are of the same superficial character as the judgment that revolution has been liquidated at a time when the first signs of a movement toward revolutionary action are appearing among the masses of the workers.

As to the first point, the intimidation of the party membership thru the "red" raid, it simply does not exist. The writer has been in most of the large cities in which there are strong party organizations since the Michigan raid. Nowhere was there any indication that the morale or fighting spirit of our party membership had been lowered by the arrest of the men at Bridgman. Rather the reverse, the Michigan raid had stirred the party out of a state of lethargy. Large and enthusiastic meetings were being held. The party membership was roused for action and in a fighting spirit.

Examining the question from a broader viewpoint, the viewpoint of our progress in establishing contact with the organized workers in the trade unions, the Michigan raid has resulted in an advance, in a direct benefit for the party. In most of the large industrial cities our party was, before the raid, still completely isolated from the organized workers in the trade union movement. Thru the organization of the Labor Defense Council our party members have been brought into close contact with the progressive elements in the trade unions and are standing shoulder to shoulder with them in a common struggle. We have achieved thru the defense of the victims of the Michigan raid what we had been unable to achieve thru our previous eight months work.

When before in the history of our movement have central bodies and state federations of labor concerned themselves with the defense of Communists? They have concerned themselves with the victims of the Michigan raids. They are taking part in their defense. Our party is no longer isolated. Such a step forward for our party is almost worth the personal suffering and sacrifice that the prosecution in Michigan may mean for the men arrested. The outcome of the Michigan raid in its larger aspect, is not, as Comrade Lore argues, something detrimental for our party but a distinct advance.

If the Michigan raid is not responsible for the failure to become a factor in the election campaign this year as Comrade Lore argues what then are the factors which explain this failure? These factors are two in number, one of an organizational character and the other a failure on the part of the leadership of the party.

The first of these factors is the character of the membership of our organization. It is perhaps a minor factor, but it had its influence in making the party impotent so far as the elections are concerned. Citizenship is one of the fundamental requirements for functioning politically in these election campaigns. Even citizenship in itself is not enough for a member of foreign extraction altho he may have become a citizen is still under a handicap in the circulation of petitions and the securing of the necessary signatures to place candidates upon the ballot.

Our party membership, as it exists at present is probably seventy-five per cent incompetent to carry on the work necessary to make nominations and place candidates upon the ballot. It is incompetent to perform the work because so many members are not citizens, because those who are citizens have the handicap of language to overcome and because it is a membership as yet largely untrained in work in connection with election campaigns. These are the organization facts which explain our lack of success in getting on the ballot, not intimidation of our membership and absorption of its energies on account of the Michigan raid.

All that has been said above, however, sinks into insignificance in comparison with the failure of the political leadership of the party during the past nine months. An organization grows only in the process of struggle. A party can become a political factor only by participation in the political life of the country. That participation does not consist of waiting until the period of an election campaign arrives and then endeavoring to place candidates upon the ballot. It consists of taking up every political question which arises, formulating the party position and actually propagating the party views.

The trouble with our party during the last nine months has been that it has largely kept itself aloof from the actualities of the political life of the country. What was our policy on the question of unemployment and how strongly did we advocate it. What did we have to say about the open shop campaign. What little we did relates to these questions. What was our position on the soldiers' bonus. What did we have to say to the working masses on the question of the new tariff. These and a dozen other questions where the realities of the political life of the country. It is only by proceeding from the beginning of these actual issues of the political life of the country that we can win political leadership that we can become a political party.

If we wish to search out the reason why we are approaching the November election with candidates on the ticket in only a few states we must find the primary reason in our failure to give the party political leadership.

For the failure of the party to function politically Comrade Lore and Salutsky as well as every other member of the Central Executive Committee is responsible.

If we had "mixed in" aggressively, if we had taken stands on every political question, if we had made our voices heard on every question, the momentum of such political action would have carried us into the election campaign in such a way that we would have overcome all the other difficulties in our way. Thus and thus alone can we or will we become a political party. If we wish to remedy the condition which has made us impotent this year we must face this failure of our leadership and not endeavor to hide it thru such political near-sightedness as shown by Comrades Lore and Salutsky in their articles.

Workers! Forward with Soviet Russia!

Army has swept them all away. It has withstood the blockade. It has withstood famine and hunger.

Never in the history of the world has a people withstood such attacks as have been levelled at the Workers and Peasants of Russia, who stood firm and emerged from the struggle victorious.

On this Fifth Anniversary of the establishment of the Soviet Republic in Russia, workingmen and women all over the world will join with the Workers and Peasants in celebrating their victory. When the sun rises on November 7th in Soviet Russia there will rise like a wave covering the earth the mass meetings and demonstrations of the workers who celebrate with the Russian Workers and Peasants. This wave will spread north and south and will not end its sweep until it has encircled the world.

We workers of the United States, particularly those workers who have thus far not joined in the celebration of the victory of the Russian Workers and Peasants, may well ask ourselves what the Workers and Peasants of Russia celebrate and why it is that the workers everywhere in the world are inspired by their victory.

The Workers and Peasants of Russia celebrate on November 7th, and the Workers and Peasants everywhere in the world celebrate with them, because in Russia there is no longer danger that capitalism can destroy civilization. Capitalism has done its worst. The Workers and Peasants of Russia have won. They have established a Soviet Republic—a Dictatorship of the Workers. The power is in their hands. They are rebuilding their social order.

No matter what hardship the Workers and Peasants of Russia have faced or what hardships they may still face, they know this: In Russia the foundation of a new social order has been laid. In Russia the new social order is being built, the new social order which will bring peace, well-being and happiness to all mankind.

Workers of the United States! Join with the Russian Workers and Peasants in their celebration. Join with them not only in celebration of their victory, but make November 7th the beginning of a new struggle that will also bring victory for us—for the workers and working farmers of the United States.

To achieve that victory we, the workers and working farmers, must unite in powerful organizations of our own. We must forever refuse to politically support the parties of our exploiters and oppressors. The Republican and Democratic parties are the parties of our enemies. We must unite politically in powerful industrial organizations of our class.

With such weapons of struggle we can meet our enemy in the battles of the present, we can assert the right of the workers now and we can go forward until we establish the power politically of the workers and working farmers in the United States as it has been established in Russia.

When we have achieved that we, too, will have a November 7th to celebrate. We, too, will have rescued civilization from capitalism. We, too, can lay the foundation and build a better social system—a social system which will insure peace, happiness and well-being to us.

Hail to the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic!
Hail to Workers' Rule in Russia!
Hail to the coming day of the rule of the workers of the United States!

The Difficult Tasks Ahead

This year's celebration of the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic is a call to rally for the greater and more difficult tasks ahead.

In addressing a vast gathering of young Communists in Moscow the other day Leon Trotzky told his youthful audience that, "In the years just past your elders could fight and die for Our Revolution, BUT TO-DAY YOUR TASK IS NO LESS DIFFICULT THAN OURS."

If Trotzky could say that for the Russian Workers' Republic, where Soviet Rule has now remained dominant for five years, then his words have an even greater application in all other countries, especially in the backward United States.

Trotzky's Fifth Anniversary message to the boys and the girls of Soviet Russia, and we pass it on to the revolutionary youth of America, is:—

"You must work, set your teeth in the cruel granite of education and hold it fast until you master it, for only by education, your education, can we hold what we have won."

Trotzky showed the young people how the capitalists have been and still are cleverly enlisting on their side trained specialists who ought to be in the ranks of the workers.

"It is a heavy and difficult burden I put on you," Trotzky told the young people, "but you are young and strong and able to bear the burdens as we bore them, we who labored and suffered that you might be free."

The revolutionary youth of America must learn thru the experiences of the Russian workers, that it isn't sufficient to be trained and skilled agitators for Communism. In addition to being the active and most intelligent leaders of the workers in the struggle for their emancipation every revolutionist must be an able industrial expert, able to combat the sabotage of the specialist who casts his lot with the capitalist in the hour of working-class victory."

Inspired by the enthusiasm aroused by the Fifth Anniversary of Russian Soviet Rule let old and young alike strive for that education that will give irresistible strength to the social revolution the world over and bring complete victory to its standards in the face of capitalism's most stubborn resistance.

They are beginning to open the barrels in the British campaign. The London Daily Mail estimates that the Coalition - Liberal machine backing Lloyd George has a fund of $15,000,000. That ought to make the mouths of our own old party "statesmen" water.

Some "Socialist" Law and Order

Daniel W. Hoan, the "Socialist" mayor of Milwaukee, Wisc., and one of the political puppets of Victor Berger, has launched a dud against the Ku Klux Klan in the form of a defense of the "proper officers of the goverment." Hoan also threatens the Ku Klux Klan with the same fate that he claims befell what he pleases to call "the attempt of the Communists to organize an underground government."

Hoan need not threaten the Ku Klux Klan. It is not in danger. As an embryo American Fascisti it is entirely safe under American capitalist institutions.

The Ku Klux Klan, even tho it has what it calls an "Invisible Empire," is not seeking "to transfer the government from its officers," to its own organization. Newspaper reporters are usually invited to its gatherings, it openly conducts political campaigns on behalf of old party candidates.

What is this "law and order," however, for which "Socialist" Mayor Hoan proudly claims that Milwaukee "stands first among all the cities in the world."

Hoan probably refers to the arrests meted out to "soap box" speakers who last summer sought to carry the militant message of labor to the workers of that city.

Hoan probably refers to the attacks on Communists and members of the Industrial Workers of the World, no less bitter in "Socialist" Milwaukee than in other cities where old party administrations are in power.

Hoan probably refers to the frame-up by the "Socialist" District Attorney Zabel of Italian workers charged with and placed on trial and convicted in the local courts for being Anarchists.

Perhaps Hoan also refers to the "law and order" Milwaukee methods that the Wisconsin section of the "Socialist" Party, under Berger, Melms, Seidel and himself brought to the aid of the Stedmans, the Hillquits and the Oneals to hold the party for the reactionary minority against the growing militant majority, in 1919.

Hoan is right. Milwaukee needs no Ku Klux Klan. The "Socialists" have already pre-empted any place the Koo Koos might fill.

Hoan is wrong as usual about the Communists. No Communist is seeking to organize an "underground government," and Hoan knows it.

Communists will carry on their fight in the open. But when they are attacked by the black forces of reaction, including the "Socialists," they will not surrender their principles. They will rather resort to secret propaganda to carry their emancipating message to the masses.

When the Communist forces become strong enough to establish their government, in the form of Soviet Rule to usher in the Communist era, there will no longer be any necessity to refrain from meeting all the powers of reaction in the open, even tho the reactionists will be ably supported by the betrayers of Socialism.

Hoan knows the American Soviet Government, the government of the Communists, when it comes, will be an open government. Hoan merely gives added testimony to his betrayal of labor by trying to throw sand in the eyes of the workers by confusing the Soviet Rule that is to be with the so-called "Invisible Empire" of his Koo Koo friends. But it wont work. The workers will get wise. Hoan's attack is a welcome aid to increasing their wisdom.

Why this partiality? The New York "Socialist" Call gives first page seven-column headlines to the campaign of the British Labor Party, while the election of Friedrich Ebert, "Socialist," president of Germany, for three years more gets five lines on page seven. Surely The Call isn't that much ashamed of "Socialist" rule in Germany.

The "Hard-Boiled" Bosses

But one campaign speech, it is claimed, will come from the lips of Attorney General Daugherty in this campaign, and that has already been delivered at Canton, Ohio.

It is unnecessary to state that the head of Harding's department of Justice devoted that speech to a defense of his war on the striking railroad shop men. He used the injunction, he claims, to rescue the country from the "grip of civil war."

It is significant that Daugherty ascribed some of the blame not only to the "radicalism and character" of prominent labor leaders, but also to "hard-boiled" railway executives.

It is not in our memory that any of the "hard-boiled" railroad bosses, like Cuyler, Atterbury and Loree, were hailed into court, that they had their railroads served with injunctions, that they were threatened in any way. But then, in coming before the working-class voters, Daugherty must develop the semblance of "fairness."

Daugherty forgot, in his speech, to make any mention of his chief anti-labor aid, William J. Burns, detective par-excellance. Labor points out that Attorney General Wickersham, in 1912, in a letter to the reactionary President Taft, was forced to brand Burns as a jury fixer, that a pardon had to be granted to a man convicted by a jury fixed by the Burns Detective Agency.

In his speech at Canton, Daugherty failed to show that any of the 53,000 prosecutions terminated by his department involved convictions of those guilty of war graft, profiteering and fraud. All of the famous 17,000 affidavits secured by the Burns-Daugherty forces to support their injunction plea were secured by these same Burns' detectives from the strike-breaking scum recruited by the railroad owners against the organized workers fighting to maintain their sinking standard of living.

Daugherty's campaign speech is but a replica of the utterances of other old party politicians, an hypocritical effort to convince awakened labor that it is getting equal treatment with the bosses at the hands of the capitalist state.

But the workers know that the "hard-boiled" bosses rule in every branch of the government, even as they rule industry, and they are making increasing use of that knowledge by intelligent action against their oppressors. The "hard-boiled" bosses will develop "hard-boiled," instead of chicken-hearted and submissive workers, and in the struggle for supremacy that will ensue there will be but one outcome, the victory of the workers over the bosses and all their Hardings and Daughertys.

After the Russian Revolution

Armed with the permission of both the capitalist governments of Europe and the United States, Jean Longuet, French "Socialist," is coming to lecture the American workers on ten different subjects. We note that the subject of one of his discourses will be "After the Russian Revolution."

Now that Longuet has been given the permission of Washington and Paris to travel and talk, it is not expected that he will tell us why his French government has been ousting Communists of other countries, attending the French Party Congress these past few days.

Franz Dahlen, director of the German Communist organ, the Rote Fahne, was taken in charge by the police and put on a train bound for the Belgian frontier.

Tom Bell, fraternal delegate of the British Communist Party, was expelled from the country, a similar fate being meted out to Hungarian and Italian fraternal delegates. The reports state that the representative of the Communist International managed to make his appeal to the congress, but do not say whether he also was driven out of the country.

Perhaps Longuet will tell us the why of this difference between the treatment he received and that meted out to the Communists.

Perhaps Longuet will tell us, on behalf of his "Socialist" friends in Germany, why Communists are thrown into prison by the score and monarchists allowed to go free, as the result of clashes at a demonstration, why the editors of the Communist daily, the Rote Fahne, are arrested while monarchist editors are allowed to carry on their fight against labor unmolested.

All of this ought to be a part of Longuet's lecture, "After the Russian Revolution." It should be so because the capitalists and their "Socialist" allies in Germany and France, fear that this same Russian Revolution will penetrate to their countries. Therefore, all Communists must be hounded, and jailed, and occasionally conveniently put out of the way, as in the case of Liebknecht, Luxemburg and others.

Perhaps Longuet will say something about these things. Our guess is that he wont. Because if he did it would be a confession of guilt, involving him in the crimes of capitalism against the real spokesmen of oppressed labor.

Why Not Investigate "The Forward"

Abe Cahan is editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, a New York Socialist paper. Abe Cahan and his paper are anti-Communist, anti-Soviet Russia. Abe Cahan hates to see famine relief sent to Soviet Russia, he hates to see American workers buy shares of stock for the regeneration of Russia, he hates to see food and clothes sent to Russia's orphans.

Because he hates all this he attacked the Friends of Soviet Russia. The Friends of Soviet Russia had scored a huge success. It had sent almost a million dollars worth of food, clothes and tools to Russia. Its overhead for this million in relief was far below that of charitable and bourgeois relief organizations. Abe Cahan knew that the vital spot of any public relief organization is its finances. Abe Cahan charged that the FSR had misappropriated money. Abe Cahan did this to discourage contributions to the FSR. Abe Cahan did not recommend any other organization to which contributions for Russian relief should be made.

And because of this Abe Cahan stands guilty of the number of deaths that may occur as a result of his unfounded attack.

By the way, what has Abe Cahan done to relieve the famine in Russia? We know his brain is wrong, but was his heart compassionate, did he show sympathy?

Abe Cahan did lean towards Hoover's American Relief Administration, but he never made a campaign in the interests of the ARA. The Socialist party did campaign for relief funds for Russia, got together with the New York Call a total of about $15,000, but Abe Cahan did not help, did not even help his own party, mind you.

We have been told that while Soviet Russia suffered most, Abe Cahan did make an independent appeal for relief funds thru his paper. This appeal is supposed to have netted about $2,000. It is said, that he never made a full report of the receipts, that a registered auditor never gave him a clean bill and it is rumored that he can not prove that he issued receipts for the money he received.

Suppose we would now call for an investigating committee to investigate misappropriation of funds by the Jewish Daily Forward? Suppose that we would now charge that funds had been misused. We wonder how Abe Cahan would like it!

M. Kalinin is President of Soviet Russia. The Friends of Soviet Russia has just received a cablegram from Kalinin, commending its work. An organization that can get an O.K. from Kalinin need pay no attention to Abe Cahan.

They Are Throwing Boomerangs

It must be conceded that the speaking campaign of Governor Nathan Miller, of New York, for re-election, is a brilliant effort on behalf of capitalism. And because he is a straight-out capitalist spokesman, Miller usually comes clean on class struggle issues.

He told the railroad workers of Hornell, N. Y., who had been beaten up by the state police, when they were on strike, that, "I do not intend that any Herrin Massacre shall occur in this state so long as I am governor."

And in the same hour that he was saying these words the organized workers of Illinois were gathered in state convention denouncing the capitalist misrule, for which Governor Miller stands and that makes Herrin Massacres inevitable.

The governor of New York opposes every measure beneficial to labor, and stands with the Attorney General Brundage-Chamber of Commerce dictatorship in Illinois that is attempting to send to the gallows scores of coal miners in the Herrin mining district.

When Miller and all his capitalist gang, from President Harding down to the cheapest Tammany ward healer, attack the workers as guilty of the Herrin Massacre, they are throwing a boomerang that will return to plague and torment them.

If the Republican and Democratic politicians, with their masters in Wall street, want to make of the Herrin Massacre a national issue, as their acts and utterances indicate, the working class is ready, to take up the fight, blow for blow.

American capitalism threw a boomerang in the Mooney case and it came back carrying the aroused protest of labor in all sections of the world.

The bosses threw another boomerang in the Sacco-Vanzetti case and it came back loaded with the dynamite of universal working-class condemnation.

The railroad owners, thru Attorney General Daugherty, hurled a boomerang in the form of an injunction against the shopmen, and it came back blistering the whole Republican administration.

Entrenched dollars launched another boomerang against "The Reds," in the form of raids in Michigan and Chicago, and it is returning to taunt the profiteers with the growing protest of new, and hitherto inert, masses of workers.

The Herrin boomerang is the most dangerous to capitalism. It involves the largest and most closely knit labor organization in this country—the United Mine Workers of America. The Herrin incident was an open fight between strongly organized workers on the other hand and the arrogant mine owners and their hirelings on the other. And the workers won.

Herrin was not a repetition of Virden, Ill., where years ago, in the youth of the Illinois miners' union, the mine owners' assassins murdered striking and defenseless workers in cold blood. No mine owners then, as at Herrin now, were indicted and put on trial for murder.

From 1883 to the close of the year 1921, the delegates to the Illinois Federation of Labor were told, 5,113 coal miners had been reported killed in Illinois mines. The guilty mine owners, who have fought all safety legislation that would have prevented many of these deaths, have never been troubled by "capitalist justice."

We challenge every old party politician and candidate, like Governor Miller, of New York, to make of the Herrin "Massacre" an issue in this campaign.

No other issue would draw so clearly the class-struggle lines between capital and labor. The workers would understand on which side they belong, an understanding that would not so easily develop out of sham battles over the tariff, the bonus, the Volstead act vs. wine and beer, in addition to those minor skirmishes that so delight the heart of the old party politicians and the petty reformers.

The fight is on. Let the struggle grow until labor comes into its own. Capitalism has sponsored the "fist to face" policy, but it will be the face of capital that will unsuccessfully meet the onslaught of the hardened fist of labor.

The Struggle for Respectability

Now that Lloyd George has resigned as prime minister of the British Empire and the parliamentary elections are rapidly approaching, we find the politicians of the Labor Party carrying on a struggle for respectability, which is merely one form of the plea for votes.

"We are often referred to as Bolsheviks," complains Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor Party, himself a member of parliament, "whereas," he continues, "we are not members of the Communist Party. We were tarred with this in the 1918 elections. As a matter of fact there has never been any effort or chance for a labor revolution in England. Besides we are a duly organized, constitutional party."

Henderson then goes on to testify as to the respectability of the 400 candidates the Labor Party has to offer. He says that among them are to be found "lawyers, doctors, generals, pastors, writers, bankers, teachers and journalists. It is a common error to believe our membership is limited to manual workers. Many of our members are intellectual workers who want honest pay for their services."

Judging from Henderson's statement it is quite a crime in the eyes of the politicians of the Laor Party to be an ordinary worker, not to be among the honor roll that he mentions: Norman Angell, author and lecturer; Rev. Gordon Lang, General C. B. Thomson, one of the British military staff at the Versailles Peace Conference; G. M. Gillett, banker; Charles Diamond, editor of the Catholic Herald of London; Dr. Hadon Guest, Russian Famine Relief Worker, and Fenner Brockway, editor.

Considering these declarations by Henderson, one can easily understand the value of the Communist tactic in England to support the Labor Party in its political aspirations. Let this "respectable labor" aggregation once get into power and the masses of disrespectable workers will soon realize the mistake they have made.

The inevitable struggle of the British Labor Party for "respectability," for constitutional standing, for being considered non-Bolshevik, will rapidly alienate the support of the masses who care nothing, in the last analysis for respectability, who ultimately achieve a very disrespectable revolution, in that it fails to respect the niceties of capitalist ethics and manners.

This is the disrespect that met Ben Tillett, when he came down to the London waterfront in a limousine to address a mass meeting of British dock workers. He had not gotten far in his talk when a water-front worker blurted out in his peculiar Cockney, "Who gave you the bloomin' automobile, anyway?"

These dockworkers were suspicious of Tillett and his expensive car, and they will also be getting suspicious of the lawyers, doctors, generals, pastors and bankers who are flocking into the Labor Party at a time when it is rising to power. When they get good and disgusted with their respectable spokesmen then the big drift to the British Communist Party will begin.

GREETINGS TO THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE RUSSIAN SOVIET REPUBLIC

Love and kisses to the Soviet Government! Have send my photograph to Russia as a token of my profound devotion to the Revolution.—Lovingly, Sammie Gompers.

Hail to the Soviet Revolution! No longer need we rob to make a living. Since the establishment of the Soviet government we make a great deal more money by keeping this country safe for demockracy.—Faithfully, The Bomb Squad.

Have set November seventh as the date for my wedding, to enable both working class victories to be celebrated simultaneously.—Fraternally, Kaiser Bill.

Greetings to the Soviet Government! Have a fine line of injunctions for export. If in need of any, kindly have me in mind. Will mail catalogue upon request.—At your services, Harry Daugherty.

Cheers to the Soviet Government! Just found out that it's better to be an ordinary commissar in a stable Soviet republic than a Premier for the bourgeosie.—Unhappily yours, Lloyd George.

Long live the Soviet Government! The lies about it have made me famous.—Apologetically, Abe Cahan.

Sincerest congratulations to Soviet Russia! Will welcome remunerations for the free publicity given that government.—Affectionately, Bill Burns.

"AFTER READING MY CALL"

Not By Harriot Stanton Blatch

It's a good thing the name of the paper appears on each page of the Call. At times after reading a news story or editorial we get confused and think it's the Times.

Brother Karsner well chose the title for his colyum. He sure enough is "here and there and everywhere" but with the revolutionary movement.

We never knew his colyum was facetious until he inserted his photograph in the caption. Funny how some people are inconsiderate of the feelings of their readers.

It hardly compliments the editorial writers of the Call, if the publishers must specify in one inch type which one is the editorial.

"What Call Readers Think" was righteously discontinued. It was preposterous, any one who is a reader of the Call consequently does not think.

Due credit must be given the Call for its sporting page. It's the most prolix in the city. It contains everything from socialist debates to divorce proceedings.

AN EAST BROADWAY TRAGEDY

Abie Forwardsky, the Editor-in-Cheese of the Backward, was in high spirits. He had just handed in a fiery editorial about the Friends of Soviet Russia and seemed exceptionally pleased with his work. It was what he considered a masterpiece of socialistic journalism. He bitterly denounced in it the F. of S. R. for their pro-bolshevik policy and called upon the workers of America not to extend any aid to Russia until the Soviet Government dissolves that organization and appoints the Backward to function in its place.

He read it over three times and felt more satisfied each time. His ecstasy reached unbounded extremes. In his imagination he vividly portrayed himself as the Messiah of the American working class. In his fancy he already saw the destruction of the Friends of Soviet Russia, the gradual death of the Workers Party and the entire Communist movement annihilated as a consequence of his editorial. Then he pictured himself as the head of a yellow labor government in this country; leaders of Soviet Russia coming before him to beg forgiveness for their misdeeds — —

"Say, Abe, you'll have to kill that editorial. A cable just came from Kalinin denying all the charges you've made in the editorial against the Friends."

"That damned bolshevik! I wish he was on East Broadway, I'd [illegible] him how to ruin my entire [illegible]

Significance of the Russian Revolution to the Trade Unionists of the World

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER, Secretary, Trade Union Educational League.

Aside from its great inspirational force, perhaps the greatest importance of the Russian Revolution to unionists generally, is the fact that it has made clear as daylight the function of the trade unions, both in bringing about the revolution and in reconstructing society upon a proletarian basis.

Before the Russian Revolution these vital matters, particularly the question of organizing the new society, were entirely a matter of speculation. But that great event lifted them from the realm of philosophy into that of definite knowledge.

In pre-revolutionary days the most militant type of labor unionist, the syndicalist, believed that the reorganization of society was a comparatively simple matter, and that their unions without the aid of a state could take direct charge of industry and carry on production and the social process generally.

But the Russian Revolution has shown the unsoundness of this conception. Production has proved a much more complicated and difficult process than had been supposed In the great Russian upheaval the labor unions have been unable to master the industries, and have to call to their assistance the bourgeois technical experts This is an unpleasant fact but one which realistic revolutionaries must reckon with.

And not only have the unions been unable to operate industry by themselves. but the whole syndicalist conception of a purely industrial social mechanism has proved unworkable By the force of circumstances impossible to avoid, the workers have been compelled, in spite of themselves, to create a political state with all its organs of repression in order to achieve communism

Another most important lesson taught trade unionists by the Russian Revolution is the great significance of the small minority of militants in the big mass of the workers

Before the revolution, the syndicalist theory of the militant minority had some inkling of this matter but it remained for the great events in Russia to make it really clear

Whereas, the syndicalists with their indefinite conception of the power of the active workers when organized together extended the theory only to the trade unions, the Russian Revolution showed that in the newly born society these organized militants were the heart and soul of, not only the trade unions, but also of every social institution

The Russian Communist Party with its nuclei of active workers effectively controlling the state, the army, the trade unions, the industries, the schools, etc., in the face of a practically non revolutionary population, is a living demonstration of the tremendous, and hitherto practically unsuspected power of a few clear headed brave spirits working among the mass in a united and determined manner

This revelation of the power of the militants is particularly valuable in the present struggle being carried on all over the world by the trade unions. The Russian Revolution has made the militants consider seriously the fact that the fate of all working-class institutions rests in their hands. And it has shown them clearly how to organize together in order to effectively perform their historic task as the life giving element in the labor movement.

It has taught the militants that they must not be dismayed by their fewness in numbers but must boldly penetrate the great organized mass and by their intelligent organization control it.

The recognition of this fact has brought a revolution in the tactics of American trade union radicals. It has heartened them to enter the conservative trade unions and shown them the way to develop these hitherto impossible organizations into revolutionary activity, in making clear the true functions of the trade unions in the revolution and in demonstrating the importance and power of the organized militants.

NIKOLAI LENIN

TO MOSCOW! .... By Jack Carney

The world war brought to our attention the pleas of those nations suffering under the yoke of a foreign power. Whether it be the Irish, Egyptians, Haitians, Filipinos or the Hindus, they all demanded the right to govern themselves.

The development of present day society is toward world domination. The United States, France and England fight today for control of other regions far removed from their own. The expansion of industry drives them forth, to seek new markets, new fields of raw materials, etc. So the world witnesses the bloody struggles such as the world war in which over 9,000,000 lost their lives and 30,000,000 were wounded. These struggles are unavoidable, the pacifist to the contrary, so long as the present system operates. They are the product of the system.

In these struggles the contending nations use all the arts of modern diplomacy. They "free" nations as they "freed" Rumania (1880), Serbia (1878), Bulgaria (1908) and Ireland (1921). When they can use these nations as tools in their fights they grant them "independence." How free is Poland, Rumania, Serbia, Bulgaria or any of the oppressed nationalities? What measure of freedom does Finland, Latvia and Esthonia enjoy?

Yet, strange as it may seem, there are nations today, oppressed nationalities of former days, who enjoy a measure of freedom not enjoyed by even the workers of the United States, or any other capitalist nation. We refer to Georgia, Azerbaijan and Armenia. These nations are watched over by Soviet Russia. Let any imperialist army enter any of these nations with a view to exploiting them and the forces of the Red Army will march forward and defend them. For Soviet Russia stands for the overthrow of the present system and the establishment of the only system that will make possible independence of nations—Communism. Fighting its own battle against the combined forces of world imperialism it always assists those who are fighting imperialism as witnessed in the aid given to the Turkish troops

Oppressed nationalities must turn towards Moscow and away from Washington. The United States will willingly recognize an Irish Republic if it is given the opportunity of utilizing Ireland as a base from which to attack England.

Soviet Russia calls upon the Irish working class and the British working class to unite their forces and overthrow their common enemy—the British ruling class As each nation finds itself rid of its ruling class it will unite with Moscow, and the greater the number of victories the more weakened world imperialism becomes

No hope for oppressed nationalities is to be expected from the imperialists. Paris, London and New York stand for capitalist exploitation and oppression. Moscow stands for the overthrow of imperialism and the inauguration of the Federated Soviet Republics of the World.

The recognition of the foregoing facts will make the task of oppressed nationalities that much lighter. On the other hand the failure to recognize them means starvation and bloody slaughter, to be constantly utilized as pawns in the bloody games of the imperialists, as Greece is. Moscow offers the only road worthwhile traveling nay, it is the road you have to travel. Why hesitate?

Olgin in Brownsville

Good Memories in Bulgaria

By W. F. D.

The workers and peasants of Bulgaria have good memories. They have held a referendum vote on the question of trial and punishment for the men who dragged them into the European war, and all indications point to an overwhelming majority for the trial.

It will not be the ordinary procedure which usually results in the whitewashing of the guilty parties, for provision is made for setting up a people's court which will supersede the ordinary legal tribunals.

There has not been a revolution in Bulgaria yet, but the workers and peasants feel that they can take power as soon as the menace of Allied militarism passes. The trial of the rulers whose hands are stained with the blood of the Bulgarian masses will be a preliminary incident to the passing of the power to the workers and peasants' government, and it establishes a precedent which will cause others than the Bulgarian rulers to tremble.

Murdering millions for profit is due to become a dangerous pastime in a shorter time than many apologists of the present system think.

The Bulgarians may be a bit backward and crude when compared to our civilized state, but their good intentions are shown by the fact that it is the rulers who are to be tried.

COLORADO 11TH STATE TO VOTE FOR AMALGAMATION

TRINIDAD, Colo.—By voting for consolidating the craft unions into industrial unions, the Colorado State Federation of Labor, in convention here, went on record as the 11th state body within four months to indorse amalgamation.

Led by Otto R. Hartwig, its president, the Oregon State Federation of Labor, in session at Salem, Ore., adopted the Portland Central Labor body's resolution for amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions, one for each industry

According to the count of The Worker, this makes the tenth state federation of labor to adopt amalgamation resolutions

In the Oregon convention an amendment was passed explaining that the industrial unionism endorsed is the type represented by industrially organized unions within the American Federation of Labor, and not those like the I. W. W. and the O. B. U. With this amendment which was satisfactory to all the delegates, Hartwig, who is rated as a conservative in labor circles, took the floor for the resolution.

We reported last week that Amalgamation resolutions had been adopted by the South Dakota Federation of Labor. We are this week able to publish the text of these resolutions. They are as follows:

Resolutions of South Dakota Labor

Whereas, We have been taught by experience that the trade union movement dividing the workers working in the same industry into several different craft unions, have proved to be an absolute failure in protecting the interests of the workers, which has been so convincingly proven by the events of the last few years of industrial struggle, and

Whereas, This form of organization tends to divide the workers instead of uniting them, thereby fostering a state of things which allows one set of workers to be pitted against others in the same industry, thereby helping to defeat one another in the struggles that may arise between the employing class and the working class; and

Whereas, Each international union seeking only to protect its own craft, ignoring the vital necessity of solidarity among all of the workers, feeling that should lay nearest to the heart of every working man; and

Whereas, We hold that an injury to one is an injury to all, therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention of the State Federation of South Dakota, go on record endorsing the principle of organizing all the workers working in the same industry into one industrial union in each industrial department; and be it further

Resolved, That the State Federation seek to establish a uniform wage scale for each trade over the whole state, uniform working hours, and other working conditions.

Too Many Officers

Whereas, It is absolutely too expensive, and unnecessary to maintain so many international officers in each industrial department, therefore be it

Resolved, That the State Federation of South Dakota in convention assembled, expresses as its opinion that the different international organizations should be consolidated into one international organization of each industrial department, and we further express as our view that the international officers should be nominated and elected by a referendum vote of the entire membership.

All Adherents of Red International of Labor Unions Greet Russian Revolution

By EARL BROWDER, Associate Editor, The Labor Herald

The Red International of Labor Unions was born out of the Russian Revolution. It is therefore fitting that its second congress is being held, like the first, in Moscow, and that it is immediately after the Fifth Anniversary of the establishment of the Soviet Government. Nowhere else on the face of the globe could the revolutionary workers have come together in congress to form their organization except in Soviet Russia.

That country, one-sixth of the earth's surface, is the only spot where the police agents of the capitalist class do not hound and persecute all workers who do not bow to their will and accept their rule as ordained by Almighty God. But Russia is ruled by the workers and it was in Moscow that the international workers, the Red International of Labor Unions, found the protection necessary to establish its organization. There is, therefore, the closest bond of solidarity between the Red International and the Soviet Government of Russian workers and peasants.

The Russian Revolution, child of the working-class movement of the world, has in its turn, thus, been the father of the Red International in this sense as the protector and inspirer of its birth. Of this fact every revolutionary worker is proud.

The slanderers of the Russian revolution, both its open capitalistic enemies and the covert enemies, the renegade revolutionists, make use of this to lie about the Red International, and accuse it of being but a mask tool for the Russian Communists

This is a malicious slander which only the simple-minded listen to. It is significant that all the so-called working-class organizations which have so attacked the Red International have also become the avowed enemies of the Russian Revolution.

They thus expose themselves as the I. W. W. in America and the syndicalists in Germany have done as the enemies not simply of the Red International, but of the entire proletarian revolution They are either blinded by fanatical dogma or they are yellow hearted cowards crawling for the favors of their capitalistic overlords

Yes the Russian Revolution and the Red International are one in their spirit and goal, both expressions of the working class movement the movement toward the World Revolution And in the Red International, kin of the Russian Revolution, all workers even the misguided ones, who slander it find welcome and protection.

The trade unionists all over the world are coming quickly to know these facts. Even in America, long considered the hopeless prey of Gompersism, the Red International of Labor Unions is finding thousands of new friends each week, all the healthy elements in the labor movement, those who stood by Soviet Russia thru all her trials as friends have also instinctively sensed that the Red International was their own organization expressing their own hopes and needs their own aspirations.

If the progress of the Red International in America continues at the pace of the past year America will soon be one of the solid constituent parts of this great working class organization.

All adherents of the Red International of Labor Unions will receive the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution with rejoicing.

The revolutionary unionists of America and of the world look to Soviet Russia as the hope and promise in a world which otherwise offers nothing but bitter struggle against capitalist slavery, and each succeeding anniversary will see the first workers' republic stronger, not alone in the growing strength of its proletarian industry and government, but also in the growing spirit of the trade unionists of the Red International of Labor Unions, the fighting line against the capitalist system all over the world.

FROM THE MILITARY REVOLUTIONARY COMMITTEE OF PETROGRAD SOVIET OF WORKERS AND SOLDIERS DEPUTIES

To the Citizens of the Russian Republic

The Provisional Government has been overthrown. The sovereign authority has passed to the Petrograd Soviet of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies of Military Revolutionary Committee, which is at the head of the Petrograd proletariat and the garrisons.

The cause for which the people has been fighting: immediate proposal of democratic peace, repeal of freehold land properties, the workers' control over production, the forming of the Government of Soviets—is guaranteed.

Long live the revolution of the workers, soldiers and peasants!

A Brain Contortion

At the last regular meeting of Typographical Union No. 6, of New York, a resolution in favor of the formation of an independent political party of labor was adopted. In publishing a report of the adoption of the resolution the New York Call, organ of American Menshevism, declared the adoption of such a resolution was a boost for Edward F. Cassidy, Socialist and Farmer-Labor Party nominee for governor

As a matter of fact the resolution adopted by "Big Six" had nothing to do with the present campaign and not by any stretch of the imagination can it be construed as a boost for Cassidy or any other candidate of any Party

The resolution simply urges the members of the union to support the Executive Council of the International Typographical Union in its efforts to aid other groups of union leaders in the formation of a political party of labor at a convention to be held in December in Chicago.

It is no more an endorsement of Cassidy and the Socialist Party than it is an endorsement of Bill Dunne and the Workers Party, and not any brain contortion of the half-wits who comprise the so-called editorial staff of that yellow rag can alter the plain fact in the case.

If "Big Six" had intended to endorse the Socialist Party candidate, who is a member of that union, it would have done so without any equivocation. If the Socialist Party members of "Big Six" thought they could jam thru an endorsement of the muddle-headed Cassidy and the petty-bourgeois platform of that creation of political tricksters, known as the American Labor Party, they would have done so long ago. They did not dare attempt it for it would have exposed how puny their influence really is in that organization, after years of agitation.

There are militant members of "Big Six" who are anxiously awaiting the time when the Socialist Party openly solicits the endorsement of that organization so that they can tell the membership of the whole infamous record of that alleged party of "democracy."

They will explain the brand of "democracy" used in 1919 when the executive committee of that party refused to surrender their offices to their duly elected successors and expelled some sixty thousand members who voted against them in order to retain their power at the head of the organization and how later in the same year they used the police force of the city of Chicago to forcibly evict duly elected delegates to the national convention of the party when it was evident that the majority of the convention was against them.

Let this aggregation of fakirs seek endorsement of any important section of the printing trades and we will guarantee that they will never attempt it again.

About a year ago they tried to separate Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 from a thousand dollars to launch a twin whelp of the New York Call in that city, but they met with a disaster that knocked them blind and senseless.

Since then the mere mention of the Socialist Party in that union has provoked sardonic laughter.—H. M. W.

Order a Bundle of This Issue! Spread Message of Soviet Rule!

[illegible] Russia has just been made public. It indicates that the Corporation, organized by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and the F.S.R. are in complete agreement. Russia's future, both groups point out, depends in large measure upon the restoration of its economic life.

Fred G. Biedenkapp, one of the best known figures in the labor movement of the east, will direct the R.A.I.C. work for the F.S.R. The sale of shares of stock in the corporation will be one of his chief objects in an extended tour for the Friends of Soviet Russia beginning Nov. 1st.

The invitation to the F.S.R., signed by Jacob Potofsky, secretary-treasurer of the corporation reads as follows:

Letter from Amalgamated

"We wish to obtain your aid and co-operation in a matter touching the ideals for which your movement was organized. It is the project for the participation of all workers of America in the economic reconstruction of Russia.

"The immense results of your efforts for famine relief should command the admiration of all. We do not wish in the least to diminish that form of relief work.

"But as you know, donations of food cannot permanently solve the economic distress of the new Russian Republic. You have shown your appreciation of this fact by widening your efforts to include the sending of agricultural machinery so as to provide against further famine in the coming year. This phase of the work is ever growing larger.

"Recognizing that action by Labor might help break the deadlock between the international bankers and the Russian Soviet Government, and would afford some measure of economic relief, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America took the initiative. At its Biennial Convention last May, in Chicago, at the instance of President Hillman, who visited Russia last year and obtained a very favorable concession, the Amalgamated authorized the formation of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation and subscribed out of its treasury for Fifty Thousand Dollars worth of stock.

"The Russian-American Industrial Corporation has since been chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware with a capitalization of a million dollars, in shares of ten dollars each.

"This Corporation now invites you, as well as all other labor and fraternal organizations to join hands in the drive to sell the Million Dollars of stock for the industrial reconstruction of Russia. We believe it is your duty, as friends of Russia, to extend whatever help may be in your power and we are confident that you will lend your full co-operation in this great task which is holding out so much hope to Russia."

The F. S. R. Accepts

The acceptance by the F.S.R. reads:

"Receipt of your communication of October 10th, inviting our aid and co-operation in your project to secure the aid and the interest of American workers for the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia, is hereby acknowledged.

"We enthusiastically accept this invitation and promise you our best and most earnest efforts in the campaign you now have under way to sell one million dollars' worth of stock for the laudable purpose of Russia's regeneration.

"That donations of food cannot permanently solve the economic distress of this first Workers' Republic is admitted, and yet we feel it our duty to answer the call for food and clothes and medicaments for the tens of thousands of Russia's orphans robbed of their parents by the serious famine of last winter. This call, just received by us, we feel sure will touch the hearts of all sympathetic Americans.

However, assisting in economic reconstruction does [illegible] permanent and lasting relief. Having realized this from the very start of our work, not only did we send to Soviet Russia the agricultural unit of twenty-one tractors and accessories referred to by you in your letter, but the International Workers' Relief Committee, at its Third World Congress last July, organized an International Workers' Corporation in Berlin which, upon a program similar to yours, is now interesting the workers of all countries in aiding Soviet Russia fundamentally by helping in the restoration of its economic life.

"This International Corporation is now floating a workers' loan of three million dollars, interest at five per cent, repayment in gold being guaranteed by the Soviet Government of Russia. The Friends of Soviet Russia is organically affiliated with the International Workers' Relief Committee and is therefore vitally interested in the success of this loan. A cablegram received recently from this International Corporation reads in part: "Soviet Government offers International Workers' Relief Committee reconstruction of steel industry with coal and iron concessions. Large capital necessary. Coalition of workers' relief organizations under International Workers' Relief Committee essential. This new decision of the Soviet Government an unparalleled opportunity."

"The national executive committee of the Friends of Soviet Russia has decided not to distract attention from your splendid efforts by injecting, at this time, the project of the International Workers' Corporation. But our organization sincerely hopes that at a very early date such unity of your project and our projects may be effected as will make it possible for us jointly to offer to all American workers' organizations and sympathizers the privilege of participating in one gigantic undertaking for the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia.

"Until such unity of effort is attained, we shall give you our most energetic assistance. It gives us deep satisfaction to cooperate in a work such as that undertaken by the Russian-American Industrial Corporation with a labor union as progressive and humanitarian as the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. We would suggest to you that special efforts should be made to make plain that all labor unions and other working class organizations are equally welcome in this enterprise.

"Again, greetings and best wishes for the success of your corporation, for indeed, in the great task you have undertaken you are holding out much hope to Soviet Russia, yes, and to the workers of the world.

"Very fraternally yours,
"Friends of Soviet Russia."

[illegible] were too paralyzed with fear to follow others, huddled like rats in the safety pits, were buried alive."

CHICAGO.—The library work of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in this city is being extended. Sylvia Friedberg, formerly with the Chicago public library, has been engaged to take charge of the work. Additional books are being bought for the union's library, and it is planned to make it a circulating department of the Chicago public library.

Socialist Party Consistency

Recently one of the editors of "The Messenger," a Socialist publication appealing to the colored race in America, declared that one Marcus Garvey should be deported from the country after serving a prison sentence for alleged flim-flamming of certain gullible members of his race with a project for establishing an independent negro nation somewhere in Africa.

Thus, while the Socialist Party professes to be horrified at the spectacle of wholesale deportations by the government of the United States, one of its prominent members advocates deportation for his political and racial enemy. While Garvey has undoubtedly been guilty of infringing upon the ignorance of fellow-members of his race and should be treated the same as any other grafter, it is hardly becoming an alleged radical to advocate deportation for him or anyone else.

The jealousy of Garvey probably arises from the fact that Garvey is able to market his brand of hoakum at a good price, while A. Philip Randolph, who is at present a candidate for secretary of state on the Socialist ticket, and one Chandler Owen, his associate editor on "The Messenger," have not yet learned all the tricks of the delicate art of gold-bricking the public.

While Garvey may be guilty of imposing a colossal fake upon gullible members of his race, he is certainly not any greater criminal than those who try to organize them into the yellow Socialist Party on the pretense that support of such an aggregation of fakirs will ever result in improving their own miserable condition.

To be consistent they should also advocate the deportation of the entire Socialist Party for the crime of operating a con game.

The history of the [illegible] District 5 [illegible] revealed in District 5 the characteristics that reached their full bloom in District 14 when Alexander Howat and his comrades were outlawed.

In 1914 an effort was made to organize the Allegheny Valley because it was recognized by the rank and file in the Monongahela Valley that it was necessary to organize the non-union fields if the district was to amount to anything. This attempt never got seriously beyond an abortive effort to organize the mine at Harwick, Pa.

In 1916 a bigger and more successful campaign to organize this section took place. It was at this time that a certain labor newspaperman who had gotten into the coal game as a small operator made his debut. It was no less a person than A. R. Hamilton, better known to the members of the U. M. W. of A. far and wide, as "Al" Hamilton.

All the circumstances seem to indicate that Hamilton was more than favorable to an organization of certain mines in the Allegheny Valley. He had a few mines in Butler County but the organization campaign was so handled by Van Bitner that Hamilton's mines were not organized with the result he was able to compete with union mines on a non-union basis.

Once when the organization enthusiasm of the miners began to spread towards Butler County, Van Bitner who was in New York negotiating with the operators at the time wired to organizers in charge to withdraw from certain camps where they were working. His instructions were disregarded and the camps were organized.

In spite of the fact that Hamilton escaped without having to sign with the union the Executive Board of District Five following the strike of 1916 adopted a resolution thanking Hamilton for his services in "helping win the strike." Could anything be more brazen than to thank a non-union operator for his "help" in organizing a field in which he was personally benefitted? Van Bitner can be credited for this manipulation. At the present time Hamilton mines in Butler County are operating "open shop."

Shortly after this strike of 1916, Harry Kinlock of the Valley Camp Coal Company at Valley Camp, Pa., in a large public meeting openly charged that Van Bitner had offered to sell out the strike for $5,000. WE CHALLENGE VAN BITNER TO DENY THIS CHARGE.

This is only a little glimpse of the terrible corruption that exists in District 5 which has undoubtedly turned out more clever reactionaries than any other district in the country.

Gompers and the Russian Revolution

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Revolutionary Russia has resisted the attacks of the armies of imperialism launched against her workers and peasants; she has weathered the internal strife fomented jointly by foreign governments and the reactionary elements of her own population; she has survived one of the greatest famines of history; the blockade by capitalist nations robbed her of medicine antiseptics and anaesthetics and allowed disease to ravage her people.

A terrible but a glorious five years and the Russian revolution still stands and inspires the workers of the world while capitalism, her enemy, grows rapidly weaker.

Bitterest of all enemies of the Russian revolution have been the capitalists of America and—the officialdom of the American labor movement headed by Samuel Gompers. There is no blacker blot on the pages of the history of American labor than the consistent efforts made by Samuel Gompers and his henchmen to out-Herod Herod in slaying the sturdy child of the world revolution that was born in darkest Russia on November 7, 1917.

Samuel Gompers took his cue from his master and mentor—Woodrow Wilson—the man who sold the workers of this nation into bloody slavery to the finance-capitalists of America after he had lulled them to sleep with fair phrases. Woodrow Wilson used his mighty influence to plunge the workers of this nation into the European blood-feast at the command of the House of Morgan and to this greedy crew Samuel Gompers turned over the organized labor movement of the United States to do with as they chose.

Since the time of the Root mission to Russia when James Duncan, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor urged patronage of the union label to the Russian workers who stood over the corpse of Russian capitalism with arms in their hands, the policy of labor officialdom has been just as stupid but has become more and more a reflex of the attitude of the most brutal tendencies of American capitalism.

Officially, as president of the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers has hailed with joy every new attempt to overthrow the workers government of Russia by force of arms. Kolchak, Denikin, Yudenitch and Wrangel have all received his blessing. He was persona grata at the headquarters of the adventurer Bakhmeteff—the protege and spoiled darling of the blackest reactionaries of America. The voice of Samuel Gompers has been raised with that of Herbert Hoover, the New York Times and every other foe of the workers at home and abroad in denunciation of the Russian Revolution and Russian revolutionaries. The only victory of the workers in history is to him only something on which to vent his spleen.

The terrible famine brought on by drought with its horrible consequences, intensified by the blockade did not soften his heart, he saw in it exactly what the imperialists saw—something that would weaken the resistance of the Russian workers and leave them an easy prey to the vultures of world imperialism who hovered on the borders of their country.

Samuel Gompers has repeated all the monstrous lies with which the press has slandered the Russian Revolution and he has clung to and reiterated these fabrications long after they had been discredited by the logic of events and discarded by their authors.

At the Montreal convention of the A. F. of L. he used his influence for the adoption of a resolution denouncing the Russian Revolution that for sheer falsehood, utter reaction and display of abysmal ignorance places the officialdom of the labor movement of America side by side with imperialists of the type of Winston Churchill, Poincare, Lloyd George and Elihu Root. At the Cincinnati Convention—the Gompers machine had to mobilize all its [illegible] revolutionary Russian workers and their government.

History has already assigned a place to Samuel Gompers. It is a pitiful one as always happens when an individual with stolen authority places himself in opposition to a historical process. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor by grace of the ignorance of the American workers will not be remembered for long. In the brief interval in which his name will be mentioned in connection with the Russian Revolution it will be greeted with an undertone of curses beneath the cheers that rise to heaven for those whom he reviled.

The Russian Revolution is in its [illegible] before it and the workers it [illegible] a wondrous future. Samuel Gompers, with the capitalist [illegible] he has defended, are in the throes of senile decay. The stage is being set by history for new scenes, whose meaning the mind of Gompers and those he represents, cannot understand.

On the fifth anniversary of the Russian Revolution the intelligent workers know that the senile viciousness of an individual or a system cannot stop the advent of world communism of which the Russian Revolution is the forerunner. It is for this that Communists, the world over, work, go to jail and die while Samuel Gompers and his ilk are petted by the enemies of the working class. It is well. In the struggle each finds his place. Gompers has found his. Few envy him now. None will envy him when the bright-eyed children in a communist society read of the inglorious role he played in the struggle that won a world for the workers.

Harlem Study Classes

Systematic study courses in Marxism have been undertaken by the Harlem English Branch of the Workers Party and the Young Workers' League, and a limited number of additional students can be admitted to all the classes.

The comrades in that district declare they have evolved a good method of extending the party educational work, and are enthusiastic over their prospects of effective work this coming winter.

Their elementary class in process of formation is taking up the study of the "Communist Manifesto" of Marx and Engels: "Socialism Utopian and Scientific" by Engels; "The A. B. C. of Communism" by Bucharin; and the "Communist Program" by Bucharin.

An intermediate class meets on Monday nights and Saturday afternoons from 4 to 6, and includes as textbooks "The Origin of the Family" by Frederick Engels; "The State and Revolution" by N. Lenin; and "Wage Labor and Capital" and "Value, Price and Profit" by Karl Marx.

There is an advanced class announced for students with some understanding of economics and history, which still has about five vacancies, that will study "Capital" and other works by the founders of the theoretical movement of the modern working class.

Julius Godkind, 133 East 97th St., is the educational director of the English Harlem Branches, and says he is willing to answer all inquiries concerning the classes and their work.

England Goes to an Election

With the conservatives temporarily in the saddle, usurping the place vacated by the Lloyd George ministry, Great Britain goes to an election Wednesday, Nov. 15. The new parliament is called to assemble Monday, Nov. 20.

This speed would knock dead an ordinary American politician, who plans presidential campaigns a couple of years ahead, while a congress elected in November doesn't meet in regular session until December, 13 months later.

Workers thruout the world will watch the election campaign in Great Britain and its result at the ballot box, since England will be the seat of reaction in the days to come, with Premier Poincare of France bending to the demands for the opening of commercial relations with Soviet Russia.

By WM. F. KRUSE

We glory in our privilege to celebrate this Nov. 7th the fifth anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic.

The establishment of a working class government by the Russian workers [illegible] light of hope to the revolutionary movement of the world [illegible] taking new courage from the victory of their comrades in what was, till then, considered the most hopeless country in the revolutionary cause, rallied to the red banner of the Third International. The issue between reformism and revolution became clear and unmistakable. The working masses moved steadily left. Thruout the world resounded the rumbling of proletarian uprising.

The International General Staff of capitalist imperialism was fully conscious of this new menace to its continued rule. With every means at its disposal it sought to crush out the life of the new proletarian state before it inspired the workers of all other nations to act likewise on their own behalf.

The armies and navies of almost every capitalist nation on earth were hurled against Russia and her sister soviet states. American and Japanese, English and German, French and Czech, to mention only a few, snapped and bayed at the Russian workers hard at the erection of an industrial democracy where they had demolished the structure of Tsar and capitalist. Not only were these measures ineffective in a military sense, but they created a worldwide sympathy for the Russians who were attacked, a sympathy not expressed merely in resolutions and other abstract forms, but taking on a very concrete, practical phase. Thus in England, Italy and even in the United States we found workers refusing to load ships with cargoes intended for anti-Soviet use. The imperialists very wisely withdrew this exciting form of counter-revolutionary activity.

Their next weapon was the military, financial and moral support of "loyal" and "decent" Russians in their efforts to overthrow the Soviet State. Labels count for nothing, least of all to capitalists seeking to effect their ends. Monarchist or Menshevik, Kolchak or Kerensky,—it was all the same if only the workers' power could be overthrown. But the only effect of this activity was to more clearly expose to the workers both in Russia and thruout the world at large, the naked realities of the class struggle and the need for a 100 per cent control of all the powers of the State as the weapon by which their enemy could be held in subjection.

The blockade, first of products, and then when this became dangerous in the face of worldwide workers' protest, the blockade of credits, hampered Russia's work of reconstruction, but could not defeat the Revolution.

Failing in all these offensive meas[illegible] was the capitalists have fallen back upon a defensive propaganda whose sole purpose is to prevent the spread of Communism beyond the Russian border lines. The frankly reactionary papers, such as, for instance, The Wall Street Journal, have very little value in work of this kind.

This is a battle for the adherence of the working class mind of the world. The closer a newspaper, a pulpit, a lecture forum, a public speaker or author is to the working class ear, the more valuable he is to the capitalist class when put to use at counter-revolutionary propaganda. And in this connection, just as the laborite reformists are the last, most effective bulwark of capitalism against the rising tide of proletarian revolution, so in propaganda work the most effective counter-revolutionist is he who can sugarcoat his poison with radical phrases, who can cloak his present activity with a "past" more or less friendly to the workers' cause.

The most dangerous enemies of working class freedom to-day are some of the "friends, but—" of Soviet Russia. In this class are those who love Russia so much that they desire to replace the present workers' administration with one of politician hirelings of Entente imperialism. There are also those who love the Russian "people" so dearly that they concoct a whole tissue of falsehood with which to slander the only effective working class pro-Russian relief organization in this country, the F. S. R. They love the Revolution so arduously that they spread every capitalist charge of "tyranny," "bloodshed," etc., among the very forces that to a man, should be giving their utmost and best to the cause of the Russian, and thereby, world revolution. The expose of these Judases is a task that they themselves have added to the burdens of those loyal to the workers' fight, but is one whose importance prohibits its being shirked.

On the fifth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution we renew our pledge:—full service to the workers' cause and no quarter to its enemy, no matter what the banner under which he fights.

Rule or Ruin

The fixed policy of the Jewish Daily Forward, as far as the needle trades are concerned, seems to be to rule or ruin any organization whose policy it cannot dictate. Its latest attempt at political trickery was its action in endeavoring to magnify a local issue arising out of elections to the joint board of New York City into a national issue that would embroil the General Office of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The Socialist Party opposition to the General Executive Board of the Amalgamated is in control of the New York Joint Board. This joint board is tainted with all the reactionary virus of the reformist Socialist politicians who follow in the wake of the Cahan-Hillquit combination. The opposition to this board is under the leadership of a group known as the Shop Delegates' League, which has a practical program for bettering the structural organization of the Amalgamated thru legitimate channels. Its weapons are agitation and education in order to convince a majority of the membership of the correctness of its principles.

As the elections just concluded were approaching, the slimy political crooks in charge of the destinies of the Socialist Party henchmen realized that their creatures on the joint board were likely to suffer defeat on a clean-cut issue of the program of the Shop Delegates' League as opposed to the reactionary tendencies prevailing in the local officialdom. So the "Forward," the Jewish organ of the Socialist Party, distorted the charges and counter-charges incident to a heated political campaign in a desperat effort to create the idea that sinister forces were endeavoring t undermine the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Th is typical of the Jesuit tactics of Cahan and his crew: accusin others of the very crimes he himself is guilty of committing. Th English-speaking organ of the Socialist Party, the Daily Ca which is merely a cheap vest-pocket edition of the "Forward" a pearing in the pigeon-English language of Oneal and his ass ciates, quoted with great gusto the diatribes of the "Forward" the effect that "persons who are trying to wreck the organizatio have issued anonymous circulars against the officials of the Ama gamated Clothing Workers," and then indulged in the tirade the "Forward" to the effect that these "secret groups" were know and would be punished, etc. The opposition was not working th "secret groups," but in the open, under the name of the Leag and the leaders of the League are well known to all officials a most members.

The animus that prompts such political manoeuvering on t part of the Socialist Party organs is of long standing, but w fanned into intense fury by the reception that the fakir, Caha received at the last convention of the Amalgamated, held in C cago, which he attempted a vitriolic assault upon the "leftist which acted as a boomerang against him.

The latest assault upon the so-called "leftists" was merel crude attempt to create a breach between the General O of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and their best suppor in order to divide their forces for the benefit of the Socialist Pa

To the credit of the officials of the Amalgamated and the o sition to the Joint Board this wrecking expedition met with di failure, and the real militants in the City of New York will c tinue their work upon the principles they have enunciated. [illegible] the Socialist Party, the Jewish "Forward" and its English pocket edition, the "Call," are pilloried before the world as t to the working class, who will resort to any contemptible t order to gain their ends.

Jury Ends Burns' Frame-Up

Big Problems Before Congress of Communist International

Attack on Labor Planned Under Cover of Michigan Central Wreck Repudiated thru Freeing of Prisoners Held at Gary, Ind.

Thru its refusal to indict John Petrowski and Joseph Popovich, the county grand jury at Gary, Indiana, has sung the final requiem over the attempted Burns' frame-up against labor growing out of the Michigan Central Railroad wreck last August.

The two men, Petrowski and Popovich, still suffering from and bearing the scars of the brutal third degree to which they were subjected, have finally been released from jail.

It was under cover of this frame-up that the Burns-Daugherty terrorists launched their raids in Chicago and Michigan, as a result of which 20 arrests were made of William Z. Foster, secretary of the Trade Union Educational League; C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, and other active and militant spokesmen of labor.

It was with the aid of the general hysteria they hope to arouse thru this frame-up that the Burns-Daugherty outfit planned to enforce their Wilkerson injunction against the striking railroad shopmen to the limit, if necessary to call out the army to make it effective.

It is very interesting to note that the kept press, that spread itself for columns in printing weird stories, first about the Michigan wreck, then the alleged "confessions," then the raids in Chicago and Michigan, then about the Wilkerson injunction, is now silent as the tomb when the grand jury at Gary, Ind., finally [illegible]

In the minds of the great mass of newspaper readers, the Michigan Central wreck, due to a broken down engine, is still a "red plot", as the kept press intends they should believe.

Mob Spirit Still Lives

What mob spirit Burns and Daugherty, therefore, were able to bring to life still lives except where it has ben scotched by the thinking section of the labor press.

One of the prisoners, Charles Usellis, is still being held, but it is predicted that he, too, will soon be released. The only testimony against him is the statement of a Burns-Daugherty stool pigeon who claims he heard Usellis declare that the train should be wrecked. Of course, it is easy for stool pigeons to "hear" anything that government lawyers and sleuths want them to hear.

Michigan Trial Will Proceed

In spite of the failure of the Burns-Daugherty frame-up the preparations for the trial of the 20 militants arrested in Michigan still goes on, as reported in another column by Thomas O'Flaherty, one of the prisoners just released on bail from the Berrien County jail, at St. Joseph, Michigan.

While the Burns-Daugherty department of Justice lynching program is carried forward the workers are enlisting more and more under the standards of the Labor Defense Council.

There should be a branch of the Council in every city of the country. Get in touch with the Labor Defense Council, Federation Building, 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The Illinois Federation of Labor failed to endorse amalgamation at its recent convention in Rockford by a vote of 119 to 148. To the faint-hearted who see in every temporary set-back a disaster this will bring great gobs of gloom, but an analysis of the personnel of the convention and the existing situation in Illinois shows that the amalgamationists scored a very decisive victory.

Delegates from the coal-miners' unions were conspicuous by their absence. The prolonged struggle of last summer has depleted their treasuries; they have the Herrin affair on their hands together with dozens of minor cases and they feel the need of husbanding every dollar. They could not afford to send their usual large delegation and it was largely this circumstance that gave the reactionaries a temporary majority.

From Chicago the Teamsters' Union—famed for the bitter opposition of their officialdom to anything progressive—had sent 36 delegates who were paid $25 per day. Here was the "majority" that defeated the amalgamation resolution. The favorable action of the Ohio State Federation of Labor on the amalgamation resolution—totally unexpected by the machine politicians served as a warning to the reactionary element in Illinois. They prepared for

Workers! Eight Raid Victims Still Being Held in Michigan Jail

By THOMAS O'FLAHERTY

Eight Communist victims of the pernicious activities of William J. Burns—Attorney General Daugherty's chief stool pigeon—are still behind the bars in the Berrien County, Michigan, jail.

Owing to the fact that only cash or Liberty Bonds is accepted as bail, the task of raising $10,000 for each of the prisoners is a difficult one.

It is believed in St. Joseph, Mich., that but for the interference of the Federal authorities, local officials would fix the bail at from two to three thousand in each case.

But William J. Burns wanted his pound of flesh and all attempts to lower the bail were strenuously opposed. In order to inject some anti-Communist spirit into the citizens of the County who appear to have taken the raid quite coolly, Allan B. Myers, the "indictment expert" of the Department of Justice, delivered a lecture before the local Rotary Club on "The Menace of Communism".

He hawked around a portfolio labelled "Transcript". No doubt this contained the hokum that Mr. Whitney of Harvard University passed off on the Boston Transcript as "evidence" of red activity and for which we assume he got paid at so much per yard.

The citizens of Berrien County are not exactly tickled to death over the prospect of paying their hard earned money in order to provide the fink Burns with a Roman holiday.

They are grumbling audibly over the heavy cost which the prosecution of so many radicals will entail.

The Red Army is again in Vladivostok. Soviet Rule again flies the Red Flag on the shores of the Pacific. In the words of Lenin, "The war is over." World imperialism has confessed its defeat and withdrawn its last soldier from Soviet soil. Dare it plan another attack?

After all the labor skates had told us that Albert Beveridge, Republican candidate for U. S. senator from Indiana was a real radical, now comes the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and boosts the candidacy of ex-Governor Ralston. More evidence of the chaos resulting from labor's efforts to follow the Gompers' nonpartisan political policy.

White Guard Poland seems to be following in the footsteps of Germany, all parties of the "Socialists" and reactionists uniting for the re-election of the "Socialist," Marshall Joseph Pilsudski. The Communist Party, in Poland, as in the United States, has been driven underground. Whenever Polish Communists are elected, they are immediately arrested and thrown into prison, with "Socialist" consent.

Lenin Expresses Gratitude to the Friends of Soviet Russia for Work of Tractor Unit

NEW YORK.—The full text of a letter from Nicolai Lenin to the Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th St., has been transmitted to the organization by cablegram. The fact that such a letter had been written was reported recently.

Lenin expresses "deepest gratitude in the name of the Republic" for the work of the tractor unit sent by the F. S. R. He also advises that he will recommend to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee that the tractor farm made possible by the American workers should be officially recognized as a model for the rest of the country.

His letter reads:

"Dear Comrades: I have just now made special inquiries from the Executive Committee of the Province of Perm about the work of the members of your organization, headed by Harold Ware, in the tractor group in the district of Perm on the Toikino estate, and have received gratifying information which has been published in our newspapers.

"In spite of all the difficulties, particularly on account of the distance of the place of work from the center and also of Kolchak's destruction during the civil war, you have gained such success as should be acknowledged. I express my deep gratitude and request you to publish this in the newspapers of your organization and also, if possible, in the other newspapers in the United States.

"I am putting before the Presidium of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee the question of recognizing this estate as a model and of giving it special help in its reconstruction work as well as providing it with benzine, metals and other materials which are necessary for organizing a repair work-shop.

"Once more I express my deepest gratitude in the name of the Republic and I request you not to forget that no other kind of assistance is so important and opportune for us as the work carried out by you.—NICOLAI LENIN."

Confessed Baiter of "Reds" on Communist Laborite Jury Panel

By HAROLD [illegible]ANFORD
(Special to The Worker)

OAKLAND, California.—After ten years of careful study of the judicial system in this state, I have come to the conclusion that a worker can not hope to get a fair trial in California.

Haven't I witnessed the shameless conviction of Ford and Suhr, victims of greedy agricultural exploiters and their judicial hirelings?

Haven't I witnessed the Mooney frame-up and the continued resistance of the officialdom of this state to a righting of a wrong done an innocent man?

Haven't I seen the railroading of over 30 clean-cut idealistic "Wobblies" to prison on evidence so unreliable and remote to the case at issue that it could not possibly hold water in any but an anti-working class case?

But it took the rawness of the methods used to send five Communists to jail here to make me come to this decision: A worker can not possibly hope for a fair and impartial trial in California where issues are involved between capital and labor.

On October 5th, five Communist Laborites, J. A. [illegible], James H. Dolsen, J. G. Reed, J. E. Snyder, and C. A. Tobey, went to trial in Judge [illegible]'s court here on charges

Militants of World Meet in Red Russia

NOTE:—We are planning to give to our readers the best possible reports of the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International, called to meet at Moscow, Soviet Russia, Tuesday Nov. 7th. In addition to the reports and special articles sent out by the International Press Correspondence, THE WORKER will have its own writers and reporters at the congress's press tables. This week we publish an article sent out by the International Press Correspondence, written by Ernst Meyer, who is already in Moscow. It reviews some of the big problems to come before the congress and is as follows:

By ERNST MEYER

The Fourth World Congress has as one of its first items on the agenda, the subject "Five Years of Russian Revolution and Perspectives of the World Revolution"

The Fourth World Congress will not merely review the five years of Russian Revolution, but during the whole of the deliberations it will consider and estimate the results and experiences in Soviet Russia, and will have to draw further conclusions therefrom for the activity of the Communists.

The struggle of the Russian workers to capture the power of the state was not easy. Still more difficult was it for the Russian peasants and workers to maintain the possesion of the state power.

The struggles have been victorious. The Soviet power both from the military point of view and the point of view of foreign politics is more consolidated than ever. The difficulties which the proletarian state has yet to overcome on the road to Communism are enormous.

In Central Europe too, whose social foundations were greatly shaken during the autumn days of 1918, the revolutionary struggle has not so quickly succeeded as the Communists of all countries expected.

While in the first years following the conclusion of the imperialist peace, the Communists immediately took up the fight for the ultimate aim, the conquest of the state power, the Communists of all countries which are still capitalist, have now set up the so-called proximate aims, which are intelligible to the working masses and which are calculated to gather the whole working class under the banner of Communism and the struggle for which must immediately become a struggle for the attainment of the final goal.

The Fourth World Congress will have to test and examine all these experiences in Soviet Russia and in the capitalist world.

This necessity for self-understanding also finds expression in that the discussion of an international program as well as of the programs of the various sections of the Communist International has been placed upon the agenda of the World Congress.

It is true, no final decision will be reached upon the international program, as the preparatory work is not sufficiently advanced.

But the reports to be delivered and the work of the [illegible] Sections will form a good basis for further [illegible]

[illegible] the most of their [illegible] as it is Daugherty's [illegible] if it is part of their [illegible] to put workers in jail they [illegible] see any reason why they should shoulder the cost.

[illegible] the County Supervisors passed resolutions calling on the Federal Government to come across with some hard cash, and share in the cost as well as the honor of the famous "red raid". They have also enlisted the aid of Senator Newberry. While it is believed that the Federal Government cannot very well announce from the housetops that it had contributed to the State Prosecutor's war chest, still in view of Harry Daugherty's past history a little thing like a Federal law should not prove an unsurmountable obstacle.

It is also true that the farmers of Berrien County have troubles of their own. They have good land no doubt; also good crops. But what do these blessings amount to when they are robbed by the commission houses. While you pay a good price for apples in the fruit stores tons of pears, apples and other fruit are rotting all over the county. The same is true of the fishing industry. Sometimes a fruit grower after sending a consignment to a commission house in Chicago received a bill for transportation in return instead of a check. Yet they are expected to consider the prosecution of twenty workers their patriotic duty, and they are expected to pay for its privilege. Is it any wonder that they are thinking seriously of Johnson's famous remark about "patriotism being the last refuge of a scoundrel." William J. Burns depends on that brand of patriotism to influence the jury which is expected to bring in a verdict of guilty when we are tried for violating the Anti-Syndicalist Act of the State of Michigan.

While the Berrien County prosecutor claims to have received communications from labor leaders urging him to go ahead and prosecute us, my experience since my release two weeks ago has convinced me that the great majority of the organized workers are heart and soul with us in our fight against the tools of capitalism. I have addressed union meetings in Chicago and everywhere the feeling was evident that the Michigan raid was part and parcel of the gigantic conspiracy on the part of the capitalists of America thru their executive committee, the government, to crush the labor movement out of existence and in order to do that most effectively they sought to first get rid of the militants.

But this raid proved a boomerang. Formerly when a worker was labelled "Communist" it was enough to scare the rank and file of organized labor away. Now the situation is different. The workers know that the communists are the most militant members of organized labor and while Samuel Gompers sits on the sands of Atlantic City beach admiring the dimpled beauties or reviews an American Legion parade in New Orleans cheek by jowl with the notorious Judge Landis and indulging in insane nonsense about the "brotherhood of capital and labor" the communists are thrown in jail by the judicial satellites like Landis simply because they are fighting for the rights of the workers. The workers are now realizing this and that is the reason why organized labor is rallying to the support of the Labor Defense Council to an extent never before experienced in the defense of Communists against the capitalist terror.

[illegible] in the nation's capital city. They are now sending their pickets after President Harding, wherever he may be found, and on Armistice Day, Nov. 11, a general assault is planned on the White House.

This was my fifth trip to Washington in five years. First, in 1917, I went to protest, with others, in the days of Postmaster General Burleson, against the barring of labor papers from the mails and the withdrawal of their second class mailing privileges. In 1920 and 1921, I was with those delegations that went to the White House and the houses of congress, to demand the release of Eugene V. Debs and the other class war prisoners. Towards the end of 1922, I went to Washington and spoke for the Friends of Soviet Russia under the nose of its bitterest enemy, Herbert Hoover, and now I have journeyed again to American capitalism's political citadel to urge, almost on Attorney General Daugherty's own doorsteps, the organization of a branch of the Labor Defense Council, to help fight the arrests growing out of the Michigan and Chicago raids.

In Washington, today, they are doing this disrespectable thing, sending pickets against the president. In the early days of the war no pickets troubled the president, Wilson, or the postmaster general, Burleson, or the attorney general, Palmer, about "free speech, free press, free assemblage."

When the armistice came, with the exhaustion of the imperialist armies in Europe, the feeling grew that good manners would win clemency from the White House for those who had transgressed capitalism's war time laws. But later on, in the days following Debs' release, to picket or not to picket, became a burning issue among the amnesty forces. It is not now an issue. All respectable means have been tried to get the last of the war prisoners, mostly members of the Industrial Workers of the World, out of the Leavenworth, Kans., Bastille. Disrespectable pickets, keeping up the fight after the departure of the Childrens' Crusade, are in the saddle and pushing the fight.

I went with the amnesty pickets to the Chevy Chase Club, in Maryland, just over the District of Columbia line. It is here that the President of the United States of America, Warren Gamaliel Harding of Marion, Ohio, "crushed by the burdens of state," plays golf every afternoon from two to five o'clock. I can just imagine the great wail that would go up from our biggest capitalists, and small ones too, and all their press, if the workers would knock off work from two to five every afternoon and still draw pay.

The flag of the Chevy Chase Club, at the top of a huge flag pole, is brilliant red, marred only by three letters in black, "C. C. C."

I remarked to the pickets as we waited for the president to finish his game, that that might just as well read "Communist Country Club." The air out here was fresh and clean, there were plenty of huge trees and wide stretches of grass, just the thing for the tired men, women and children of labor on a holiday.

The presidential party came with the sundown and the cool air of an approaching autumn evening in two huge limousines, among the many hurrying back to the city with their golf players, government officials, politicians, [illegible] army officers, navy officers, diplomats of foreign countries, a regular procession of capitalist notables.

The pickets stood with their banners where the road to the club branches off from the turnpike. As the presidential limousine swept past, its occupants looked back and read the wording on the amnesty banners. The "Golf Ball" president saw and read, glared and glared again, then pulled his golf cap down over his eyes as the car disappeared down the highway.

The pickets folded their banners and took a street car back to the city. The next day I saw them at the gates to the White House. There they are found at noon every day. Sunday they picketed the Calvary Baptist Church, the president's church, whither he wends his way on Sabbath mornings to give sightseers an opportunity to behold him. It was here the Childrens' Crusade was denied admission.

President Harding said some time ago that he wanted 60 days to review the cases of the war time prisoners. That time has long since expired. The pickets are in dead earnest with their drive, they have flung "manners" to the wind, they have become disrespectable, even to the president of the United States, who is very much angered with them, as he has often intimated.

I came to the conclusion that this disrespectability was giving the lie to the professions of liberals and reformers that war time persecution was passing, that in Harding's own phraseology "We are returning to normalcy." The difference is that some one else is being hit. Instead of "Socialists" we have Communists in prison, or going to prison. In addition to new raids and trials of members of the Industrial Workers of the World, in Oregon, California, and other states, we have 434 members of the United Mine Workers indicted at Herrin, Ill., and hundreds more facing trial in West Virginia, Ohio, and elsewhere.

Coal miners from Somerset County, Pa., have been walking as pickets before the sumptuous Fifth Ave., New York City, home of their boss, E. J. Berwind, of the Berwind-White Coal Co., that has the contract for supplying coal to the New York subways.

Let this picketting idea grow. Let the workers in every industry picket the homes of their bosses, carrying banners displaying their demands and voicing their grievances. They will get a look, if nothing else, at the palaces they have made possible.

Let all the shops and mines, and factories in the land be surrounded with pickets displaying to the millions of workers when they go to their jobs and when they leave, banners containing labor's slogans growing out of the raids in Michigan and Chicago, and the fight for the class war prisoners everywhere, for Mooney and Billings, for Sacco and Vanzetti, and all the rest.

Let pickets carrying banners with similar slogans be stationed before every bank and other financial institution, to flaunt in the face of capitalism's golden fortresses the demands of awakening labor.

Mind you, this will not abate the persecution of labor one bit. Armistice Day, Nov. 7, 1922, is supposed to celebrate the fourth anniversary of the ending of the world war, but the war is not yet ended, because the war was an imperialist war and there is a Soviet Republic in the world and working men and women of many nations are fighting as they must to shake off wage slavery's shackles.

There is no armistice in the class struggle, and can be none, until the Communist era wipes out all classes for all time.

Until that time the gradual awakening of labor increases the intensity of the struggle with the exploiters. Let the picket lines grow. Let the workers get a good look at the homes they will take, the industries they will own, the financial institutions their Soviet Rule will operate as long as they are needed.

This will be so because capitalism will reply to labor's protest, first weak and scattered as now, later manifesting itself in huge strikes and demonstrations, with greater persecution. Then will come the hour when labor, tired of futile protest, feeling its chains too heavy, the oppression it suffers too galling, will crush the last form of slavery of the ages into the dust and assume all power.

No wonder Harding sits tormented in the White House. The pickets at his doorstep are breeding the disrespect for power, this time of the capitalist system, that goes before its fall.

And they, the upholders of this crumbling social system, will still maintain the fiction that Nov. 11, 1922, is an Armistic Day, because they do not want to face their day of doom.

Standard Oil Stock of No Value

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE

This is not the soap box statement of some Communist agitator but a formal declaration by the Secretary of the Treasury, A. W. Mellon, in a letter to Congressman James A. Frear, of Wisconsin, who had called the Secretary's attention to the 400 per cent stock dividend declared by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

The stock dividend is the method by which big corporations hide their real profits and at the same time increase the mountain of fake securities on which tender-hearted judges order the wage-slaves to sweat out dividends.

The Congressman was not interested in this phase of the matter, but he did think they were skinning Uncle Sam out of millions in income taxes, thereby cutting down the size of the faithful "pork barrel," best friend of the solon seeking re-election.

But Mr. Mellon set him straight. The Standard Oil would not sabotage its own government. The stockholders, who more than doubled their fortunes in this stock over night, really were no richer than they had been!

Says Mr. Mellon: "Taking, for illustration, the case of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, to which you refer, the holder of its stock, after he has received these new certificates or shares, has altogether no more than he had before, and therefore, so far as the holder is concerned, there is no income to tax." And then he quotes a court decision, a Supreme Court decision, to back himself up. Every stockholder agrees with him also.

The Secretary is really right, even if holders of S. O. did get rich on this declaration. All that the stockholders ever had in their scraps of pretty printed paper, was a claim to a certain proportion of what was wrung from the wage-slaves as long as they will tolerate this form of exploitation.

We have often maintained that the stocks and bonds of the rich men are worth to the world only their value in scrap paper. We accept the corroboration of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Supreme Court. It will be a happy day for the entire working class when it likewise takes the same view and makes its opinion effective by sweeping out the Mellons and the Supreme Court together with their owners, the stockholders of the Standard Oil.

They have no more when they receive four times as much as what they had, says Mellon. Four times one is four, which is more than one. But four times nothing is nothing—therefore the stockholders had nothing to start with. An enlightened American working class will have no trouble meeting this price.

The Buffalo, N. Y., Central Labor Union, as a direct outcome of the "open shop" campaign and the recent street car strike, has voted to establish a co-operative labor bank.

of criminal syndicalism of three years' standing. They [illegible] without counsel and announced that they would conduct their own defense.

After one week of grueling jury examination, the regular criminal panel of 30 veniremen was exhausted and a special panel of 40 talesmen was ordered by the court. Ten of these were immediately excused by the consent of the prosecution and defense for various reasons, leaving 30 to be examined.

Early in the examination of the special venire, it became evident that the matter of picking special veniremen was nothing less than a "family affair" of the staff and officials connected with the sheriff's and district attorney's office.

Out of a panel of 30 that by law was to be selected by personal service from the body of a county of more than 300,000 inhabitants, 15 were relatives and friends of the district attorney's and sheriff's staff and were served with summons over the telephone. One was a confessed baiter of "Reds" operating in Seattle and Los Angeles. Three were deputy sheriffs and guards in the local shipyards. One was a substitute matron from the county jail. The rest had interests so obviously prejudicial to the defense that they were removed for cause or were peremptorily challenged by the defense.

Can it be possible that it was just a co-incident that half of the special veniremen drawn from a body of over 300,000 were personal friends and relatives of those interested in the conviction of the defendants? Can it be just a co-incident that not one of the whole special venire of 30 talesmen were acceptible to the defense? We'll let one of the defendants answer for us.

Time and time again James H. Dolsen, defendant and chief counsel for the defense, rose from his seat and thundered his protest at the whole dirty affair.

"Do I understand his Honor considers the defendants are receiving a fair trial when an obviously handpicked venire is brought into this court for us to pick a fair and impartial jury from? I challenge this jury panel summoned over the telephone from among the relatives and friends of those that would railroad us to the penitentiary. I challenge anyone to prosecute us that can not live up to the laws themselves. I ask that this entire panel be ruled out because of irregularities found in the selection of talesmen. The law provides that special venires be selected from the body of the county by personal summons and by no other way. It does not provide that the district attorney and sheriff make it a little "family affair" between themselves by telephoning their friends and relatives for service. If we are to be railroaded to jail, we would much prefer it being done from less interested sources."

At this Wade Snook, popularly known among the professional fraternity as Snooky Ookums, jumped up and said, "The district attorney's office had nothing to do with this or any other panel. The selection of the jury panel lies solely with the sheriff. If you do not like whom he picks, the law provides ways and means for removing them. This is at your disposal, gentlemen!"

During the fight between the defendants and prosecutors, the judge looked thoroly agitated. He sat fingering different objects on his desk and made no effort to stop the flow of oratory. After the points at issue were put up to him he ruled. That no matter how irregular the venire was drawn, the law gives no precedent for the disqualification of it on the points issued. He ruled that the defense is protected from unjust jurors by 35 peremptory challenges and unlimited challenges for cause.

"At all times this court will protect your rights and will see that they are not abused. Now, proceed, gentlemen," and with this offer of protection he smiled his sweetest.

"Do I understand that the sheriff can legally serve jury summons over the telephone to his relatives and friends. I wish a ruling on that point now!" said Dolsen in another burst of oratory.

"I would rather not answer that at this time," answered the judge, "I would have to look up the law on that point." At this the defense dropped the matter as hopeless.

On Thursday afternoon, Oct. 19, the judge admitted all the charges of the defense when he ordered another special venire, when all but three talesmen of the old one was challenged. Said the judge in part, "I want the sheriff's office to strictly understand that I want this venire to be drawn from the body of the county by personal service only". In this statement there was a strong intimation that he would not tolerate another "family group" of the "vicious circle," a name given to a little group of city and county officials related to one another by bonds much thicker than water.

One of the deliberate plants on the jury was F. F. Farmer, residing at the Elk's club, who served under Joe Warren, former chief of police of Seattle, in the capacity of labor and "Red" baiter.

A comrade from Los Angeles pointed him out to me some days before his official expose as a private "dick" and a special operative for the "M. & M." of Los Angeles.

Farmer soon saw that he stood no chance of serving on the jury, and upon being called to the box delivered to the court this "oration": "I hold the defendants guilty of the crime charged. Any one who would lower our flag and hoist a red one in its place should be sent to jail and kept there. I have no use for any one who would stand for this wonderful government of opportunity being overthrown. I have helped Joe Warren of Seattle raid and break up their underground organization of conspiracy against the government, and I could not give them a fair trial."

It will take at least three weeks to select the jury, of which two and a half weeks are already consumed. By Oct. 23, the jury ought to be selected and the trial begun. The trial will be a long one lasting from six to eight weeks. The prosecution intends to use two weeks, if not less in presenting their case, while the defense will use from four to six weeks depending on the amount of literature introduced. As the prosecution reads only portions of books, the defense has threatened to read their entire contents, and from the amount of stuff introduced in the preceding cases the mere reading of literature will consume a week.

The defense is doing notably well in this case. Only one of the defendants has had any legal training. Dolsen took a [illegible] of legal work in the Northwestern Law School.

James H. Dolsen, J. A. Ragsdale, and J. G. Reed are members of the Workers Party and are being supported in this trial by the National Defense Committee of District 13. Tobey and Snyder are backed by the Civil Rights Association of Alameda County.

[illegible]

On the other hand the indomitable determination of our Russian comrades has served as an inspiration to hundreds of thousands of working-men and working-women.

Consciously some, unconsciously others, they were spurred by its proletarian appeal to more energetic and more uncompromising resistance to their oppressors.

Greater and more important than all of these, however is its influence on the class-conscious labor movement of the world. Here is its real and lasting achievement, an achievement that will last no matter what the fate of the Russian Revolution itself may be.

The effect that the Russian upheaval has upon the outside world will depend directly upon the power that Russia will develop, upon the degree to which Russia becomes a world power, upon the measure in which it succeeds in carrying out its program of industrial socialization.

Its service to the Socialist movement, however, is an accomplished fact, and nothing that may occur will remove the imprint that the courage, the unswerving devotion of the leaders of the Russian Revolution has left upon the revolutionary labor movement.

Before 1914 the Socialist movement of the world, mass movement though it had become, had reached a stage where further growth was out of the question. Especially was this true in Germany, where the Social Democratic Party was fast becoming the strongest party in the nation. As a great river that has its source far up in the mountains, and comes tearing down its steep slopes in a rushing, roaring torrent that carries everything before it, finally reaches level plains, with rich fertile lands, flowing slowly and still more slowly until it enters into the sea, almost choked by the mass of debris and rubbish that it collects, so the socialist movement, after a youth of unequalled revolutionary fervor, inspired by the Paris Commune, fighting its way against the terror-stricken reaction of an awakening industrial bourgeoisie, growing and deepening in spite of oppression and Bismarckian exception laws, finally reached the great fertile plains of legitimate political activity. There came the time when its influence, like the waters of the great river, became a blessing to the working class. Its influence brought social legislation and succeeded even in establishing a certain amount of political freedom in the countries where it was the strongest. But it had long ago lost all resemblance to the roaring mountain torrent that could have eaten its way into the very vitals of the granite mountains of established society.

When the war broke out, the socialist movement in Europe reached the maximum of its usefulness. It had become a slow and sluggish stream, laden down with a ballast of political considerations, of diplomatic manoeuvres, of great unwieldy organizations, and of a stolid bureaucracy. And like the great stream it had lost its own identity in the ocean of reaction into which it flowed when party after party united hands with Imperialism in the name of the fatherland.

Here the Russian Revolution did its great and most significant work. True, it tore these big socialist parties asunder. But only in order to give a new impetus to the revolutionary labor movement. It divided those who were ready to learn and to live from the others who were too deeply immersed in the seas of opportunistic politics to find their way back. Like a great watershed that rises up out of the earth, driven up by some overwhelming force beneath its surface, it divided this stream, turning a part of the river into a new channel, giving it once more the force and driving power of earlier days, leaving the other behind to seep away into the sandy earth, doomed to stagnation.

We all remember the old joke about the 57 varieties of Socialism. We all resented it, and yet, in our heart of hearts, we felt its justification. The Socialist Movement had become, the world over, the rallying place for elements of the most varied shades of political opinion. Like the Irishman, the Socialist was, over and above all else, "agin' the government." Just what form this opposition took, and just what interpretation the prospective member, or even the candidate upon the Socialist ticket put upon its program, was of little or no concern. Single taxers and pacifists, opportunists and impossibilists, parlor socialists and anarchists, these, and all other conceivable shades of "radicalism" from the palest pink to the goriest red,—they all found a ready refuge there. It was less concerned with unity of principle than with unity of membership. It condemned the man who insisted upon a clean-cut statement of revolutionary, proletarian class aims, and welcomed with open arms him who would attract new voters and new members even if his principles were more than doubtful. There were, it is true, desultory discussions on fundamentals. The perennial question as to the methods to be adopted by Socialists to gain power received the perennial evasive reply. Kautsky wrote thesis on the "Road to Power", and our theoretical organs published long and learned dissertations on the question of the dictatorship of the proletariat, on the meaning of bourgeois democracy, and on the "Self-determination of Nations." But these articles were read only by the very few who had the time and the interest to concern themselves with these abstract problems. In the life of the movement itself they played no role whatsoever.

Almost from the first day the November Revolution shook the socialist movement out of this gentle apathy. What yesterday had been an academic question, of interest only to the small group of intellectuals whom the party membership more or less despised, became a burning question of the day. Almost over night our party-membership learned to discuss the dictatorship of the proletariat. Dusty copies of Marx's Capital, and the Communist Manifesto were brought out of their hiding places to back up arguments pro and con. Our membership here in America, many of them for the first time, was made to realize the international character of the socialist movement. They became familiar with the names of men and women in other countries, and with the positions that they represented.

More important than that the Russian Revolution put into practice, for the first time in the history of the world, the teachings of Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, and of the many others who had spoken and written after them. It gave life and spirit to what had been dead. And in so doing it created a movement of the working class that lives, and will live, because it draws life and energy from a living, pulsating reality.

The Russian Revolution has made mistakes. But they were mistakes that bore bitter fruit, and by them our movement grew and learned. The Russian Revolution became our leader, our teacher. But like a wise teacher, who grows and broadens his own powers from daily contact with his charges, it too will seek, above all, to stand at the head of an international movement that will think and act clearly and understandingly and wisely, not because it follows its leaders in blind and worshiping devotion, but because it realizes that they are human beings, with a tremendous experience, with wonderful foresight and deep understanding, but human beings nevertheless, who like themselves, must live to learn, if the onward movement of the working class is to carry the world forward to industrial freedom.

Captain Hibben Talks

In a recent issue we published in [illegible] a letter from one of our [illegible] denouncing John P. Frey, editor of the Moulders' Journal, for endorsing the so-called exposure of "The Reds in America" appearing in The Boston Transcript and other capitalist dailies.

Captain Paxton Hibben, one of the most earnest and consistent workers for Russian Famine Relief, gives added testimony to the veracity of this attack in a suit filed for $100,000 damages against The Transcript. In commenting on this damage suit the New Republic says:

"Captain Paxton Hibben replies to charges made in an article entitled The Reds in America, appearing in various newspapers, as follows: 'That I am or ever have been a red, am raising or ever have attempted to raise money for the support of the Soviet Government of Russia, the Russian army, or for any other purpose whatever except for purely humanitarian relief work as well as the bulk of the remainder of the article in question are absolutely and unqualifiedly false. That I was ever a paid propagandist for the Greek royalists, for example, is absolutely false. It is characteristic of the whole article that it states that I copied confidential papers and documents while employed in the Consulate in Brazil, and had to assume a careful disguise in escaping from the country. I was never in Brazil in my life, never employed in a Consulate in my life, and never assumed a disguise to do anything whatsoever.' Captain Hibben has sued the Boston Transcript, one of the newspapers in which the article appeared, for $100,000."

That is the kind of stuff, however, that reactionary labor leaders of the type of Gompers, Frey and Schlesinger, and the Hillquit-Cahan-Berger "Socialists" seize upon in their efforts to discredit, if they can, the Communists in this country. Any lie, even if found in some sheet of the capitalist class, is good enough to hang a Communist. The indications are, however, that, given a little more rope, these enemies of labor progress will hang themselves.

Issues Second Denial

Later Hibben was forced to issue another denial as follows:

It is characteristic of the puerility of the articles entitled "The Reds in America" that Part XI published in the Boston Transcript on Oct. 21 should reveal as a great secret the arrangement which I consummated in Russia this summer whereby the Russian Red Cross would be empowered to act as agent for Russian musical, theatrical and dramatic artists desirous of coming to the United States, a part of the proceeds of the contracts thus made thru the Russian Red Cross going to famine relief.

The text of the certificate published in the Transcript was given out by me in Moscow to the Associated Press, the United Press and all the American correspondents. There was nothing secret about it.

It is equally characteristic of these articles that the writer is evidently unaware that the "B. Krassin" who signs the certificate in question is not Leonid Krassin, the Russian Commissar for Foreign Trade, but is on the contrary chairman of the Dramatic Artists Special Committee of the All-Russian Central Famine Relief Committee and has no relation whatever with the Communist Party in Russia or elsewhere.

The statement that 33⅓% of the earnings of Russian dramatic or musical artists in the United States go to the Russian Government is as fantastic as most of the material in these articles. It had merely been suggested that 10 per cent of such earnings go to famine relief.

The statement given as "authoritative" by the Transcript, that money raised in this way is used "for propaganda of the Communist movement" is unqualifiedly false—as is the greater part of the articles in question. The strange jumble of ignorance and prejudice in these articles renders them unworthy the attention of any serious person.

Paxton Hibben is Secretary of the Russian Red Cross Commission in America.

Isadora Duncan Shocks Boston

Miss Isadora Duncan has shocked Boston, famed for its beans and brains, by her appearance, after her dances, in a brilliant red robe, during which she makes a short speech about Soviet Russia, even daring to make an appeal for funds to relieve the famine stricken children of the Workers' Republic.

"Bostonians are afraid of the truth," declared Miss Duncan, saying that she sought the emancipation of women from the hide-bound conventions of New England puritanism.

The New York Times says that many Bostonians were shocked by Miss Duncan's "radical addresses" and left the hall. Wonder where those Bostonians will go when the workers take over power in Boston and make all the speeches. It will be a bad day for the socially elite of Boston's exclusive "Back Bay District" when their hide-bound conventions are discarded and they are forced to go to work under Workers Republic.

[illegible] rk to Back abor's Fight

[illegible] evening, Oct. 27, a meeting of delegates of organized labor [illegible] was held at Beethoven Hall, East 5th St., to protest against unwarranted infringements of the [illegible] of the freedom of speech, [illegible] and assemblage in the recent [illegible] of prominent trade unionists in Michigan and Chicago.

Joe Manley, of the Structural Iron Workers, told of the progress being made by Foster's idea of amalgamation, relating how state federation after state federation is being won over. It is for this reason, he said, Foster and his colleagues are being hounded. He pointed out that if labor allows these men to be "picked off" no labor man in America will be safe in the future.

In a stirring address J. M. Budish, editor of the Headgear Worker, official organ of the United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers Union, pointed out that Foster was breaking no law, that he was keeping well within the rights guaranteed the people by the Constitution of the United States.

In fact he was making statements which were far less radical than those uttered by former President Wilson in his "New Freedom" or by political leaders on the floor of legislative bodies. He and his colleagues are being attacked because they favor a certain type of organization in order to control the economic forces about them. They want freedom to organize for a decent standard of living, not freedom to starve.

J. B. Salutsky, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, then arose to address the audience. He showed that Foster had never been punished for publishing his little book on Syndicalism. But as soon as he began to work for a definite program of action that meant the growth and progress of the labor movement, he became immediately the prey of the employing class and was charged with violating the Criminal Syndicalist Laws of Michigan.

The body then adopted the following resolution of protest against the infamous Michigan raids:—

WHEREAS, the arrest of more than a score of men noted for their progressive views and activities in the labor movement on the charge of violating the so-called "Criminal Syndicalist Laws" of Michigan creates a crisis that cannot be ignored by any one concerned in the maintenance of American civil rights or the struggle of the workers for a decent standard of human rights,

WHEREAS, the unlawful invasion of a public meeting and the indiscriminate arrest without warrants or due process of the law of men and women and the cruel treatment of union men and women by the police is contrary to every principle of American rights and justice,

WHEREAS the arrest of William Z. Foster, William F. Dunne, Earl Browder and other members in good standing in recognized trade unions, is an outrage and a disgrace to every real American, therefore,

RESOLVED, by the delegates of the many labor unions here present that we protest against these unlawful practices, and be it further

RESOLVED that the delegates so assembled call upon all labor bodies and all organizations who are interested in preserving our sacred rights of freedom of speech, press and assembage to support both morally and financially the LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL in its efforts to free these men.

The body then proceeded to organize a permanent LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL to work unceasingly for the freedom of the arrested men.

The following bodies were represented: International Ladies Garment Workers Union, Local 89, Local 3, Local 9, Local 25, and the Joint Board of the Dress and Waistmakers' Union, the Joint Board of Children's Dress, Bathrobe and Housedressmakers' Union, Joint Board of the Millinery and Ladies Straw Hat Workers Union representing Locals 2, 24, 42, 43, 50 and [illegible] the Fancy Leather Goods Workers Union, Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union Local 169, the International Workers in the Amalgamated Food Industries, Amalgamated Textile Trimming Workers of America, Teachers Union of New York, Amalgamated Knitgoods Workers Union Joint Board, Amalgamated [illegible] Workers, Window Cleaners Protective Union, Workingmen's National Co-operative Society, Workmen's Circle, Arbeiter Ring Branches 634, 297, 635, 11, 99, 338, [illegible], 224, and 2 delegates from the Workers Party and the Young Workers League, also the Ladies Waistmakers Union, Local 25 and the International Workers in the Amalgamated Food Industries, Bakers Local 164, Amalgamated Lithographers Union No. 1, Brotherhood of Painters and Paperhangers Local Union 280, United Automobile, Aircraft and Vehicle Workers of America, Local 49, National Defense Committee of New York, Left Poale Zion of New York, and the Workmen's Circle Branch 620.

Cases of Halapy and Jeffries Expose Black Reaction's Rule in Pittsburgh Miners' Union

The Halapy Case

Michael Halapy of [illegible], [illegible] both with the district and the national organization of the miners, has started two suits in court here against the district officials. One of these suits is for reinstatement in the organization as a member.

While we hold no brief for Halapy, the decision in his case does have a bearing on the campaign here for the reason that the evidence of fraud in various ways which he produces in court is making it embarassing to the "machine" in its fight on the progressive miners who are fighting from a different viewpoint than Halapy and are appealing entirely to the membership to accomplish their aims.

Twice Halapy has been "expelled" from the organization. The first time he claims he did not know it until long after it is supposed to have been done. He claims it was done entirely by fraud and that he was not credited with the payment of dues which he had really paid.

This occurred in 1920 when Halapy was candidate for district president. His nomination for this office was declared void because he "was not a member of the organization."

After the time had passed for voting upon him as a candidate he was again allowed to pay dues into the organization. In this manner he was eliminated as a candidate. In spite of this Halapy was seated without question as a delegate to the international convention.

Recently he instituted a suit against the present and recent officers of District Five demanding an accounting of the famous "$3,000,000 fund," which seems to have vanished into thin air altho it was intended for relief in just such strikes as now exist in Fayette County.

Following the instituting of this suit Halapy was expelled from the organization for failure to confine his efforts for an accounting to the inside of the organization.

While we are not discussing the propriety of Halapy's course, this latter suit is so sensational in its charges that every miner in the district is deeply interested in the case. For instance Halapy makes the allegation in his petition that $40,000 was taken from this fund and loaned to a coal company to carry on its business.

Halapy's expulsions are an example of the autocratic manner in which the district has been ruled for many years.

The Jeffries Case

The expulsion of Jeffries is a case on point.

In 1916 there was a checkweighman at a mine near Charleroi by the name of Jeffries who decided to run for district president. Immediately the "machine" got busy.

A little while afterwards the company refused to permit Jeffries to act as checkweighman and would give him no employment whatever in the mines. The district officials refused to do anything to get him work.

After Jeffries had been out of work some time a party on the "pay roll" visited him and suggested that the only way for him to keep the wolf from the door was to take advantage of the boom then on at the Donora steel mills.

While the Donora mills were non-union there had never been any attempt to organize them and Jeffries thought nothing strange of the suggestion and sought and secured employment in the Donora mills.

A few weeks afterwards the same "friend" called again. Jeffries inquired what progress had been made in adjusting his case with the coal company and was immediately informed that nothing had been done because he had gone to work in a "scab" mill and therefore was no longer a member of the union and therefore his candidacy for district president was ended.

This is one of several examples of how dangerous individuals are eliminated from the district organization.

"Individual" Campaigns

All previous movements for changing the conditions in District Five have been more or less individualistic and this has been their weakness. The present campaign is entirely free from this fault. It is an organized movement of representative miners from different parts of the district to bring about a complete change in an organized way so that the mass of the members can control the movement in every way and no individual will be able to divert the benefit of the movement to himself.

The nominees who have agreed to run for the various offices opposite their names are:

Martin R. McDonald, candidate for Governor on the Workers Party ticket in New Jersey and Louis F. Wolf, candidate for U. S. Senator, spoke at a campaign meeting in Linden, N. J., on Oct. 26th.

Edward P. Scott, state campaign manager of the Workers Party, presided. The fourth speaker of the evening was Nat Kaplan, Assistant Organizer in District Two of the Party. The audience was enthusiastic.

McDonald, the first speaker of the evening, made a clear issue when he stated that it was not merely votes that the Workers Party was after, but that it entered the Gubernatorial race for the chief purpose of organizing the workers politically and for the further purpose of using Workers Party Candidates, when elected, to show up the true form of the capitalist government.

Wolf showed up the two old party gubernatorial candidates, Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, Republican, and Edward I. Edwards, Democrat.

He stated that these two old parties were but the tools in the hands of the New Jersey Bankers and Capitalists, that their only idea of solving the world industrial crisis was to give New Jersey back its beer and to do away with the terrible scourge of prohibition.

Nat Kaplan gave a short history of the work the Workers Party had been doing in this state and ended by outlining the immediate demands of the Workers Party in the coming election.

What a Difference

OAKLAND, Cal.—Kathryn Miller, University of California student and daughter of a wealthy ice cream king, has completed a two-day "perfectly lovely" jail sentence for speeding at 40 miles an hour thru the city streets. Miss Miller had special food, a special room and all kinds of attention, sympathy and publicity. This is the same jail the conditions of which nearly killed Anita Whitney when she had to stay there pending her conviction for criminal syndicalism.

[illegible] State Federation

[illegible] well as in deed.

With their delegates absent, with but one or two spokesmen present, with a convention packed against them and a machine fighting for its life, with Matthew Woll, the Crown Prince of the Gompers dynasty, hovering in the background, with Oscar Nelson, the Chicago henchman of Gompers, present and directing the fight of the standpatters, the fact that the amalgamation resolution was defeated by but 29 votes shows that under normal conditions the sentiment for amalgamation is strong enough to win by an overwhelming majority—provided there is organization of that sentiment.

It should be remembered also that the official leadership of the Illinois Federation of Labor is much more able than that usually found in such bodies. Victor Olander, secretary of the federation, made an intelligent fight against the resolution. He knows enough about the constitution and program of the radicals to make an effective speech in the absence of a well-organized opposition. Lillian Herstein, of the Teachers' Federation, made a brilliant fight for the resolution, but contrary to the condition that usually prevails, the reactionary element had the biggest battery of speakers. With their organization this was enough for them to win.

I have made the statement several times that the Trade Union Educational League and its supporters must expect the opposition to reform its broken lines after a succession of such defeats as it has suffered in the last few weeks and make further progress temporarily more difficult. This has already occurred. The officialdom of both international unions and state federations has been swept off their feet by the unlooked for crystallisation of the sentiment for greater solidarity and disgust with the "do nothing" policy of the trade union leadership.

Officialdom has become accustomed to seeing similar movements die thru lack of sustained interest and a common policy on which the rank and file could unite. To-day the labor fakirs realize that they face something different than the usual sporadic and spasmodic movements they have had to exert but little effort to defeat in the past. Industrial unionism is something more than a phrase to hundreds of thousands of union men and women in the present critical condition of the labor movement and for the first time the movement shows indictions of organizational sense. By "organizational sense" I mean that the militants for once seem to realize that something more than mere dependence upon the righteousness of their cause is necessary for victory.

At the Illinois convention of the federation this organization was lacking, however. Defeat was the result, but it is more than probable that the value of the lesson will not be lost and that at the next convention Illinois will take its place with the solid dozen of other federations that show unmistakably that so far as the dues-paying membership is concerned the time is ripe for welding the scattered units of the American labor movement into a real weapon of the workingclass in the United States.

There is no great rejoicing in reactionary labor circles over the outcome in Rockford. It is felt that a margin of 29 votes in a packed convention where the real labor movement of this state was not represented only gives the officialdom a short breathing spell and is no indication of the final outcome of the struggle.

It is also known and commented on that as part of the heritage of dualism many of the most progressive unions in Illinois are not affiliated with the state federation. A campaign to bring them in is already under way. Apathy will not be allowed to win for reaction the next time.

Activity, being "on the job" at all times, is the only thing necessary for the success of the amalgamation program. The defeat in Illinois has brought this lesson home.

WHAT LINCOLN FORGOT

Democracy, said Abraham Lincoln, is "Government of the people, for the people, by the people." In a class society there are two kinds of people, workers and capitalists. He forgot to specify which.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is dictatorship by the workers, for the workers, against their class enemies, the capitalist and his adherents.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is the organization of the advance guard of the oppressed as the ruling class for the purpose of crushing the oppressors.—Lenin.

cussions in the Communist circles of all countries.

The report of Comrade Zinoviev upon the activity of the Executive and the further tactics of the Communist International will at the same time provide the opportunity of deciding the much debated question of the transition demands or proximate aims.

Altho the resistance against the tactics of the united front and against the proximate demands set up by the Communist International has been reduced within the Italian and French Parties and in the smaller groups of the German Party, only the authoritative decision of a World Congress will finally close the discussion upon this topic.

At the same time, every Party and every Party group will be pledged by this decision to carry out loyally and with all their energy the tactics of the united front in their own country.

The necessity for fighting with closed ranks, will have to be particularly pointed out in the reports on the offensive of capital and the struggle against the Versailles Peace in connection with the home and foreign politics.

The transition demands arising out of this struggle against the capitalist offensive and the Versailles Peace can in a generalized form find a place in an international program of the Communist International.

The formulation of such demands does not mean that these demands will be actually reached in the prescribed form but only that these demands must be the rallying point for the struggle of the broad masses.

The struggle for one of these demands is sufficient to roll up the whole front of the class struggle and lead to the realization of the Soviet Dictatorship.

The question of the tactics of the united front which stands for discussion along with the report of the Executive is therefore immediately connected with the program question.

The question of the tactic of the united front and the program question mutually complete each other as practical and theoretical sides of the same problem: by what means and under what slogans will the Communists of all countries most rapidly and most successfully arrive at their goal—the realization of Communism.

The Second International, before, during and after the war, set reformist work and revolutionary work against each other, giving preference to successful reformist work and abandoning all revolutionary work.

The practice of all the Menshevik and Social Democratic Parties show that the renunciation of revolutionary work also has hindered the improvement of the living conditions of the working class.

Reform work is only successful when it is connected in a revolutionary spirit and when it leads immediately to revolutionary struggles.

How little the formulation of the concrete, proximate demands has converted the Communist International into a reformist International, is shown by the ever-widening chasm between the Communist International and the Second and 2½ Internationals.

The efforts of the Communist International at the Berlin Conference to form a proletarian united front and to organize a proletarian world congress were answered by the Second and 2½ Internationals with increased fury against the Communists.

Nothing is more disagreeable to the Mensheviki and Social Reformists than the fact that the Communists stand up most energetically for the daily needs of the workers.

Theoretical debates upon the advantages of the proletarian dictatorship or of bourgeois democracy are perhaps welcomed by them.

But as soon as they are faced with concrete facts, and are summoned to a struggle against the enemies of the working class, they get into a rage and seek by means of abusive campaigns against the Communists to confuse the working class and to isolate the Communists who are forcing them into the struggle.

In Germany, for example, the trade union bureaucracy, the Independents and the Social Democrats, directly after the movement following the murder of Rathenau issued the slogan "have nothing to do with the Communists", because the tactics of the Communists during this movement were more dangerous to the Social Democrats than if the K P D had been isolated.

The campaign now being conducted in Germany by the trade union bureaucracy for the expulsion of the Communists is also a proof of how dangerous the trade union tactics of the German Communists have become to these trade union leaders who are so friendly to the employers.

If the World Congress deals this time with the trade union question it will in the first place have to confirm the tactic of remaining within the trade unions and of carrying on the revolutionary work there.

In so far as the trade union bureaucracy, systematically excludes the Communists, the World Congress will have to discuss the appropriate measures of defence, for it is clear that the Communists cannot stand idly by and watch the systematic splitting of the trade unions, but all such measures must be calculated to unite those who have been excluded.

In addition to these most important problems, the World Congress will have to discuss a number of problems which relate to separate practical questions. Besides the oriental and colonial questions and the agrarian question which have already been discussed at the international congresses the World Congress will discuss the education question which occupies a special item on the agenda.

The report upon the work among the youth will not be a mere report but it will exhaustively deal with the difficulties and problems that have arisen in the youth movement as a consequence of the changing situation.

The interest which the Communist International constantly has for the Women's question is shown by the fact that at this congress there will again be delivered a special report upon the position of the work amongst the women.

The great importance of the Co-operative movement will also find expression in a report upon this question connected with a report upon the International Cooperative Conference.

Finally the congress will bear witness to the universal interest of the working class in the proletarian famine relief for Soviet Russia in a report upon the Famine Relief for Soviet Russia.

The Communist International regards its conferences not as parades which merely have outward effects but as days of serious work of self-examination and understanding over the future struggle.

The Communist International does not shrink from openly discussing the weaknesses of individual parties. As in the past year many of the failings of the Communist Parties were openly dealt with, so this time the World Congress will have as a special item on the agenda to devote itself to the question of the French Party which has [illegible] many critical symptoms.

The Communists know no sensitiveness. They regard every pronouncement even when they lead to critical conclusions as brotherly assistance. They accept every decision of the whole International in the spirit of proletarian solidarity and discipline, both of which are indispensable in order to be able victoriously to overthrow our mighty antagonist, the bourgeoisie, and along with it its allies, the Social Democrats.

HARTMANN RESIGNS

The Friends of Soviet Russia has announced the resignation of Jacob W. Hartmann as treasurer of the organization. Dr. Hartmann was preparing to retire from his various activities in the service of the F. S. R. at the time the Jewish Daily Forward launched its attack upon the organization. He consented at that time to retain his position until the Investigation Committee of Five should have done its work.

Alice S. Broms, who has been active in the work of the Friends of Soviet Russia since its inception, is the new treasurer.

Lithuanian Branches Celebrate

The Chicago branches are arranging great mass meetings and extended invitations to various working-class organizations to participate. (There are about 40 such organizations in Chicago.)

The Brooklyn, N. Y. branch (the largest branch in the Federation), is to hold a great mass meeting, at New Plaza Hall, Grand and Havemeyer Sts.

Many branches in the mining districts are arranging mass meetings and musical evenings.

Branches in the New England States will celebrate jointly with the Russian comrades.

[illegible] Workers to [illegible] Farmer-Labor

[illegible] addressed to the [illegible] of the State of Illinois, the [illegible] Executive Committee of the [illegible] Party calls upon the work[illegible] the state to vote for the candidates of the Farmer-Labor Party [illegible] coming elections.

[illegible] manifesto declares that since [illegible] Workers Party had been unable [illegible] its candidates upon the ballot [illegible] could not do otherwise than to [illegible] the workers to support a party [illegible] expressed independent political [illegible] on the part of the workers.

The manifesto, which is followed by the Congressional Program of the party, reads as follows:

To the Workers and Working Farmers of the State of Illinois:

On November 7th, many of you will have an opportunity to express your preferences for candidates for political office to the various legislative and executive bodies of your cities and states. The Workers Party of America deems it its duty to address to [illegible] word of advice on the various political parties that will claim your vote and support in the coming elections.

[illegible] Workers Party of America is [illegible] political party of the class conscious and militant workers of America, organized to abolish the present [illegible] of capitalist oppression, thru the formation of a Workers Republic.

As a political party, the Workers Party participates in elections, national as well as municipal and state. Also, in these coming elections the Workers Party appears before the working class of America with a complete and definite program of action claiming for itself and its candidates the working class vote and working class support. In short, the Workers Party of America stands before the workers of America as their political party, distinct and separate from all other political parties.

Unfortunately, the Workers Party and its candidates will not be on the ballot in a number of cities and states in these coming elections. Illinois is one of them, which means that in your state the workers will be denied the opportunity in the coming elections to stand by the Workers Party and thru this demonstrate your opposition to the rule of capitalism and your willingness to struggle for its abolition.

This happens thru no fault of ours. Our state and local organizations in Illinois have done all in their power to place the Workers Party ticket on the ballot. But the recent governmental attacks and persecutions, which fell so heavily upon the struggling workers of America, have also had their effect upon activities of the Workers Party.

The government would not forgive our party its consistent and energetic agitation among the miners to stick it out and fight to the end. The government, and all the forces of reaction in this country, have been particularly enraged by the splendid and successful campaign for amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions carried on by members of our Party; and all over the country, and particularly in your state of Illinois. Enemies of labor began to feel uneasy about these activities of the Workers Party, and the government, which is ever on guard to protect capitalist comfort and security, obligingly cooked up a frame-up against the most active workers of our Party. Thus, the Workers Party was prevented from placing a number of its candidates on the election ballot.

Notwithstanding this fact the Workers Party participates in this election campaign on its own program pointing out to the workers the lessons of their recent struggles and calling upon them to join and support the Workers Party in the struggles yet to come.

However, as far as this particular election is concerned, there is on the ballot of Illinois a ticket of candidates which the Workers Party considers it its duty to support, since it has no ticket of its own on the ballot.

We refer to the candidates of the Farmer Labor Party of Illinois. It is the desire of the Workers Party that the working class vote in Illinois be given to the Farmer Labor Party.

In thus advising the workers of Illinois, we assume responsibility neither for the program of the Farmer Labor Party, nor for its candidates. We must tell you frankly that the Farmer Labor Party, as at present constituted and led, is not the sort of a political party of the working class that can lead the workers struggle for political power and against capitalism.

The Farmer Labor Party is as yet very far from realizing that the class struggle is a political struggle, a struggle for power which must terminate the miseries of capitalist misrule, in the workers themselves taking over the powers of state and instituting a Workers Republic.

The Farmer Labor Party is still suffering from those illusions of "democracy", which make it so easy for a handful of industrial and financial magnates to keep in subjection tens of millions of workers and working farmers. The Farmer Labor Party has got to learn a great deal yet from the bitter experience of its own struggles before it can qualify for a real militant leadership in the class struggle.

However, the labor organizations of Illinois that constitute and support the F. L. P. are on the right road. Despite the bitter opposition and vicious intrigues of all the reactionaries and capitalist lieutenants in the labor movement, led by Sam Gompers, their labor organizations of Illinois that constitute the F. L. P. have started out on the road of independent political action by labor which will inevitably bring them to the adoption of the program and methods of struggle that the Workers Party stands for.

We see in the Farmer-Labor Party of Illinois a distinction from the Farmer-Labor Party of New York, which is nothing more than an attempt of bankrupt Socialist Party politicians to play politics at the expense of the workers.

A sincere effort of honest trade union men, workers and working farmers to break away from the domination of the capitalistic parties and to create a political party of, by and for the worker. Knowing as we do that the Farmer-Labor Party of Illinois is the staunchest champion of the idea of independent political action in the ranks of organized labor in America, an idea, which is the backbone of our own Party, we cannot but greet and encourage every sincere attempt made in this direction, by the labor organizations of Illinois.

It is because of this, when we find ourselves in Illinois with no ticket on the ballot, we say to the workers of Illinois "vote for the candidate of the Farmer-Labor Party." By doing so you are encouraging independent political action by labor in Illinois, but you are also lending your support to the honest and more progressive elements in the American Federation of Labor as against the reactionary bureaucrats of the Gompers machine.

The coming election as well as elections in general are but an incident in the class struggle. The big task of the working class is the organization and mobilization of all its forces for the final struggle for power. This is the main aim of the Workers Party. We, therefore, call on you, workers of Illinois, to join the Workers Party and assist in the building of a revolutionary party capable to lead in the fight for power.

Nov. 7th, the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Soviet Republic.

Nov. 9th, the Fourth Anniversary of the German "Socialist" Republic.

Nov. 11th, the Fourth Anniversary of the ending of the imperialist war.

Just to help you, the workers of America, decide, we quote from an article by Paxton Hibben, executive secretary of the American Committee for the Relief of Russian children, as follows:

"Russia is the only country in Continental Europe today that is going forward. The others are going backward, or at least standing still. In Russia alone is there hope of better times and a real and permanent prosperity."

Workers! Pick your holiday and celebrate.

Why We Celebrate the Russian Revolution

By ROBERT MINOR

The first capitalists herded the street waifs into filthy cellars, where the children, as young as six years, were worked under the whip and the club from 16 to 18 hours a day. They died rapidly of [illegible] and exhaustion, and were buried in the factory yard, to make way for fresh-caught waifs, who were whipped and goaded in turn through their shortened lives. Thus was founded the beginning of the wealth and power of the modern Capitalist Class.

The first labor movement was a whispered conspiracy between death-tired men and women, working thru day and night hours that were limited only in measure of a foreman's ability to keep them awake with a whip.

The first labor unionists were punished by being branded with a red-hot iron, by having their ears cut off, or by death. The labor movement has always been a crime, in the eyes of the rich, who make the law.

But the "crime" continued, and could not be stamped out. The labor movement grew, and became the only rift of light in the lives of the millions who toil under wage slavery. The Capitalists grew, also, in power.

The filthy cellar-workshop gave way to the towering bee-hive factory; the foreman with a whip gave way to the modern Capitalist State with armies of policemen, soldiers, strike-breakers and provocators. The branding iron gave way to the blacklist, and death with a club gave way to unemployment.

You know the story. The strike; the long watching and waiting in hunger; the strike-breakers; the clubbing; the gunmen's fire; death or jailing; defeat, or a pitiful victory, and the return to slavery more or less the same. You know the long story of the capitalist with a whip, now grown into the more subtle and powerful Capitalist State; the courts now granting "injunctions" or "construing laws" on the basis of the same "legal" principles upon which they once clipped ears or decreed the branding iron. You know the story of the "frame-up"; you know the story generally of the workingman "in court."

In short, you know the story of the Class Struggle. The labor movement, from a whispered conspiracy between two or three half-dead slaves in a cellar-factory, has grown to many millions strong. By a century and a half of fighting, of lying in jail, of dying under fire or on the gallows, the labor movement has forced its way into being half-"legalized."

That is, it is "legalized" as long as it remains half-dormant. The Capitalist State no longer tries to jail or shoot to death the labor movement, as long as the labor movement does nothing that might win.

Only when it moves, when it gets into actions that are broad enough and militant enough to WIN, does the Capitalist State, thru its Daugherties and Burnses, call out the troops to fire. At other times it is safer to let it lie half dormant, and to flatter and bribe its leaders.

But the labor movement continues. The struggle goes on, and must go on; because the quarrel is there. The capitalist with the whip is still there; the poverty, the hunger and unemployment come; so the fight comes, again and again, and more and more.

The fight cannot end until the quarrel ends. The fight cannot end while the capitalist with the whip — now the Capitalist State with armed force — stands over millions toiling in misery to give ease to a wealthy class. The fight cannot end until the quarrel ends.

And all of a sudden there's a strike in Petrograd. It's a General Strike. It spreads like fire over a prairie. THE WORKERS WIN! This time, no longer do the gunmen shoot down the people successfully. The people — the working people — win the battle. FOR THE FIRST TIME IN HISTORY THE WORKERS SEIZE THE WHIP FROM THE HAND OF THE CAPITALIST. For the first time, the labor movement wins. The STRIKE wins, because, for the first time, the strike reaches to seize the whip, instead of trying to dodge it.

The whip is an army and a navy, the brutish power of government. The whip is turned for the first time against the enemy of the workers; the capitalist class is beaten to its knees, whimpering, groaning, crying and still furtively hoping for a chance to stab in the back — but beaten. For the first time a "strike" is completely won.

That is why we celebrate the Russian Revolution.

That is why all class-conscious workers will celebrate the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

Industrialize Meat Industry

SOUTH OMAHA.—Craft unions of cattle butchers, sheep butchers, mechanics, hog butchers, casing workers and other locals in the packing house industry have joined with Local 602 of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen for a single industrial union in Omaha.

[illegible] All Metal Unions

"In the small, [illegible] machine shop of early days, the machinists' union functioned fairly well," reads the report of the metal trades section, as presented by Delegate Knudsen at the national conference of the Trades Union Educational League. "Around the corner was the blacksmith's shop and in it the members of the blacksmiths' union, and down by the river bank stood the small foundry employing members of the molders' union. As long as this condition existed the various craft unions functioned effectively and were ideal and logical.

"But now things have changed fundamentally. The machine shop in its growth has added one department after another, first a drafting room, then a foundry, and as the industrial development advanced there followed in quick succession a boiler shop, blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, pattern shop, making of the former primitive machine shop a gigantic institution, the modern metal industry."

The report lists over 30 trades now included in the metal industry, running from structural iron workers to jewelry workers. It gives as the total of men employed in the industry 4,476,137. The report says of them: "These millions of workers are not organized, because we are so blind that we have not yet constructed our metal trades unions so that they can be organized. Once united, this tremendous mass would have such enormous strength that they could soon put an end forever to the damnable conditions under which metal trades workers as a class live."

The report suggests that there be six departments to an industrial union of metal workers, steel workers, machinery and engine builders, shipbuilders, automobile constructors, shop crafts on the railroads, and jewelry and small instrument workers.

Against the argument that this would split the crafts, the report argues that the metal workers on the railroads, for example, would be members of the metal workers' union, but would still be affiliated with the railroad unions, paying part of their dues into both organizations. It cites the amalgamation in the German Metal Workers' Union, and shows that a multitude of insurance and fraternal features attaching to the former separate unions had been handled without difficulty.

It is a book written from first hand knowledge by Comrade Heller, who the Soviet Government commissioned to act as its representative in this country. Your knowledge of Russia will be deficient without this book.

Trotsky, Chief of Russia's Red Army, has written many books, but his "Dictatorship vs. Democracy" is acknowledged his masterpiece. Working class problems of fundamental importance are dealt with here in true scientific style. You will appreciate this book.

Premium number three comprises a number of booklets, some of which are brand new and each and all most necessary, interesting and instructive. Space will not allow us to tell of the good in each of them. You will enjoy each and since they are to be obtained at a saving in money, you will want the ones which you have not read.

Now, then! These books are offered to every reader of THE WORKER and to every new subscriber until January 1st. [illegible] Harry, Friend of Labor

By [illegible]

This is "Injunction Harry," who says he is a "sincere friend," who "will not deceive you" (addressing the laborers directly in Canton, Ohio, as the newspapers inform us). "Your principal trouble lies and your greatest danger is in the radicalism and character of some of your most prominent leaders." (By which he no doubt meant Sam Gompers, Matthew Woll, Grable and Lee!)

"Your security lies in the Constitution of the United States and in the laws of the United States. . . . There is no quarrel between labor and the Government."

Glad to hear it! We remember that the Constitution "guarantees" certain rights to the people—even the workers. It "guarantees" the right of free speech, free press and free assemblage. Yes, it guarantees it—and with one swoop, the Attorney General of the United States, "Injunction Harry", with the aid of a capitalist lackey, who calls himself a federal judge, destroyed those rights and tore the Constitution of the United States into bits! He, the popular upholder of law and order, the defender of the rights of the people!

We are so pleased to hear that there was no "quarrel between labor and the government." Who asked for the injunction, anyway? Did the railroad executives? They did not. They were astonished at the injunction and amazed at its provisions. They declared that, if the government of the United States had kept its hands off, they would have beaten the shopmen and the question would have been settled for all time, as far as they were concerned. But the government interfered—because it was obvious that there was a "quarrel between labor and the government"—not the government as an employer—but the government, the capitalist government, as an agent and tool of the ruling class of this country—the financial and industrial kings of Wall Street.

There was and there will continue to be a quarrel between labor and the government, until there is a government of the workers, which will act as the agent and in the interest of the workers.

Injunction Harry is truly the friend of labor. His own words confirm it. Thus further: "The injunction is the most humane, the most charitable and the most prompt and effective civil proceeding known in law."

O, you misled workers, misled by that red revolutionist, Samuel Gompers! What are you constantly storming about? Don't you know that injunctions are secured against you because the "friends of labor" love you so much? Don't you know that when you talk of a strike to get a raise in wages from, say, 23 cents an hour, which is what the Maintenance of Way men get, the bosses get out an injunction against you out of "humanity" and "charity"—because they love you so much? Don't you know that when they get an injunction preventing you from meeting, from picketing, from using the press as it is supposed to be used—in your interests—when the bosses stop all your activities,—they do so because it is a "most humane", a "most charitable" act? Don't you know that when they establish an Industrial Court, as in Kansas, which is a general prohibition of all the aims for which a union exists, they do so because, like Injunction Harry, they are the "friends of labor"?

It worked this time, Harry. You won. In spite of the two hundred (or more) General Strike resolutions that the American Federation of Labor received from central labor bodies and local unions, the yellow officials of the A. F. of L. backed down and helped you and the government tear up the Constitution of the United States, which "guarantees" the workers their rights.

But the workers won't stand for that all the time. The idea of amalgamation has taken hold of them. The Maintenance of Way men, whose union officials sold out the strike for two cents an hour, and the Railway Clerks have gone on record for amalgamation. The idea of amalgamating the sixteen craft unions in the railway industry is rapidly gaining ground. The Railway industry will contain one industrial union in the near future. There is one union in the [illegible] tion. Unity of action of the [illegible] and railroad workers is [illegible]. The workers are [illegible] that they must conduct their [illegible] tics, their general union work [illegible] their strikes with closed ranks. [illegible] are forced to do this, or go to [illegible]. United action on the part of the capitalists make this a life and [illegible] issue for the unions. So some day the unions will pay no heed to Injunction Harry and his injunctions; they will sweep Samuel Gomp[illegible] his feet, and go into a General [illegible] that was so generously advocated during the last strikes.

If they do, however, Injunction Harry, the "sincere friend who will not deceive you", tells us what will happen. Yes, boys, here it comes.

"Another step the Government could have taken was to have called out Federal troops."

There you have it from the mou[illegible] of the Attorney General him[illegible]. Federal troops are the next step, [illegible] as they used them in Mingo County, in Indiana during the steel strike in 1919, and in the railroad strike in 1894. Whenever the task becomes too big for the injunction wield[illegible] they call in the Major General of the army. He knows what to do.

This is not past history. Injunction Harry tells us that "I would under the same circumstances, do the same thing again." Governor Mill[illegible] of New York, speaking in Hornel[illegible] New York, where the shopmen [illegible] been on strike, said the same thing. This is what governors, presid[illegible] and attorney generals do—and [illegible] do: it is part of their jobs as offic[illegible] of a capitalist government.

So, the workers will have to defe[illegible] the Constitution of the United States or at least that part of it which "guarantees" their "rights"—against Injunction Harry and the Federal troops.

The workers' rights are worth [illegible]

Don't Act Crazy! Organize!

ST. LOUIS.—"It is a well known fact among people in charge of insane asylums that insane people never organize," says a circular sent out by President Chas. Blome, Molders' Local 59. "They may be given the rottenest kind of food; individually they will eat it or leave it alone, as they feel about it. But get together and collectively protest—never! They are crazy, that's why. Unorganized molders and coremak[illegible] ers, let us not conduct ourselves [illegible] crazy people do."

THE WORKER

799 Broadway, Room 405 — NEW YORK CITY

rate on is Tuesday ovember 7th

Five years and still going strong. That sums up the heroic sacrifice and devotion to principle of the Russian workers. Against the combined onslaughts of the robber nations of the world, the workers of Russia still stand, solid as a rock, beckoning workers of other nations to follow on.

"The Soviet government will soon fall," was the cry of the capitalist class, re-echoed by every social-patriot and labor-fakir in the world.

First, they could not last one month, then two months was predicted as the limit of their endurance, then it would surely fall in six months, and so on. Yet, today, after five years of war, famine, pestilence and every form of human agony, it stands as the greatest power in all the world. The fact that it is a power to be reckoned with is dawning upon the Allies.

The First Workers' Republic—the most tremendous achievement in all history—is an achievement that thrills the heart of every class conscious worker.

To celebrate this glorious achievement, a monster celebration will be held on Tuesday evening, November 7th, at the Lexington Opera House, 51st St. and Lexington Ave. at 8.15 sharp.

The speakers for the occasion will be C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, who will speak in English, M. J. Olgin in Jewish and A. Chramoff in Russian.

There has also been an excellent musical program arranged for the occasion, which is as follows:

Opening by International Chorus of Ukrainian, Lithuanian, Finnish, Lettish and German singers, who will sing "The Internationale" and "The Red Flag," the entire audience joining in the choruses.

Mandolin Orchestra of Workmen's Circle, composed of 45 pieces, in artistic selections.

Sonia Radina will render a Revolutionary Folk Song.

Vladimir Graffman, Russian Violin Virtuoso, will play the "Sovenir de Moscow" by Vieniavsky and a "Slavonic Dance" by Dvorak and Kreisler. This artist has appeared in concert with some of the leading symphony orchestras of this country and Europe and has received the highest praise for his work from leading musical critics.

As the program is long and varied the fact must be emphasized that we will begin at 8.15 p. m. regardless of how many are present at that time.

Other meetings with time, place and speakers have been arranged as follows:

The Non-Partisan Policy

The Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City has issued the report of its "nonpartisan" committee on the various political parties. It is declared as the honest opinion of this committee that the platform of the Democratic party does most to conserve the interests of labor and that it utters a pledge for its advancement in more definite terms than any of the other political platforms.

How ridiculous this report seems in the light of recent statements made by Frank A. Munsey and Nicholas Murray Butler, prominent spokesmen of the Republican Party, who urged amalgamation of the two leading parties, because there was little or no difference between them, and because it was necessary to combine them against the common enemy—Labor.

In other words, these two leading exponents of capitalist party policies recognize the need for separate unity of the two classes on the political field—the employing class and the employed. The nonpartisan committee of the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City does not.

It is also absolutely irrefutable that the platforms of all political parties were not examined before the report was issued, in spite of the fact that such platforms were submitted.

The "nonpartisan" committee still attempts to deceive the workers into placing their reliance upon one or the other of the two parties, supported by the ready instruments of the employing class. We do not need to search far into our memory to find the proof of this. Under the Harding Republican regime, the Daugherty injunction was issued against the railroad workers. Under the Wilson Democratic regime the Lever Law was turned against the miners. Under the Cleveland Democratic administration the infamous injunction was issued against Debs, serving as a precedent for the present injunction. Under the Republican Administration we had Daugherty. Under the Democratic rule the reactionary Palmer. Did Labor benefit in any way by the change?

In another part of its report this "nonpartisan" committee endorses Ansorge, a Republican. This man failed to vote for the La Follette Seamen's Law. He voted for the railroads in the Winslow Railroad Refund Bill, enabling the railroads to loot the U. S. Treasury of $500,000,000. He voted against the farmers in the Farm Export (War Finance Corporation) Law and for the Profiteers in the Income Tax Law for Surtax Rates on incomes of millionaires. And last but not least, our "friend" Ansorge opposed the investigation of the War Tax Frauds.

It is needless to show, point by point, the history of the men whom this committee endorses. Not only do they fail actively to attempt to get legislation favorable to labor, but they have actually gone on record as opposed to legislation favored by labor.

There is but one sane attitude toward this question. Labor must have its own party, working for and supported by its own strength. Independent political action is the need of the hour and any such insane proposition as proposed by the New York Central Trades and Labor Council should be held up to scorn and ridicule in every labor organization in that it appears.

We Go Off the Ballot

That it is easy for the capitalist courts and old party politicians to develop legal technicalities to drive working class opponents off the ballot is again shown in the experience of the Workers Party in the 12th (New York) District. The excuse of legality is not even resorted to.

Ben Gitlow was the candidate of the Workers' League for mayor of New York City, at the November 1921 elections. To be sure he was in prison. But his case was up on appeal. It was held that it was not a question of whether or not his name should go on the ballot, but whether he would be installed in office if elected. And the Workers' League was willing to take its chance on Gitlow's conviction being thrown out by the higher courts, or his being pardoned before the time came to assume office.

But the courts couldn't see it that way. After the supreme court ruled that Gitlow's name should go on the ballot, the appellate court ruled it off, and it went off.

This summer when the Workers Party was picking its candidates, after the Farmer-Labor Party and the Socialist Party had rejected the proffer of a united front, it was decided to select Ben Gitlow as candidate for Congress in the 12th (New York) District, where Meyer London is the Socialist candidate. Gitlow was at liberty and it was not beyond reason to believe that his conviction would be reversed.

In any case it was not the duty of the election commissioners to put Gitlow's name off the ballot. Congress usually decides the eligibility of its own members, as in the case of Victor Berger, Socialist from Milwaukee, elected but not seated.

But it seems there is a difference between Communist and "Socialist" convicts, and Gitlow's name was thrown off the ballot. When the name of J. Louis Engdahl, editor of THE WORKER, was substituted to fill the vacancy that was thrown out also as the election commissioners claimed no vacancy existed to be filled.

The old party election officials confessed they had no basis for throwing Gitlow's name off the ballot last year when they went before the state legislature in the winter and secured the passage of a law barring "convicts" from the ballot. This will not operate against the pickpockets and thugs of Tammany Hall nor the more respectable criminals of the Republican party.

The Workers Party can meet this assault by solidifying its forces and developing sufficient power to expose to all labor these crimes of capitalist "democracy." When the shams have been swept away the struggle between capital and labor will get down to fundamental class issues.

Hunting an Issue

The Liberals and Conservatives in England are having the same difficult time finding an issue for their election campaign that confronts the Democrats and Republicans in this country. One is inclined to agree with Lloyd George that it was a crime to break up the coalition of the two parties upholding capitalism.

Since our own laborites and liberals have been so keen in referring to the British example, let them view this campaign in England as they urge a liberal before a labor party in this country.

There are a few laborites lending an ear to the plea of the Forty-Eighters and Co. for the organization of a Liberal Party since, they claim, the apparent failure of the Farmer-Labor Party indicates that independent political action on the part of labor is premature. But the English example teaches us that such a Liberal Party, always a deception in times of civil peace, becomes an open ally of reaction when capitalism is threatened by aroused labor.

Even milk-and-water labor reformism has failed to create an issue in the British campaign. Frank Hodges, secretary of the Miners' Federation, weeps to think that the demand for a capital levy to redeem the war debt should meet with the opposition of the capitalist politicians. Hodges urges that even Premier Bonar Law is in favor of the capital levy. It reminds us of our own Morris Hillquit claiming that the American Bankers' Association had stolen the Socialist demand for the cancellation of war debts.

American labor stands in need of independent political action. But it must fearlessly draw the issue as between the capitalists and the workers, otherwise every political struggle will be but a repetition of the muddling and confusion that we see in Great Britain to-day, and not much better than the chaos in which labor in this country finds itself enmeshed in this campaign.

End capitalist misrule is a demand that will force the exploiters into action and enthuse all workers to unite for the struggle against their common oppressors.

The Jewish press in New York has been especially agitated by the controversy centering around the report of the Investigating Committee of Five which probed the charges against the F. S. R. The "Forward", as author of the charges, of course barks violently at the mention of the report since it clears the F. S. R. It has been careful, naturally, not to print the report in full, limiting itself to misquotation. The "Freiheit", on the other hand, has defended the report.

It is interesting to observe the attitude of the Jewish dailies not directly concerned in the controversy, since that is a fair test of what comparatively impartial observers make of the business. The Jewish "News" ran this headline over the story: "Forward Frame-up Fails Miserably." And the Jewish "Day" ran this: "Committee Declares Forward's Charges against the Friends of Soviet Russia without Foundation."

The Day also carried a longer discussion of the subject by P. Kalamini, of its staff. It reads in part as follows:

"After some thought I came to this conclusion: Whereas, the Freiheit reports the findings of the committee, to the effect that the investigation had found no proof whatever which throws any suspicion on the F. S. R.; and whereas, the Day gave the news without any coloring at all, and also stated that the committee had found nothing which sustains the charges; and whereas the Forward gave none of the findings of fact at all, merely scolding and evincing a powerful desire to drown the truth in words—

"I decided that the Forward had once more fallen into a swamp and that its palpitations were only a sign that it is trying to escape.

"And generally, why have I been thinking so hard? The whole question is senseless. For the Forward—and truth! They don't go together, my dear readers."

In the World of Books

By MAX SCHACHTMAN

AGAINST THE GRAIN (A REBOURS). By J. K. Huysmans. Lieber & Lewis.

To the Duc des Esseintes most of the literature of his time, the end of the nineteenth century was dull and sycophantly venal to the bourgeoisie, which was vulgar and stupid; he saw thru the hypocrisies and the tediousness of his aristocratic relatives and of the young "intellectuals"; he despised women with monastic ferocity and wearied of the hair-splitting of religion; he was quite indifferent to the woes and struggles of the proletariat. The Duc is of course a mere figure upon which the author wraps the garments of pessimism, of intense individualism.

Huysmans, a dyspeptic by nature and a misogynist and individualist by development, wrote a jewelled prose which was of literary kin to that of Flaubert, Baudelaire, Anatole France, Oscar Wilde, Aubrey Beardsley and Edgar Saltus. In "A Rebours" Huysmans describes a young aesthete who runs away from the stupidity of the world and secludes himself in a house which he fits out in a wondrous manner. He surrounds himself with rare foods and wines, rare flowers and still rarer books. He lives by nerve reactions and sense stimulants. His artificial life makes him sick in body, mind and soul and the resultant breakdown obliges him to leave his refuge reluctantly.

This book is as good a picture of Huysman's ideas and criticisms as any. He admired Baudelaire's detachment from the mass (altho the latter once fought on the right side of the barricades of the Commune of '48); he sincerely doubted and held aloof from all democratic governments; he loved and immersed himself in beautiful things, which were the only things worth while in this stupid, futile world. He loved the Ivory Tower into which he had retired. . . .

We, too, are pessimistic about our present existence. It is futile, stupid and dull. The workers are not so cultured as they could be; their lives are drab, monotonous and taken up with procuring bread and butter; there is no time or possibility for Cezanne or Conrad or Hauptmann. But we do not run away to Ivory Towers. We desire and work for a world where all may enjoy these and others; where they will read Huysmans, too; where Life will not be, as Thomas Hardy wrote,

A senseless school, where we must give
Our lives that we may learn to live!
A dolt is he who memorizes
Lessons that leave no time for prizes.

The People Elect the Government

The election and naturalization laws of the state of Connecticut is a neat piece of lawyer's handiwork compiled by the Secretary of State.

Altho it specifically states on page 243, Chapter 18, Section 1, that a party designation shall be printed on any ballot label for a voting machine or upon any ballot at any election, if three weeks prior to an election, a nominating petition signed by a number of qualified voters, equal to one percentum of the votes cast for the same office at the last preceding election, is filed with the Secretary of State and that this petition shall be submitted to the town clerk of the town, in which the signers reside at least seven days prior to the filing of the same with the Secretary of State.

Yet we find that when the town clerk in Bridgeport, Conn., refused to return the Workers Party petition, three weeks prior to the general election, Tuesday, Oct. 17th, the day specified for the filing of the same with the Secretary of State, that there was no law in all the dusty volumes compiled by the Connecticut Legislature that we could use as a means of prosecution against this town clerk.

In other words, unless a law is enacted penalizing a town clerk who refuses to return a petition, on the day specified for the filing of the same with a higher unit, that a party such as the Workers Party, even if it secures the signature of every voter in Connecticut, will be at the complete mercy of the local town clerks.

This should put a slump in the old-time hundred percenter's argument, "that it is the people who elect the government."

Upton Sinclair, Socialist Candidate for U. S. Senator from California, Takes Journey Into Realm of Economics and Meets with Disaster!

By H. M. WICKS

That publicity-seeking novelist and ornament of the decrepit Socialist Party, Mr. Upton Sinclair, is candidate for United States Senator from the state of California. Following the precedent established by aspiring politicians nominated on the old party tickets, the distinguished novelist issued a statement to his party wherein he set forth the salient points in his platform. This statement was duly published in a recent Sunday magazine section of the New York Call. As a horrible example of distorted economics it is on a par with the historical erudition of Mr. James Oneal, the editorial writer for the Call.

The dominant issue in the political world to-day, according to Upton, is the question of the Money Trust, therefore he unsheaths the sword of the crusader and dramatically assaults the citadel of this moloch with what must seem to his puerile mind new and devastating economic theories.

As we look about us we observe the "people" of this nation groaning under the heavy burdens imposed by this insatiable monster. For years they have suffered thusly and have never been able to devise a method of escape from their unrequited slavery. But from this date hence—from the publication of the economic treatise of Upton—they need no longer suffer if they will but hark to the voice of their gallant savior. There have been other attempts to solve the problem of exploitation. Benjamin Franklin, William Petty, David Ricardo, John Stuart Mill and Karl Marx have attempted to solve the problem but it remained for the one and only, the original, modest, retiring Upton Sinclair to show them all the error of their ways by discovering and proclaiming an economic law that they all either missed or ignored or ridiculed.

Simple Solution

Witness the superlative wisdom of this modern economist:

"* * the people * * should follow the example of the masters of the Money Trust who use their credit to buy the key industries of the country. Let the people buy these industries and use them to break instead of making monopoly.

"It is my program that the American people shall establish a national bank also public banks in every state and city of the country and that these public banks shall invite the people to deposit their savings where they will be protected by the entire credit of the people and that the savings so deposited shall be used as a basis of credit issues to finance the public purchase of the railroads, the coal mines, the steel mills, the packing houses and the other great industries upon which we all depend."

How simple! All the workers have to do is to save their money, place it in public banks and issue credits to purchase the industries from the present owners.

This astounding drivel is published by the New York Call as the official declaration of the most noted member of the Socialist Party of America.

A knowledge of the A B C of Marxian economics would have prevented such an exhibition of appalling ignorance. The understanding of simple surplus value explodes the childish notion that it is of any advantage to the working class to endeavor to save its money in the hopes of some day rising to the position of the capitalist class. The argument of Upton Sinclair, the renowned socialist, is precisely the argument of the publicity agents of the American Bankers Association. The "people"—that evanescent metaphysical entity—are admonished to practice thrift by placing their money in banks that have the support of the federal government, thru the Federal Reserve system. But even the slightest understanding of economics is sufficient to convince a worker that the last thing the bankers really desire is that all the people of the nation should save their money.

Putting Money to Work

The advocates of thrift dwell at length upon the advisability of "putting money to work" so that it will draw interest. Let us imagine, for the sake of argument, that every person who works for a living would be able to save a few thousand dollars. Since interest is income without labor and since labor is the one thing that creates value, who would produce the surplus to pay the interest on this money? Money alone does not create additional wealth; it does not multiply like rabbits. If every one saved money and expected to draw interest on it, no one would draw interest, industries would stop because no one could be induced to work, human society would first stagnate, then perish from the earth. We are sure that neither Upton nor the bankers desire such a fate for humanity.

In case this argument could be disposed of by Socialist Party sophistry to the effect that no such thing is contemplated, and that out of malice we have reduced Upton's argument to absurdity, we will record another objection that will further show the futility of such an alleged program.

The basis of capitalist exploitation is the surplus value extracted from the working class in the process of production. The working class receive about one-fourth of the value of the product of its toil in the form of wages, the other three-fourths go into the hands of the capitalist class. Mr. Sinclair imagines that the class obtaining the one-fourth will be able to save enough money out of it to come, after deducting necessary living expenses, to purchase the three-fourths that is being created for the capitalist class. Any school child who has graduated from the kindergarten could not fail to detect the obvious absurdity of such a proposition.

There is a third very valid objection to accepting the economics of this petty bourgeois dilettante and that is the fact well known to all economists since the time of John Stuart Mill that wages paid at any given time in any capitalist country on earth are determined by what is considered absolutely necessary for the working class to subsist on. The worker sells his labor power upon the market the same as all other commodities are sold. And like all other commodities the value of that labor power is determined by the amount of labor time necessary to reproduce it. In the case of the one commodity the worker has to sell, its value is determined by the labor time necessary to produce the food, clothing and shelter that he requires to subsist on from day to day and to support an average family. Like other commodities it is subject also to the law of supply and demand. In exceptional cases of labor shortage the wages of the laborer may be a little above their value (a trifle more than the value of the food, clothing and shelter necessary to exist); in other cases wages fall temporarily below the value of labor power, but on an average the worker receives in wages the full value of his labor power.

Saving Would Lower Wages

Now let us imagine that the working class, as a whole, decides to save a certain amount of its wages by depriving itself of some of the things it is accustomed to enjoying. In other words the workers would voluntarily lower their standard of living in order to save a few dollars. What would be the result? The most noticeable result would be a closing down of certain industries formerly engaged in producing commodities for the consumption of the workers. The closing of the industries would result in unemployment of a certain part of the working class. Soon the savings of the unemployed workers would vanish and they would clamor at the factory gates for jobs. For a time they might demand the wages they had received before and which [illegible] saving money. [illegible] the downward trend [illegible] to the level of the lower [illegible] living that the workers [illegible] tarily imposed upon them.

If [illegible] against Sinclair's [illegible] omics, either one of which annihilates his contention, did [illegible] ist and the working class could devise a method of saving its money and use it as finance capital in modern production, still it would [illegible] produce the results anticipated [illegible] this "socialist" declaration. [illegible] money would meet the fate of the investments of all the small fry [illegible] the bourgeois world and [illegible] financial oligarchy, to [illegible] entrench itself by [illegible] vestors under its absolute domination.

"High Finance"

Since Mr. Sinclair is totally ignorant of the merest rudiments of economics it is absurd to expect him to know anything about the ramifications of modern finance capital. Were he familiar with this highest development of capitalism he would know that even though the workers could amass a far greater amount of money than that possessed today by the capitalist class—an obvious impossibility—still they would be at the mercy of the great money combines.

When we consider the fact that one concern, by manipulation of finances, with the investment of a million dollars can control tens of millions of small investments, we can easily detect the childishness of the eminent novelist's proposals from this view point. One "mother concern" or basic concern in modern industry may be capitalized at a million dollars. The House of Morgan may control fifty-one per cent of the stock of this concern. This concern creates a "daughter" concern and issues stock to the extent of two million dollars, taking fifty one per cent of the stock into the control of the original "mother" concern. In turn another concern that we will designate as the "granddaughter" concern is created and controlled by the two million dollar "daughter" concern. So we see that only two steps from the original concern an investment of half a million dollars can control a total of four million in investments of smaller stockholders. This process can be continued until a half million dollar investment in the hands of the financial oligarchy may easily and frequently does, control fifty or a hundred millions invested by the small fry of the [illegible] class.

Of course the argument may be put forth that the stockholders could have a voice in controlling their own stock, but a knowledge of modern capitalism would dispel this notion. The large stockholders are always the directors and the small stockholders never have an opportunity to take part in stockholders meetings. As a matter of fact the arguments of the distinguished socialist advising the workers to enter the game of capitalist imperialism for the purpose of outwitting the other fellow is basically the identical argument of the railroad magnates when they present figures proving that they have thousands of small stockholders who are vitally interested in the continued prosperity of the roads. This petty bourgeois opportunistic argument is one of the devices used by the financial barons to strengthen their own hands.

Sinclair Is No Bolshevik

In certain quarters Upton Sinclair is considered a good writer of fiction. To write fiction requires a mind susceptible to hallucinations and valuable as such mental disorders may be to successful novelists and poets they are worse than useless when one enters the realm of economics where facts, not fancies, prevail.

In order that no one may mistake him for a Bolshevik, Mr. Sinclair hastens to assure his readers that his proposal for the solution for the ills of society is a program that offers the "quickest and safest" method of escape from exploitation. "We do not want a violent revolution in this country, we do not want to disorganize production, we do not want to slide into civil strife and disorder."

We are quite certain that the working class that follows the program of Upton will successfully avoid any revolution, violent or otherwise. We would not be so optimistic as to hope that following his advice would not lead to disorganization and disorder—the disorder that would afflict society if it should sink into complete idiocy. But since there is little likelihood of the inhabitants of the nation meeting with such widespread mental disaster, we will continue to insist that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved thru the social revolution and not by chasing the phantoms originating in the disordered mind of a two-for-a-cent scribbler.

Sympathetic organizations are requested to make no arrangements for DEC. 2, 1922, as the YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE Local New York, will hold its SECOND ANNUAL BALL on that date at 1347 Boston [illegible] members of the board a long time to find that word [illegible] in the dictionary, which means flowing or sweetened [illegible] honey.

That is about as close as the workers will get to the sweet [illegible] of life, to enjoy the charge that "a living wage" for them is a honeyed phrase.

Instead the labor board has decided for a "just and reasonable" wage, which means minimum pay of 25 cents an hour for common labor on the railroads, $2 per day, $12 for the full six-day week.

It is certain that the big families of the common laborers on the railroads will not find much joy coming into their lives on the fleeting wings of these wages.

But the labor board has fought off the "living wage," which, it claims, "if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would wreck every railroad in the United States; and, if extended to other industries, would carry them into communistic ruin."

That is the way the "public" and the railroad groups on the labor board feel about it. By "ruin" they mean that the workers will take in wages that might go to the railroad owners in profits. Surely the workers will not be frightened by this "communistic ruin" that acts as a nightmare for the money-controlled members of the labor board.

Twenty-five cents an hour is not a "just and reasonable" wage, whatever the meaning of that deceiving phrase. It is a starvation wage that will drive railroad labor into greater rebellions than the strike just past. The capitalist spokesmen on the labor board claim the "living wage" would increase the railroad payroll by $1,249,390,994 annually. It is a pity, of course, that that should go into the pockets of the workers rather than into the bank accounts of parasitic stockholders.

But these railroad millionaires may soon discover that they will not only lose that billion, but that it will be possible for labor to invoke some more "communistic ruin" for capitalism by taking over all industry, including the railroads, and tearing up these gilt-edged stock certificates as so much waste paper.

There is "communistic ruin" ahead, but for capitalists only. That threat should not be feared by intelligent workers. It should be "mellifluous phraseology" to their receptive ears.

Governor Allen, of Kansas, of industrial court infamy, has decided to brook no competition and has ordered all Ku Klux Klaners driven out of the state. Now let the workers finish the job by giving the governor his passports.

Then What Is Debs?

We are told by David Karsner, author of "Debs: His Authorized Life and Letters," that Eugene V. Debs made a resolution in his early years "not to ever write a book." Karsner does not tell us why Debs reached this decision, but we find that he is trying to help Debs out by giving us another book, this one to be called "Talks with Debs in Terre Haute." It is appearing first in serial form in the New York Call.

If Karsner is seeking to shed a new light on Debs, as he claims, we hope that his efforts will bear some fruit. But we find that even a reading of the preface leaves us in considerable confusion. Karsner says of Debs:

> "He is not a revolutionist in the material sense that Karl Marx was one, nor a spiritualist in the ethereal sense in which Saint Francis appeared."

Thus being indicted as neither a material revolutionist nor an ethereal spiritualist, Karsner makes these declarations in rapid succession:

> "I believe the spirit of Debs transcends every political inference that has held his attention during his 40 years of active public life. His interests are spiritual and humanitarian.
> "The world has known Debs as an orator pleading a political cause and as a labor agitator appealing for industrial democracy. I hope this book may be one of the means of introducing him as a man whose interests are as wide and diversified as life itself. Not on my account have I moored him to any political orthodoxy or dogma."

Surely the "Socialist" effort that confines itself to capturing votes on election day and fighting Communists in the labor unions is a narrow field in which to confine any discussion of Debs.

But since when did the Socialism of Karl Marx, that is inspiring the Communist struggle in all nations, cease to be as "wide and diversified as life itself"? It is surely a "Socialist" confession of failure to admit that the world social revolution, for which real Socialism joins hands with Communism, is mere "political orthodoxy" and "dogma."

It seems that Debs' biographer has lost sight of the vision of the social revolution, affecting as it will the smallest, as well as the greatest, human effort and aspiration, in his closer affiliations with a traitor "Socialist" Party rapidly retreating into the arms of black reaction.

One gets the feeling that this biographer protests too much about his spiritualisms, humanisms and idealisms, especially when he makes the assertion that Debs' "idealism led him into the Socialist movement."

The facts as we remember them are that the mailed fist of capitalist justice put Debs into a jail at Woodstock, Ill., as one part of reaction's attack on the American Railway Union. Debs went to jail an adherent of old party politics. In jail Debs studied the classics of Karl Marx and other recognized Socialist writers, with their Karsner despised "orthodoxy" and "dogma."

For 28 years we have believed that it was this persecution and this study that opened Debs' eyes to the true nature of capitalism and converted him to Socialism.

All of which leads us to believe that Karsner's peculiar brand of hysteria rather than a desire to reproduce facts has produced a biography that will cause all well-informed readers to ask "Then what is Debs?"

The Communists of Milan, Italy, are organizing a Red Guard to protect the Communist administration in case the party is victorious in the approaching elections. That's putting the fist behind the ballot. The Fascisti will not like that.

The German Republic will have been in [illegible] years on Nov. 9, 1922. It was on Nov. 9, 1918, [illegible] mann-Ebert-Haase "Socialist" ministry [illegible] overthrow of the Kaiser, and Ebert has been the "Socialist" president of the German Republic during most of the time since.

The "Socialist," Friedrich Ebert, is president today and will continue in office at least until 1925, by the consent of all parties, excepting the Communist Party.

Yet the workers thruout the world are not celebrating the anniversary of the German "Socialist" revolution. Their eyes are all on the Fifth Anniversary, Nov. 7, of the Soviet (Communist) Revolution in the Russia of the workers and peasants.

All the news that comes out of Germany is that the "Socialist" traitors, the anti-Communists, the Majority Socialists (Social Democrats) and the Independent Socialists have united as they should and are celebrating their marriage in true traitor style.

One of the first acts of these "United" Socialists of Germany was to reject the offer of Gregory Zinoviev, on behalf of the Communist International, to exchange the Social (Counter) Revolutionary leader, Timofeyev, for Max Hoeltz, now serving a life sentence in "Socialist" Germany for the part he played in the March uprising of 1921.

The Vorwaerts, official organ of the Scheidemann-Ebert German "Socialists," declares that this is a governmental and not a party matter, and that the Russians ought to act thru their diplomatic representative, Ambassador Krestinski, and thru the German foreign office.

This is either a startling confession of impotence on the part of the German "Socialists," or it is a rank betrayal of their bosom anti-Communist conspirator, Timofeyev, heralded over the world by the "Socialist" press as a suicide and a martyr, it being claimed that he had been driven to his death by Bolshevik persecution.

Zinoviev in a statement to the Central Committee of the German Communist Party declares that all German Communists must know that the story of the suicide or the attempted suicide of Timofeyev is one of the usual lies invented by the people who have been living on nothing but lies for the last few years.

It is declared, on the other hand, that the German and Russian Communists are fully aware of the terrible state of Max Hoeltz in a German "Socialist" prison.

To the German Communists, Zinoviev declares:

> "COMRADES! In order to save from a slow death this true champion of the proletarian revolution, Max Hoeltz, who is being tortured in a bourgeois-menshevik German prison, the presidium of the Comintern (Communist International) empowers you,—
> "Publicly to propose to the German Social Democracy to exchange Max Hoeltz for Citizen Timofeyev."

Zinoviev charges that the "United" Social Democracy of the Second and 2½ Internationals "have, of course, sufficient influence with the German Coalition government to secure this. On our part we are certain that the Soviet Government will agree to the exchange."

The fact that Zinoviev, chairman of the Communist International, and not a Soviet official, is able to offer Timofeyev in exchange for Hoeltz, shows how closely the Soviet Government and the Comintern are working together. It is this failure of the German "Socialists" to identify the struggle of the German workers with the battle of labor against capitalism thruout the entire world that is their greatest crime. Instead they have chosen, and will continue to serve as lackeys of the capitalists and monarchists of their own and other countries.

It is well to remember on this Fourth Anniversary of the German Republic some of the crimes of these "United" Socialists. It was the government of the Social-Democratic parties of Germany, the Majority Socialists and the Independents, the Scheidemann-Ebert-Haase ministry in power from Nov. 9, to Dec. 29, 1918, that repeatedly, under the direction of Scheidemann and Wells, ordered the troops to shoot down the workers in the streets and arrested the executive of the Berlin Workers' Council.

It was the Social-Democratic Government in power from Dec. 29, 1918, to Feb. 13, 1919, that drove from power the workers' mayor, Eichhorn, of Berlin, murdered seven workers' members of the Reichstag, and gave to revolutionary history the infamous figure of Noske, who drowned labor's uprisings and protests in rivers of blood, including the assassination of Liebknecht and Luxembourg, and the murder of Comrades Loewsky, Marx, Jordan and Milkert while being transferred to a prison in the forest of Tegel.

Then came the first coalition government, of the Social-Democratic Party with the Center (Catholic) Party, from Feb. 1919, to June 20, 1919, that renewed the Bismarckian rule of blood and iron, slaughtering workers, imprisoning workers, torturing them in prison, and using the troops to beat down hunger riots in the name of "Socialist" democracy.

The White Terror grew under the Second Coalition Government of the Social-Democrats, the Center and the Democratic Parties, from July 19, 1919, to March 26, 1920, when workers demonstrating before the Reichstag Buildings saw 43 of their comrades slain and 103 wounded by the troops ordered out against them, followed by the reactionary Kappist revolt.

Then followed the Third Coalition Government of the Social-Democrats and the Center Party, that won infamy thru its attack on the coal miners of the Ruhr Valley. In the Ruhr, in Thuringia, in Central Germany, in Saxony, the workers' movement, resulting from the call to a general strike, issued by the government itself against the uprising of Kapp, is crushed in blood with the aid of those very reactionary troops against which the Democratic and the Social-Democratic Government had called the workers to action.

Then there came the Fehrenbach Government, without official Social-Democratic participation, but which would never have been established without their assistance, from June 26, 1920, to May 4, 1921. It followed in the footsteps of its predecessors, crushing strikes with ruthless brutalities, accompanied by wholesale assassinations of working-class prisoners, drumhead court martials, open warfare against labor in the streets, as for instance the killing of 11 and wounding of 22 workers in the funeral procession of Comrade Hoffman, murdered by the "Socialist" police at Flensburg. We might also mention the murder of Comrade Sylt, head of the Berlin electrical workers' union, by the Berlin police under the direction of Noske's successor, the "Socialist" Richter.

Last of all we present the Fourth Coalition Government of the Social-Democrats, the Democratic Party and the Center, from May 11, 1921, up to the present time. Under this regime the "Socialist" policehead, Richter, strives to excel his predecessor, Noske, in causing blood to flow, whether it is the blood of workers in a Young Communist Demonstration at Charlottenburg (Berlin), or the blood of working-class women and children in a protest gathering of housewives complaining against the high cost of living. It was under this regime that the "March Uprising" took place, as a result of which Max Hoeltz and many other workers were sent to prison at hard labor for life.

This is the dictatorship of murder and assassination that the "United" Socialists of Germany continue to support and endorse. Against the Soviet Regime they spread the false story of the suicide of their bloody-handed brother in crime against labor, the Social (Counter) Revolutionary Timofeyev.

Like all guilty assassins the German "Socialists" try to hide behind the skirts of others, in this case the "Ebert Government," asking the Russian Communists to address it thru their Berlin ambassador.

What a spectacle! German "Socialists" cowering like slaves at the feet of German capitalists, a slavery into which they have sold themselves, the price being the lives of and unstinted sacrifices by large numbers of workers in the Communist section of the German working class.

This is the bloody dictatorship that the Scheidemanns, the Longuets, the Hendersons, the Hillquits and the Bergers interpret as winning Socialism by "PEACEFUL EVOLUTION."

This is the murderous anti-labor rule that so satisfies the industrial [illegible] 1917 [illegible] only under the [illegible] in Germany, supported by the Majority and the Independent [illegible].

Let all workers study and compare and decide the road along which they should go to win their emancipation.

Fascisti in Forced March

The Italian Fascisti are attempting a forced march towards a military dictatorship. They originally announced they were not satisfied with six places in the new ministry. They wanted all power and they were going to try to get it as a result of the approaching elections.

As this issue went to press, however, Benito Mussolini, head of the Fascisti, had motored to Rome in the private car of King Victor Emanuel, where, after being received like a conqueror of old, he announced his cabinet made up of seven Fascisti, five Nationalists, one Democrat, and one Catholic Party member.

Thus the Fascisti assume responsibility for the government, while the traitor "Socialists," who have been preaching collaboration, have been left out in the cold.

All the press reports coming out of Italy are undoubtedly censored. Little is said about the activity of the Communists, except that there have been numerous clashes between them and the Fascisti in a large number of towns.

There is also the hint let out that the Mussolini government may outlaw the Communist Party, a proceeding that would be in harmony with its dictatorial methods.

At present the Fascisti have only 35 seats out of 535 in the Chamber of Deputies, an insignificant number. In preparation for the elections they have launched a war against proportional representation, which gives all parties a representation near their voting strength.

The Fascisti are in agreement with our American capitalist statesmen against proportional representation that would give even small radical and revolutionary parties spokesmen in congress even tho they failed to carry a single congressional district.

The Italian Fascisti are no doubt rushing their plans because of the recent congress of the Italian Socialist Party, at which the majority voted to join with the Italian Communist Party under the leadership of the Communist International.

It is now the task of the Italian Communist Party to assemble the shattered forces of the working class betrayed by reformists willing to co-operate with the capitalist profiteers. It is charged that under the blows dealt by the "Socialist" betrayers the membership of the trade unions fell from 2,500,000 to 500,000 during the past 18 months.

The question is whether the Communist forces will be able to rally the workers to renewed struggles before the Fascisti gather sufficient strength to build their military dictatorship, on the basis of their present power and victory in the approaching elections, and usher in an era of white guard terrorism in government and industry. The actions of the Fascisti indicate they feel they have not much time to lose. Every American worker who is not bereft of reason will hope for the quick recovery of the Italian working class and its early victory over its capitalist oppressors. The forced march of the Fascisti must and will be halted.

Crocodile Tears and Soft Soap

We had wanted to say something about the championship by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., of the eight-hour day and of the fight of the coal miners of Somerset County, Pennsylvania. But what was the use attacking a religious hypocrite safe in his fortress built of money bags, profits wrung from enslaved labor in oil fields, coal mines, on the railroads and a host of other basic industries.

But now comes Mr. David Hirshfield, New York City Commissioner of Accounts, and says some of the things we have been thinking as follows:

> "Mr. Rockefeller is shedding crocodile tears and pouring out sympathy upon the poor miners of Somerset County. He has given them his moral support, whereas, if he cared to, he could end this strike over night. Mr. Rockefeller has sufficient money in the banks and sufficient influence, financial and otherwise, to accomplish this without any trouble."

Mr. Hirshfield is head of a New York Committee conducting hearings at Windber, Pa., in the heart of the Somerset County coal fields that supply fuel for the New York subways. He had listened, with his fellow committeemen, to the age-long stories of illegal acts committed by the coal and iron police, of false weights by which miners are cheated out of their earnings, of wholesale evictions from company-owned houses and of company stores where miners were forced to trade.

It is easy for the Hirshfield Committee to lend receptive and seemingly sympathetic ears to the stories of the coal miners. They are far away from home and have no direct responsibilities.

But when they return to New York City these committeemen will fit back into the old party city administration that rules in the city hall that gets its inspiration from the dollars owned by Rockefeller and his fellow-capitalists.

In the next great strike in New York City, Hirshfield and all his associates, as always, will stand back of the club that is wielded against labor.

The religious training of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., causes him to shed the "crocodile tears" of sanctimonious sympathy, just as Hirshfield's political upbringing results in his spreading the soft soap of a politician in Somerset County. But this does not alter the fact that they are peas in the same capitalist pod. Let the workers vote a curse upon both their houses.

The Labor Frame-Up Again

This time it is the miners on trial at Wellsville, W. Va., charged with participation in the Cliftonville battle on July 17th, wherein a sheriff named Duvall lost his life. The first victim is John Kaminski, a 19-year-old boy, and the prosecution is resorting to all the time-worn trickery of the labor frame-up artists.

The odious Burns detectives are on the job and sending their stool pigeons into the jails with the imprisoned men, where they remain a few days and then sign affidavits to the effect that the imprisoned miners have admitted their guilt. The trial is proceeding in a district absolutely dominated by union-hating concerns.

In addition to the reactionary proclivities of the authorities and the dominant interests of the county, the worst forms of vice exist with the full knowledge of everyone. So flagrant was the bootlegging in the county that Duvall, the sheriff, at the time of his death, was under a number of indictments for malfeasance in office for receiving bribes from whiskey distillers and gamblers in the district. His deputies were recruited from this element and were responsible for the battle of Cliftonville.

Thus in West Virginia, as elsewhere in the United States, the workers are confronted with a combination of thugs, finks, scabs, spies, extorters, murderers, pickpockets and other criminal elements, all parading under the banners of capitalist "law and order."

HELLTOWN, Hades, Nov. [illegible], 1922.—Hades is all aglow! These are indeed hot days for us [illegible] citizens of this region. Our Socialist party has scored the greatest victory since its birth. The entire administration of Helluva State is a hundred per cent Socialist. Nicholas Romanoff, their candidate for governor, polled fifty times as many votes as his closest opponent. Bismarck was almost unanimously elected to Lieutenant Governorship. Among the others elected to office are the following men of universal repute:

Nero — Judge of Widows' and Orphans' Court;
Roosevelt — State Hot Air Engineer;
Kolchack — Secretary of Labor;
Rasputin — Commissioner of Women's Affairs.

This stupendous success of the Socialist Party is interpreted by leading economists here, as a protest against the present high cost of ice.

National Executive Committee of the S. P. extends thru the Bolcoms a cordial invitation to all socialists (Communists excluded) of the Earth and other planets to come here and help them form a true Socialist government in Hades. It is anticipated in political circles here, that the leaders of the American Socialist Party having heard of our tremendous victory will be only too glad to grasp this opportunity and go to Hell . . .

(The second message from Hades will be published in an early issue of the Bolcoms.)

Little Talks About Ourselves

(Personal, but not confidential)

In reply to the hundreds of thousands of letters that I receive daily from my fair readers inquiring about my private self, I have drawn up the following affidavit which I hope will satisfy the ladies' curiosity, save postage and lessen some of the work of my private secretary. Therefore, be it known that:

I. My name in full is Irving De Witt Talmadge, and not I Don't Work Talmadge.

II. Proud to say I'm single and don't ever intend to get married while conscious. Nevertheless, any young lady over ninety having a million dollars to burn will find me a good match.

III. My summer residence is up state in the Sing Sing Hotel while my winters I usually spend in Bryant Park.

IV. I am not Norma Talmadge's son, brother or father; yet, we are related. We have the same ancestors: Adam and Eve.

V. My total income from all my estates together with the honorarium for editing the Bolcoms amount to over ten thousand dollars per . . . . . haps.

VI. Have been educated at every jail in the country. Expect to take up a post-graduate course in Sing Sing as soon as Dean Burns will find room for me.

VII. Unfortunately am prohibited by the Health Department to mail any of my photographs. A remarkable portrait of myself can be found though, on exhibition at the world's greatest art gallery in the Tombs Building.

Sir: — Comrades Lenin, W. J. Burns, L. Trotzky, Harry Daugherty, etc., have sent in for tickets to the Workers Party Ball to be held on Thanksgiving Eve., Nov. 29, at The Lyceum, 3rd Ave. and 86th St. From what I gather tho, none will appear. They fear that if Trotzky and Lenin come first, Burns and Daugherty will be out of luck, or to put it better, out of a job. If vice versa, well you can figure it out yourself. At any rate there are only 10,000 tickets printed and I advise your readers to get them at once.

American Workers Join Labor Thruout World in Celebrating Fifth Anniversary of Russian Revolution

The November 7th Elections are over. Labor is slowly awakening to a realization of the fact that Gompers' "nonpartisan" policy has again betrayed it into the swamps of [illegible] and reaction. The Workers Party, in this new crisis, raises the call for united and independent working-class political action on the part of all workers. Read the statement on this page. Study it. Then join the forward march for the conquest of all power by the workers.

Great Masses Hear Story of Soviet Rule

Hundreds of thousands of workers in the United States, Tuesday, Nov. 7th, blended their cheers with those of labor thruout the world, in celebration of the Fifth Anniversary of Soviet Rule in the Russia of the workers and peasants.

Reports coming from all sections of the country, at press time, tell of overflow throngs everywhere at the hundreds of demonstrations held under the direction of the Workers Party.

In Soviet Russia Nikolai Lenin returns to his post of command, after a victorious struggle against death itself.

In Soviet Russia the Communist International has opened its sessions and is planning the world battle of labor.

All this was reflected in the great gatherings here, attended by new thousands of workers who have passed thru this year's great industrial wars in the coal mines, textile mills, and on the railroads.

The black depression left by the false leadership of labor in the congressional campaign was in part lifted by the tremendous encouragement growing out of the Soviet Anniversary celebrations that came on the same day with the elections.

In New York City overflow meetings were held in the streets outside the packed Lexington Opera House. The same story was repeated in Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Seattle, San Francisco and a hundred other spots from the At-

Special Labor Party Edition

THE WORKER will issue a special "Labor Party Edition," to be dated Saturday, Dec. 9th, for general distribution among workers everywhere. This edition will be ready for mass meetings to be held in all sections of the country, Dec. 10, to bring pressure to bear upon the Chicago Conference, Dec. 11, when the question of independent working class political action will be up for discussion and decision. This issue will carry articles stating the position of the Workers Party. Send all orders for bundles at 3½ cents a copy to THE WORKER, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Workers Party Announces Stand for Formation of Labor Party

The declaration of the Workers Party, taking a stand in favor of the formation of a Labor Party, is as follows:

The Workers Party and the Labor Party

The Workers Party favors the formation of a Labor Party—a working-class political party independent of and opposed to all capitalist political parties. Our Party will make every effort to hasten the formation of such a party and to effect the admittance of our Party into it.

A real Labor Party can be formed only by the Labor Unions. A political mass party in America is possible only with their support. The Socialist Party failed to become a mass Party because it was not rooted in the Labor Unions.

The initiative for the formation of a Labor Party must come from the Unions. For that reason we are against the caricature of a Labor Party which was proclaimed in New York by the Socialist Party and the local leaders of the Farmer-Labor Party, which, tho it may poll a substantial vote in the coming election cannot be the basis for permanent independent political action by Labor.

A Labor Party is an inevitable outcome of the [illegible] of the capitalist class which resulted from the economic crisis, make it necessary for the workers to defend themselves politically. The changes in the wages of the skilled and unskilled workers which have brought them nearer the same level and nearer the same conditions of life during and since the war, the taking away of the privilege of the "aristocracy" of Labor by the capitalist power, the assimilation of the foreign-born, the organization of the alien workers as militant trade unionists, have for the first time in the history of the American Labor Movement produced a uniformity of the working class. Such uniformity makes possible now, for the first time, the formation of a Labor Party embracing large masses of the American Working Class.

The notorious "Non-Partisan" policy of Gompers is bankrupt. This policy of "Rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies of labor" (within the capitalist parties) could not protect the working class from the abrogation of all labor laws. It could not protect the workers from being robbed of the right of free speech, free press and free assemblage, the right to organize, strike and picket, nor from the infamous fact of government by injunction. The maintainance of even a minimum of these rights require constant aggressive political struggles by the workers as a class.

Only the formation of a Labor Party independent of all capitalist parties will make the present struggles of the working class effective.

This Labor Party must have a class program. In all previous third parties, the agricultural and middle class elements have been the leaders, while the workers have been merely an appendage. This time the leadership must be in the hands of the workers, the farm laborers, and the working farmers who do not exploit labor.

The movement for the formation of a Labor Party is the expression of the awakening class consciousness of the American Workers, and the Labor Party itself will be the [illegible] Our Party is interested in becoming a section of the Labor Party so as not to be isolated from this big mass movement of the workers.

Our stand in favor of the Labor Party does not mean that we will give up the Workers Party. The Workers Party will continue to exist as an autonomous section of the Labor Party with the right to carry on its educational propaganda inside and outside of the Labor Party, while at the same time supporting the campaigns and other struggles of the Labor Party. We are convinced that the affiliation of the Workers Party to a Labor Party will aid the Workers Party to develop into a mass party. In fact only by raising the political activity of the Workers Party to the highest potentiality will we be able to work inside of the Labor Party.

The movement for amalgamation of the craft unions must be supplemented by the movement for independent political action by the workers. We must state clearly to the workers that altho amalgamation has become a matter of life and death to the trade union movement, nevertheless the amalgamation of unions will not suffice in the present fight in which the state power directed against the labor movement is now concentrated to an extremely high degree.

The slogan of the American Labor Movement must be, Amalgamation and a Labor Party.

We welcome the fact that a Labor conference will be held in Chicago on December 11th to consider the matter of independent political action of Labor. We know that many of those participating in the conference are still imbued with discredited notions of political bargaining and trading with the capitalist parties and as yet lack the clarity of vision and the determination necessary for the organization of a labor party; nevertheless, we hope and desire that the Big Campaign in Drive for Labor Party

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has declared itself in favor of the formation of a Labor Party by the labor unions in which will be included all the existing political organizations of the workers of this country.

The resolution endorsing the formation of a Labor Party declares,

"The military centralization of power of the Government of the United States which was brought about by the war, and the offensive of the capitalist class which resulted from the economic crisis, [illegible] make it possible to organize a Labor Party in the United States today, which will include the working masses of this country," the resolution states.

"The changes in the wages of the skilled and unskilled workers which have brought them nearer to the same level and nearer to the same conditions of life during and since the war, the taking of the privileges of the 'aristocracy of labor' by the capitalist power, the assimilation of the foreign born, the organization of the alien workers as militant trade unionists, have for the first time in the history of the American Labor Movement produced a uniformity of the working class. Such uniformity makes possible now, for the first time, the foundation of a Labor Party embracing large masses of the American Working Class."

Two Million Workers Endorse Move

Facts before the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party at the time the resolution was under consideration showed that two million American trade unionists are on record in favor of independent political action by the workers of this country.

At the Conference for Progressive Political Action at Chicago, last February of this year, eighteen international unions of the A. F. of L. together with the railroad unions were represented. Since the end of the war a whole series of State Federations of Labor have gone on record for an independent political party for labor. The United Mine Workers of America, with over a half million members, has endorsed the formation of a Labor Party. Recently the Printers' Convention came out in favor of the same action. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union has committed itself to the Labor Party.

New Conditions Produce Movement

The fact that over two million organized workers have endorsed the Workers Party Fraternal Delegates Attend Fourth Congress of Communist International

The Workers Party of America is represented at the Fourth Congress of the Communist International, which opened in Petrograd, Soviet Russia, Sunday, and is now under way in Moscow, by three fraternal delegates. These delegates are Alexander Trachtenberg, Max Bedacht and James Cartwright.

The Workers Party has from its organization carried on its work in harmony with the principles of the Communist International, but up to this time has had no direct contact with the International.

The sending of fraternal delegates to the Fourth Congress marks a step toward closer relations of the party with the leadership of the Communist International. Previous to the sending of these delegates the Workers Party was not definitely on record as to its international affiliation, altho its sympathies were well known.

The new relations established between the Communist International and the Workers Party will establish in the American Labor Movement an open political movement, giving fraternal support to the principles of the Communist International, something which has not existed in this country since the Communist Party was driven underground in 1919.

Scandinavian Socialist Federation Now Joins Forces with the Workers Party

By a referendum vote which closed Nov. 1, the United Scandinavian Socialist Federation has affiliated with the Workers Party. Beginning this month the Federation will function as a unit of the Workers Party.

The United Scandinavian Federation was organized when the Scandinavian Socialist Federation and the same federation of the Socialist Labor Party united some months ago. The united federation has [illegible] members.

The action of the Scandinavian Federations follows that of the Czecho-Slovak Federation which affiliated with the party a month ago. A referendum for the affiliation of the Slovak Federation, which is distinct from the Czecho-Slovak Federation, is now pending. There is also a movement in the French Socialist Federation for affiliation with the Workers Party.

These developments indicate the fact that the Workers Party is fulfilling its mission in combining all the revolutionary organizations in the United States in one unified centralized party of the workers.

Zinoviev Tells How Lenin Returns to His Post of Command

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV, [illegible] of the Communist International and Life-long friend of Lenin

[illegible] mass meeting of the work[illegible] unfailingly overwhelmed [illegible] concerning the state [illegible] of Comrade Lenin, and the [illegible] of the recovery of the man [illegible] the popular masses of the [illegible] country in the world have [illegible] confidence. [illegible] knows that Vladimir Illitch Lenin can work as do few men. But he understands also how to rest. His work is in general methodical and ordered even in times of highest tension. His rest is simple. Lenin, like most strong characters, loves nature. He spends almost all his periods of rest outdoors.

The comrades who have lived with Vladimir Illitch in the vast solitudes of Siberia have discovered in him an enthusiastic tourist. The most [illegible] daily labor did not prevent him from making excursions dozens of versts from his residence in Siberia.

In Switzerland, where Vladimir Illitch lived for a long time, there are few places which he did not visit either on foot or by bicycle. He is more familiar with the vicinity of Geneva than many a Swiss. Before the historical schism in the Russian Social-Democratic Party which divided it into menshevik and bolshevik factions, Lenin journeyed into the mountains to prepare his plan of work and action amid peaceful surroundings.

After the defeat of the Revolution of 1905 Vladimir Illitch spent several weeks in Kuokolla, a small Finnish railway station not far from Petrograd, where a number of the militant leaders of our party gathered around him. There, too, he took advantage of all his moments of leisure to enjoy the sea and Finnish [illegible].

Following that, he returned to Geneva, then went to Paris, and from there to Cracow. At Paris, he invited us more than once to pleasant outings in the vicinity.

In Galicia, Vladimir Illitch passed four months in the little village of [illegible]. There his custom was to take frequent walks in the neighboring mountains. He often [illegible] us to take long bicycle trips as far as Hungary. Lenin loved to take [illegible] comrades along with him on his trips. His greatest [illegible] was [illegible] mountain climbing. Thanks to him, daily baths taken in the cold mountain streams were enforced until the beginning of winter upon all members of that colony of Russian exiles. Kamenev, who often tried to avoid them, drew upon himself the worst rebukes. [illegible] In winter we would go skating in Cracow. After reading thru the newspapers from Petrograd we would debate questions of vital importance to our party while skating.

Upon his return to Russia after the Revolution of 1917, Vladimir Illitch availed himself of all opportunities to make excursions into the neighboring country of Petrograd. He was [illegible] at the time of the [illegible] 1917. The Central Committee, [illegible] the importance of the [illegible] went to fetch him [illegible]

Ruthenberg [illegible] in part as follows:

[illegible] Struggle for Power

"[illegible] the time came to celebrate [illegible] anniversary of the Russian [illegible] Revolution the world [illegible] still in the grip of the Imperialist [illegible] and the blight of that war made [illegible] sible for the workers to express their joy; when the second anniversary came World Capitalism had welded its iron ring around the Soviet Republic and the workes and peasants of Russia were in the midst of the struggle against counter-revolution; when the third anniversary came Soviet Russia had just passed thru the Polish war and was fighting against the counter-revolutionary army of Wrangel in the south; the fourth anniversary marked the coming of a more insidious enemy — famine and hunger were aboad in Russia and the workers and peasants were passing thru their darkest days.

"Today, in celebrating the fifth anniversary of the Proletarian Revolution we celebrate with a Soviet Russia that has conquered counter-revolution, that has broken the blockade, that has overcome famine, that has hurled all its enemies from the land and extended its border to those of old Russie, we celebrate a Soviet Russia that stands unconquerable, that no enemy can overcome, that will go forward until it realizes the full free Communist society which means peace, happiness and well-being for all the people of Russia and which will bring that peace and well-being to all people of the world."

Russians Fought Bravely

Ruthenberg then reviewed the struggles against exploitation and oppression which had been fought thru the ages, of which he said the Proletarian Revolution was the final phase and fruition, and continued:

"There is one aspect of the achievement of the Russian workers and peasants that will only be fully appreciated by the historian of the future.

"If we study the pages on which are told all the past history of our race we will not find thereon a story of such heroism as that which the Russian workers and peasants have manifested during these past five years.

"For nearly five years the whole capitalist world has thrown all its power against Soviet Russia. Counter-revolutionary general after general has hurled armies against the workers and peasants — Kolchak, Denikin, Yudenich, Wrangel—with the help of English war munitions with the help of American gold, have tried to destroy the government of the workers.

Fight With Same Spirit

"Soviet Russia, after three years of Imperialist war, which sapped all its resources still mobilized the resources to beat them back. It was not an easy thing to do. It was not an easy victory.

"Never have a people suffered and sacrificed as the Russian workers and peasants have suffered and sacrificed in order to win that victory. Counter-revolution was accompanied and followed by the blockade.

"And when counter-revolution was overcome, when the blockade was broken, then came famine to still more test the spirit of those splendid fighters who have held aloft the banner of the proletariat in Soviet Russia.

"The workes and peasants have triumphed over all these: they have fought and won, and in winning their victory they have written the most heroic pages of the world's history, pages which in the future will be read as telling the story of enthusiasm, courage, endurance to achieve a great victory for mankind such as the world has never seen before. Let us fight for the same cause in the same spirit and we, too will win our goal."

Other meetings with time, place and speakers, have been arranged as follows:

Sunday, Nov. 12, at 3 P. M. — Hartford, J. Louis Engdahl;
Boston, Mass., H. M. Wicks — Nov. 12;
Norwood, Mass., J. F. Nason, R. J. Zelms, and H. M. Wicks—Nov. 12;

[illegible] WORKERS SHOULD READ [illegible] COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible] A. E. Martin and Julia Poyntz.

The statement reads in part:

"Capitalism seeks vainly [illegible] new ways to extricate itself from the swamp in which it is sunk hopelessly, while Soviet Russia strengthens itself more and more despite the blockade and civil wars. The international solidarity of the working class has defeated the famine and now begins to reconstruct Russia. We call upon all workers of the world to persevere in the task already so well begun. Economic help for Russia means proletarian reconstruction.

"How often did you not tremble for Russia! It resisted all the tempests. It cannot perish. Its rehabilitation depends upon you. We ask the workers of the world to celebrate the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution by donating a day's wages for the benefit of reconstruction of Russia. This united effort to rebuild a proletarian country knows no difference in recognition of value—the penny and the dollar mean the same in terms of international solidarity. The donations in honor of the anniversary will be delivered to Russia in the form of machines and tools. The Russian machines and Russian tools are the tools and machines of the international working class.

Force and Violence

By ISRAEL AMTER

"I take a solemn oath that either the Government of the country must be given peacefully to the Fascisti or we will take it by force." Thus spoke Bennito Mussolini, leader of the Fascisti, and ex-socialist. "It will be the duty of the Fascisti to restore its (the Cabinet's) legality by themselves seizing the Government." These were the words of Bianchi, Secretary of the Fascisti.

The occasion was the first convention of the Fascisti of Italy, just held at Naples, which was attended by 50,000 civilian delegates and 40,000 FASCISTI ON "A WAR FOOTING." Only a short time before, the Fascisti had invaded Trent, which is part of the territory ceded to Italy by the Treaty of Versailles.

The Fascisti are a super-governmental body, which altho disavowed by the Government, nevertheless "more often than not, merely does the work that the Government dare not do", as the New York Times puts it. The work of the Fascisti is to kill off "dangerous" labor leaders, storm and burn clubs and labor headquarters and generally break up all labor organizations.

They have repeatedly challenged the Government, and even threatened to occupy Rome under a military dictatorship. "General elections must take place in December. If the Government will not do this, the Fascisti will do it." In these elections the Fascisti demand a majority of the seats, regardless of the outcome. Should they not obtain the Government "legally", they openly state that they will seize it by violence.

In 1917, the Russian Bolsheviki, supported by the soldiers, workers and peasants of Russia, overthrew, practically without bloodshed, the corrupt, degenerate Kerensky Government which succeeded to power upon the removal of the Romanoffs and set up a Government of the Workers and Peasants. For this they were charged with being usurpers and exponents of force and violence. Immediately they were repudiated by the "constitutionally" organized capitalist governments of the world and a military campaign launched against them on all fronts and within the frontiers with the aid of foreign gold, foreign munitions and supplies and foreign troops including American.

Slander condemnation distortion and lies were hurled at the Soviet Government it became a pariah among the nations. All the capitalist governments—and even the socialist-bourgeois Government of Germany—refused to deal with it and instituted a starvation blockade against the country, to supplement the military invasion for bringing Soviet Russia to submission.

The Ku Klux Klan, sections of the American Legion the American Defense Society etc. are organized bodies similar to the Fascisti of Italy, exercising a censorship over the United States and making physical attacks on individuals and organizations without governmental molestation. State and municipal authorities make raids and attacks without regard to law or constitution. Foster is run out of Colorado. 200 I. W. W. are deported from Portland Ore. Negroes are lynched in the South: conventions of trade unionists and militants are raided. A Daugherty injunction, which is practically a declaration of war on organized labor and is followed by the threat of the use of federal troops in case of widespread strikes—all of this happens in America—at times at the instigation of the authorities and very often under their direct orders.

Why does the Government of the United States not demand a cessation of this "unconstitutional" uncivilized activity on the part of the Fascisti and the abrogation of their program of force and violence? Why does the Government of the United States not refuse to deal with the Hungarian Government, which is almost as black as that of the Romanoffs was? Why did the Government of the United States not protest against the shooting down of miners in South Africa? Why does the Government of the United States not break off diplomatic relations with Poland, Esthonia and Finland, which have used the most brutal, repressive measures against the workers?

Why do the Fascisti gain the admiration of the "better classes" for their daring and strategy? Why is the Ku Klux Klan, which was supposed to have been stamped out by Attorney General Daugherty, allowed to continue its work openly, and even to participate in elections?

Why this condemnation of the Russian Soviet Government and this hatred of it?

"Given an army of its own, such as the Italian middle and upper classes have developed in the Fascisti, the bourgeoisie of any country need never fear the success of general strikes. By reason of superior leadership, superior freedom of action and resources, an armed bourgeoisie can always win." (New York Times.)

This is why the Fascisti are lauded and the Ku Klux Klan and American Legion are encouraged to follow their example. These organizations are for the suppression of the working class, for smashing working class organizations, breaking their strikes and killing off their leaders. Force and violence are their natural and necessary weapons.

"MORE OFTEN THAN NOT THEY MERELY DO WHAT THE GOVERNMENT DARE NOT DO."

"It is clear, therefore, that force and violence as such are not condemned in the United States. It depends entirely on who uses it and in whose interest it is employed.

In the hands of the Mingo County miners demanding their constitutional rights, in the hands of Ludlow Colo. miners who try to protect themselves from the greedy coal barons and the Colorado State militia, of the members of the I. W. W. at Centralia, Wash. who defended their hall against the ruffians of the American Legion; of the miners and their wives in Kansas who are robbed of their livelihood by an army of scabs and gunmen of miners in Herrin who are provoked to violent defense by attacks of the cowardly mine guards in the service of the coal operators of the Russian workers and peasants who put an end to a dissolute, rotten regime of the czarists and capitalists and established a Government of their own in the hands of the workers, for the promotion and protection of working class rights and interests, force and violence is a crime.

The actions of the Fascisti have provoked the workers of Italy to form a Workers Guard to protect themselves and their organizations. Milan, which has a workers government is forming a Red Guard to shield it from the lawless bands of the Fascisti. In Germany where the "Orgesch," "Sipo" and "Technical Aid" as the various "Black Hundred" organizations of the reactionaries are called, carry on their depradations the workers have their military groups for self-defense.

No doubt in the course of time, the organized labor movement of America will be driven, in sheerest self defense to the adoption of some similar measures.

Workers Party Calls on Labor to Stand Alone greater interests of the organized working class may be victorious in that conference and that it will lead to the formation of a Labor Party in opposition to the Gompers "Non-partisan policy."

We will work to achieve this end and to this end we must demand that our Party be represented at the Chicago conference.

We must mobilize all the forces of our Party to work effectively for the formation of a Labor Party by the labor unions.

We must start a wide spread campaign in all trade unions and working class organizations for the idea of a Labor Party and for the affiliation of such organizations with it.

PARTY OF AMERICA

formation of a Labor Party is not merely a chance circumstance, in the eyes of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party. Such a movement has its roots in the circumstances affecting the life of the workers of this country and the committee finds the explanation of this movement in the concentration of power at Washington and the open, unashamed use of that power against the organized workers by the employers.

The fact of the bankruptcy of Gompers "non-partisan" policy as shown by the Daugherty injunction against the shopmen is another factor in the big movement for the Labor Party.

Plan Wide-Spread Campaign

The Workers Party will organize a wide-spread campaign in favor of the Labor Party, but it will be a campaign of education only. In its declaration for the Labor Party the Central Executive Committee of the party says that "A real Labor Party can be formed only by the Labor Unions. A political mass party in America is possible only with their support."

This declaration will be the guide of the Workers Party in its campaign for the Labor Party. The unions must take the lead. They must organize the labor party. The work of the Workers Party will be to crystallize sentiment in favor of the Labor Party in those unions which are not already on record in favor of the Labor Party.

Toward this end the Workers Party will issue a pamphlet "Why a Labor Party?" in which the case for the formation of such a party will be presented. It will also issue leaflets for general distribution.

This campaign is to begin with the mobilization of the members of the Workers Party itself. This will be done thru a series of party meetings in all parts of the country, at which there will be a thoro discussion of the question so that every member of the party will understand the basis for the party's actions.

Big Move Forward

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party considers the movement toward a labor party the biggest development in the American Labor Movement in the last decade or two.

The crystallization of the sentiment for such a party in the organization of the Labor Party will be the greatest step toward the building of a class movement of labor to fight the capitalists in this country which has yet taken place.

It will be in fact the beginning of a real labor movement—a labor movement which will give to the workers of this country such power in shaping future economic and political developments as the workers of most European countries are already wielding.

Sutherland Starts His Court Record with an Attack on Communists

One of the first acts of the reactionary Associated Justice Sutherland, recently apointed to the United States Supreme Court bench by President Harding, was to deny the application of William Bross Lloyd and 17 other members of the former Communist Labor Party for a writ of error, which would bring to the supreme court for review their conviction in Illinois on the charge of conspiracy to violate the state sedition law of 1919.

These convictions grew out of the "Red Raids" of January, 1920. William S. Forrest, counsel for the convicted Communists, refused to state whether he would ask the full court, after it assembles Nov. 13, for permission to appeal the cases.

Echoes of Jewell's "Victory"

From all over the country come reports of the shameful betrayal of the shopmen in their recent heroic struggle against the combined forces of the railroad magnates and the United States government, the political tool of the capitalist class.

The aftermath of the strike has hit the shop strikers of Aurora, Illinois, particularly hard. There were 1,790 scabs imported as strike breakers, and all of them are still on the job, while the strikers are still walking the streets, facing a winter of privation and suffering for themselves and families, while Bert M. Jewell, and other labor fakirs who arranged the betrayal of the shop workers still draw their exhorbitant salaries and enjoy other benefits of capitalist society incident to their services as labor lieutenants of the capitalist class.

[illegible] 253. In the [illegible] but 215 were elected, while [illegible] of their 480 nominees.

These municipal elections were conducted by the workers under the banner of the Labor Party. While the Labor Party does not countenance officially the affiliation of the Communist Party, many local Communist branches co-operate with the local branches of the Labor Party. This resulted in many Communists being candidates on the Labor Party ticket. We will be compelled to wait on the mails for information as to whether any of these were elected.

The reports at hand indicate that there were but two parties in the field, the combined conservatives against the laborites, so that it may well be that, altho a fewer number of its candidates were elected, the Labor Party cast an increased vote.

Everywhere labor faced fusion on the part of its capitalist political enemies, especially in those boroughs where the labor councillors had given extensive aid to the unemployed. In Poplar, where the whole town council, headed by George Lansbury, editor of the Labor Herald, went to jail in the fight to help the jobless, the election struggle was especially bitter. But the workers still held the borough council of Poplar, along with those of Battersea, Bermondsey and Woolwich, other London industrial centers.

These borough elections in England marked a big step forward for British labor, because they resulted in drawing the line more clearly than ever between the struggle for property rights on the one hand, and the battle for the human rights of the workers on the other. This result was brought about in great measure thru energetic Communist participation.

The poor steel trust. Judge Gary confessed to the Federal Trade Commission that it was out of the question to talk about wage reductions, the wages of the steel slaves were down as far as they could be pushed now and keep anyone working in the industry. That is certainly an admission from Gary. And the Trade Commission loses an opportunity to follow in the footsteps of the Railroad Labor Board.

Having lost his throne the ex-Kaiser of Germany has taken unto himself a second wife. Perhaps this will help him get an increased pension from the "Socialist" government at Berlin.

Mr. Burns Misses "The Robots"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

There is one form of the Communist invasion of these shores that "the Great Detective," William J. Burns, and Attorney General Daugherty's department of justice have passed up altogether.

Far be it from us to act as informer, or to bring about a new "Red Raid," but we feel that no opportunity should be lost to let every worker know that it is worth while going to see "R. U. R." now being produced by the Theater Guild at the Garrick Theater, 65 W. 35th St., a few steps from Broadway.

I want to warn the Burn's sleuths in advance that all the characters speak perfect English, that no red flag is to be seen anywhere and that the word "Communism" is not uttered once during the entire performance.

But when "Rossum's Universal Robots," the Robots being workers finally break their chains thruout the world, and win all power thru a revolution, the fat, corpulent person in the seat behind me leaned over to his neighbor and whispered quite audibly, "That means we go to work." And there came to me the slogan of the Russian Revolution, "Work or Starve!"

This is being written on the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution, and I am reminded that this play, "Rossum's Universal Robots" would not have been possible but for the victory of the Russian workers and peasants, so closely does it follow the experiences of the Bolshevik struggle for power.

This play comes from the pen of Karel Capek, a name short enough to deceive the Burns' sleuths on the trail of a foreign accent. Capek is a Communist. He lives in Czecho-Slovakia, formerly Bohemia, one of the new nations established by the Versailles peace, but which boasts one of the world's strongest Communist organizations.

"Rossom's Universal Robots" is allegorical in style. We are taken to a mythical island and put down in the central office of a great plant for the manufacture of Robots according to the Rossum's formula. The Robots are workers without souls, without desires for the better things of life, they do not smile, cannot weep; they have only qualities that make of them efficient mechanical workmen. The demand for this type of workers, factory born, grows thruout the world; they make good soldiers as well as cogs in industry; they displace workers everywhere. Rossom's "Universal Robots" become as staple an article as Portland Universal Cement.

What is this Czecho-Slovakian Communist driving at? Isn't he just trying to picture what is actually taking place with the development of capitalism? Do we not see in the steel mills, down in the mines, in the great textile factories, everywhere in industry, the crushing of human beings into a mould that permits them only to develop into good and obedient wage slaves. Doesn't the kept press yell at them, the pulpit preach at them, the schools train them to become but a part of the industrial machine? The standing armies of modern militarism are merely aggregations of so many Robots taught to have no wills of their own, disciplined to obey only their commanding officers.

But Dr. Gall, head of the Physiological and Experimental Department of R. U. R., experimented too much with the Robots, in trying to improve upon Rossom's Formula. The result was that the Robots developed aspirations resulting in a class consciousness of their own. They did all the work of the world, carried all the burdens of humanity upon their shoulders, and so decided they should rule the world.

So, also under the growing oppression of developing capitalism the divine spark of protest among the massed workers continues to burn until it flames into open revolt, an old system dies, a new social system is born.

Capek doesn't enter into a discussion of violence versus democracy. When the Robots get ready they just take everything, wiping out all opposition offered them.

In the Robots' Revolution the formula for manufacturing Robots is destroyed, and the Robots face the inevitability of their own extinction thru their inability to manufacture more of their kind. The old social order is unable to help them. As Capek pictures one powerful scene after another upon the stage one can easily visualize capitalism thru the Paris Allies, at Genoa and the Hague, frantically trying to solve the "Russian Problem."

We are also reminded of the appeals of the Russian workers, coming to Lenin and asking him to run their factories, how to develop industry under the Soviets. And Lenin answers them that that is their task, that they must learn that for themselves.

So thru two lovers, a young Robot and a beautiful Robotess, the blooming into reality of the new social order is pictured in the developing emotions of workers who have learned to smile and weep, workers endowed with laughter and anger, conscious of their own power to aspire and create.

Capek's reasoning, cutting as sharply as the scalpel in the operating room, will not please the liberal mind that likes nothing so much as to indulge in aimless wanderings. It will prove annihilating to "Socialists" who profess a love for "peaceful evolution" out of capitalism.

In our opinion, Capek has been successful in putting the Communist Program for the rise of the world's workers to power upon the stage. Capek's play, first a reigning success in Prague, capital city of Czecho-Slovakia, is now being translated into a multitude of languages, even into the English. The pity is, however, that the high prices will prevent workers, even most radical workers, from seeing it and profiting by its message. While we congratulate the Theater Guild on this first production of its Fifth Season, let us hope that the workers themselves will soon have magnificent theaters of their own where they can offer such productions to great masses of their own class, instead of permitting their minds to be poisoned by the commercialized and brain-destroying movies, the best they can now afford.

being tracked. Kerenski, Tseretelli, the entire provisional government ordered a search for the dangerous "agent of Germany". Lenin will affirm that we are not at all exaggerating. Well! his desire to go for a walk, or to get together a fishing party sometimes proved stronger than all considerations of prudence.

During the five years of the existence of the Soviet regime, and particularly during the first four, Vladimir Illitch had no opportunity to take the least rest. Last summer serious illness forced him to give up his daily work. When I saw him, recently, however, I was surprised at the fact that Vladimir Illitch, "who reads almost no newspapers", was remarkably well-posted on events of any importance, and held opinions "of a man badly informed" so suited to the present need that the directing departments of our party soon agreed to them.

Vladimir Illitch is returning to activity after a long convalescence. The world will see how much the "first-hand" reports on the illness of Lenin spread broadcast by all our opponents, from the monarchists to the mensheviks and S R.'s were worth.

During the two weeks of 1918, when, seriously wounded he struggled against death Vladimir Illitch won more popularity than at any other time in his life. Whoever attends our mass meetings today, whoever has seen how the Russian working people, even non partisans, follow the illness and recovery of Lenin, will be deeply convinced that this crisis in health, and the invidious counter-revolutionary activities of which it has been the outcome, has only strengthened, more than was expected in 1918, the affection which the masses of Russia bear to Vladimir Illitch.

How pitiable appear today all the sordid, petty intrigues of Milioukov, of Tchernov, of Dan whose newspapers published on "the hopeless condition" of Lenin so many articles expressing malicious joy in each line!

How ridiculous these people appear again in publishing information on the "crisis in our party" and the "struggle for power" amongst us!

Milioukov has printed numerous articles in his Paris daily on the health of Lenin written as if they were medical diagnoses. Such chosen morsels from this collection deserve to be preserved in the literature of humor.

In its entirety, the campaign of false news and lies conducted by the bourgeois press at the time of the illness of Lenin summarizes all the campaigns of this kind directed against the power of the Soviets.

His convalescence over the captain returns to his post of command. The entire crew of the great ship from the first to the last man will retake courage. I do not exaggerate. Our entire party and with it the best elements of the Russian workers and peasants, will heartily cheer the return of Vladimir Illitch to his daily tasks. The class conscious workers of all countries will rejoice with us at this new defeat of our enemies.

admission, could not all be accomodated, making an overflow meeting necessary.

Among the speakers were Joseph Schlossberg secretary, and J. B. Salutsky, educational director. The gathering sent a cable to Russia, greeting the Russian workers who "dared to defy the armed world of enemies from within and without and fought to a successful conclusion the battle of the working class."

Italian Workers Greet Soviet Rule

Luigi Antonini, general secretary of the Italian Dress and Waist Makers' Union, Local 89, and a candidate of the Workers Party for congress in the recent elections, on behalf of the Italian workers in the garment industry, sent a cable to Nikolai Lenin, expressing their gratification on his recovery, and acclaiming the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

The message, which was adopted at a mass meeting of the Italian dress and waist makers, read as follows:

"Italian Dress Makers' Union rejoicing over your recovery, acclaim the Fifth Anniversary of the glorious Soviet Revolution, pledging unwavering support to Russian reconstruction and hailing the coming triumph of the world proletariat."

Local 89 is affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the heads of which, especially the president, Benjamin Schlesinger, conduct an unceasing attack on the Russian Soviet Government.

Don't Throw This Paper Away Pass It on to Your [illegible]

iners' Plan

[illegible] announcement has come from the headquarters of the United Mine Workers of America at Indianapolis to the effect that a special assessment has been levied upon the members of the organization for the purpose of creating a fund of at least $2,000,000.

Concurrent with this announcement comes the report from all coal fields that production is being speeded up to the limit and that next spring will again witness a surplus, so that the fight, so miserably compromised by Lewis & Co. when they betrayed the strike of the miners by signing the Cleveland agreement, may be continued with added fury after next April 1, therefore the $2,000,000 will be needed.

There are still 73,000 union miners on strike against non-union conditions in various fields thruout the jurisdiction and it is not thought likely that the officialdom of the United Mine Workers will risk another strike in the Spring, even tho the already miserable wages of the miners are cut.

It is pointed out by militants that the Cleveland pact binds, by implication, the union to accept agreements upon the basis of the fake "fact-finding committee" to be established by the miners and owners.

At the same time Lewis makes the announcement that he is the sole candidate in the field for president of the union during the next two years, and that the same is true of the vice-president, Phil Murray.

From the camp of the miners' officialdom also comes the report that Alexander Howatt has been finally eliminated from the organization and that his followers in the district have been deposed, which means that the henchmen of the Lewis machine have at last succeeded, with the co-operation of the infamous Governor Henry J. Allen, in temporarily crushing the militants of the Kansas District.

Tools of the Lewis machine are also busy stirring up dissension in the ranks of the Oklahoma miners in order to eliminate some enemies of the Lewis machine in that district.

Meanwhile the militants in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and scattered groups in many other places are preparing to resist any wage-cut.

Harlem Classes Growing

Work under auspices of English Harlem Branch of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League exceeding expectations.

The two classes originally organized by the English Harlem Branches of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League have grown to four and the membership of each has become so large that it has become necessary to rent a regular class room and to make a small charge to the students to cover the rent expenses.

So many people from all sections of the city are constantly coming to the classes, that the instructors are finding it difficult to maintain their schedules on account of the constant reviews that are necessitated by the coming of new students. It has been decided therefor, to make an additional general registration of new applicants after which no further members for the established classes will be accepted. The educational program is as follows

ELEMENTARY CLASS
Dr. Kessler, Instructor.
Time not yet definitely established.
Subjects—
1—Communist Manifesto.
2—Socialism, Utopian and Scientific—Engels.
3—Socialism—Science to Action—Radek.
4—A B C of Communism—Bucharin.
5—Communist Program—Bucharin.

INTERMEDIATE CLASSES
Monday Class—Julius Codkind, Instructor.
Sunday 4 P. M. Class—Fanny, Jacobs, Instructor.
Subjects—
1—Origin of the Family—Engels.
2—State and Revolution—Lenin.
3—Wage Labor and Capital—Marx.
4—Value, Price and Profit—Marx.

ADVANCED CLASS
Wednesday Nights.
Co-operative Study Class for advanced students only.
Subject—"Capital" by Marx.

It has been definitely decided to make the final registration for these classes on the coming Saturday evening, Nov. 11, at 7 to 7.30 P. M. Comrade Codkind will be at the Workmen's Circle Building, 143 E. 103 St., where applicants for membership in the classes will be registered and assigned to classes. Provided that there are sufficient applicants, a fifth class will be organized.

The charge to students in these classes will be forty cents per month payable monthly in advance. The funds divided will be used to pay rentals for the classes, and any surplus that may accrue will be used to buy literature or subscriptions to The Worker for the students.

For further information, call at the above time and place, or write J. Codkind, 133 E. 97 St., Educational Director of the English Harlem Branches of the Workers Party and Young Workers' League.

[illegible] Jean Longuet, traitor to the social revolution in France, is here championing their pet cause, the League of Nations.

Longuet, who spoke against the war in faint whispers and then, in the French chamber of deputies, voted the war credits with the rest of the jingoes, espoused the cause of the unhappy child of the Versailles Peace, at the opening meeting of his American tour at Boston.

The New York Call, Socialist daily, that is sponsoring Longuet's tour, reports him as having expressed the hope that "the United States will enter the League of Nations and give it an impetus in the right direction."

This Longuet, who flirted for a time with the world revolutionary movement, but who finally delivered himself into the fold of the worst social patriots in the French labor movement, tells us thru the "Socialist" Call that he has "considerable faith in the League of Nations."

Longuet's utterances, presumably endorsed by the "Socialist" Party, thru its official daily organ, shows how far the Hillquits and the Bergers have retreated during the last three years. In September, 1919, even after the "Socialist" Party had broken with its Communist elements, it went on record in the manifesto of that year declaring that:

> "To strengthen their precarious rule of violence and reaction the triumphant representatives of Allied capitalism have created an executive committee of their governments which they have the insolence to parade under the counterfeit label of a League of Nations.
> "The true aim of this alliance of capitalist powers is to safeguard their plunder, to bully and dominate the weak nations, to crush proletarian governments, and to thwart everywhere the movements of the working class.
> "The so-called League of Nations is the CAPITALIST BLACK INTERNATIONAL against the rise of the working class. It is the CONSCIOUS alliance of the capitalists of all nations against the workers of all nations."

The League of Nations is the same—the same Black International. The Longuets, Hillquits and Bergers, when they turned their backs upon the Communist International—the Red International—fell into its lap. In the days of the armistice, four years ago, Longuet was supposed to be "radical." But when the Committee for the Third International was organized within the French Socialist Party, Longuet, as editor of La Populaire, turned his guns against Souvarine, Loriot and other French Communists, at the same time, however, proclaiming his hatred of the Second International. When the crisis came at the Tours Congress of the French Socialist Party, with the organization of the French Communist Party, Longuet joined the rest of the traitors of the Second International, Thomas, Renaudel and Co., and there he remains today a helpless prisoner of social patriotism, without influence.

It is this specimen of vacillation and outspoken agent of the "Black International" that the "Socialist" Party is presenting to the workers of America, who threw the League of Nations into the scrap heap, so far as this country was concerned, in the 1920 elections.

Longuet and the "Socialist" Party display their complete depravity by trying to make capital out of the fact that Longuet is a grandson of Karl Marx. Why make Karl Marx any more responsible for the treason of his grandson than he is for the desertion of Socialism by the "Socialist" Parties of this and other countries?

Impeach Daugherty!

By JAY LOVESTONE

"Civil War in America," "America saved from Reds." These are gems culled from the recent campaign speeches of Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty.

The other day the Attorney General took a trip to Ohio to deliver a blow in behalf of Harding's still-born "normalcy."

Daugherty rid himself of a vicious tirade against the workers of America. He was particularly bitter against the shopmen. He roundly condemned the rail strikers as law-breakers and vociferously boasted of his great services in behalf of law and order.

Mr. Daugherty is particularly sure that he must convince the people of his being an eternally vigilant guardian of the law.

We Communists are not blind to the fact that the capitalist system of law is a skillfully codified set of rules and regulations for the maintenance of private property and the perpetuation of wage-slavery.

We agree with Marx that no genuine social reforms are ever realized thru the weakness of the strong. It is only the strength of the weak that can bring into life such changes.

We do not delude ourselves as to the probability of an overdose of advantages that the capitalist law can bring to the workers.

But it makes us chuckle with glee to see the agents of the capitalists pose as saviors of the law at a time when, compelled by new conditions, they violate the very laws they have themselves made. Hypocrisy is truly the badge of the lickspittles of oppression and tyranny. By this standard Daugherty is at once the most brazen lickspittle of the capitalists and the most loud-mouthed "defender" of the law. The record of this sworn enemy of the workers affords proof aplenty that he himself is one of the worst violators of the law.

Were it not for the fact that the whole judiciary is an outright capitalist class institution this apostle of "law and order" would long ago have been lodged behind prison bars.

Attorney General—Lawbreaker!

Harding's choice of Daugherty as Attorney General raised a storm of protest in many quarters. His name had long been odious to many people because of the infamous cheap role he played in securing a pardon for Morse, at the price of $25,000. But, Harding, like Gompers, believes in the policy of "reward your friends and punish your enemies". Daugherty was an old loyal friend of Gamaliel, the First Chief of our land. So the storm of protest blew over and Daugherty became Guardian-Angel of the Peace—Attorney General.

As Attorney General, Daugherty is dutybound to defend our homes and hearths from law-breakers. His record to-date is one of criminal neglect of duty. More than that. It is one of the most gross and flagrant violations of the law on his own part. All Daugherty has done to-date is to prosecute and hound workmen.

His attack on the communists and his dastardly manoeuvre to have the State of Michigan hand out 760 years in jail to peaceful workingmen was a prelude to and a deliberately planned part of the infamous injunction against the railway workers.

As defender of the peace, Daugherty protected private gunmen engaged in terrorizing workmen who were struggling for the right to earn a living.

His agents, in co-operation with the notorious Illinois Manufacturers' Association, have launched an energetic campaign to murder 434 workers charged with the crime of self-defense against the coal operators' thugs and gunmen at Herrin.

Mr. Daugherty's department has, in the past year, cost well over the $12,000,000 annually allotted to it by the Federal budget. Because of his feverish anti-strike activity, he was compelled to seek another half million from Congress.

Mr. Daugherty himself has boasted that he has spent over $1,500,000 in foisting the damnable injunction on the American workers and in delivering the last death stab to the constitution. He has, according to his own plea before his Judge Wilkerson, organized an army of over 5,000 marshals, armed men, to safeguard the hides of the scabs and the profits of Atterbury, DeWitt Cuyler, Loree and Company.

These 5,000 armed men were the special army put at the disposal of the Monarchs of industry and finance by the Republican United States Government, thru the imperial ukase of the Attorney General.

Mr. Daugherty used his office openly to oppress the workers and help the capitalists. As the shopmen's strike became more effective and cut in heavily on the dividends Daugherty proclaimed his now—famous Open Scab Shop Oath—his injunction.

Crimes of Daugherty

Representative Keller, of Minnesota, has introduced a bill for the impeachment of Daugherty on the following grounds:

1) He has failed to prosecute cases under the Anti-Trust Law against New York Contractors and material men.

2) He has failed to prosecute notorious violators of the Volstead Act.

3) He has called upon a Federal Judge to grant an injunction in utter violation of the Constitution, in that it aims at a complete denial of the rights of free speech, press, and assembly.

These are most serious charges. If Mr. Daugherty has never been worthy of anything before in his life he is now worthy of a speedy impeachment.

He is worthy of more than that. He is worthy of a speedy and severe jail sentence.

The impeachment proceedings have been delayed for political reasons by the Republicans. They did not dare to air the charges against their Mr. Daugherty on the eve of Election. This event might open the eyes of many workers. More Congressional and Senatorial Heads would go. And things are not moving too smoothly for the Government that now sits in power at Washington, D. C.

11,000 Railway Unions Plan an Amalgamation Conference in Chicago

(By Federated Press)

ST. PAUL.—11,000 local railway unions have been sent a call to attend a national railroad amalgamation conference to be held in Chicago, Dec. 9. The call is issued by O. H. Wangerin, secretary, National Committee to Amalgamate the 16 Standard Railroad Organizations, with headquarters at 411 Dakota Bldg., 54 W. 7th St., St. Paul.

The call reads in part: "The time has now come when the railroad men of the United States and Canada are ready to amalgamate the many unions into one mighty organization. On July 1, 1922, our committee submitted for approval of the 11,000 railroad local unions the method of amalgamation since famous as the Minnesota plan. This plan, with its departmentalized form, gives the fullest protection to the separate craft interests, yet at the same time unites the entire body of railroad workers in unbreakable solidarity. The response in favor of the plan has been overwhelming.

"The shopmen's strike, with its tragic spectacle of nine unions working while seven are striking, makes amalgamation more imperative than ever. To stop secessionism and devise a method of consolidating all unions as speedy as possible is the big problem for this conference to solve. The conference will also deal constructively with the closely related problems of amalgamation and strengthening the metal trades generally.

"All local unions or local and system federations are entitled to two delegates each. Bring credentials with you and notify the secretary (Wangerin) in advance. All lodges are requested to contribute $2 to the conference fund.

"Brothers, beware of dual unionism."

British Workers Protest American Persecutions

The Party Conference of the Communist Party of Great Britain, held during the month of October, adopted the following resolution on the prosecution of radicals by the American government:

"The Conference of the Communist Party of Great Britain expresses its sympathy with the members of the Workers Party, the Industrial Workers of the World and the Trade Union Educational League in the United States, now under arrest or serving prison sentences for their loyalty to the interests of the working class.

"The Communist Party also protests against the attempt now being made to send Nicola Sacco and Bartholomeo Vanzetti to the electric chair on a trumped-up charge of murder, but in reality as a punishment for their activities in organizing Italian workers in the United States, and against the continued imprisonment of Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings, who were convicted of murder on perjured testimony as a result of their excellent work in the trade union movement on the Pacific Coast.

"The party calls upon the organized workers of Great Britain to arrange demonstrations against the capitalist barbarities now being perpetrated in darkest America.

"The Conference instructs its secretary to forward a copy of the resolution to the President of the United States and the American Ambassador in London."

Pittsburgh Coal Miners Work to Rid Their Union Elections of Whiskey and Money

The organization of the Allegheny Valley in spite of Van Bitner and his desperate efforts to check organization was an achievement worthy of note. The miners of this valley are among the most progressive in Western Pennsylvania.

Yet John H. Walker insists that his defeat the last time he ran for International President was the direct result of the corrupt manipulations of the votes in the Allegheny Valley locals. The report of the vote seemed to show that new locals in this valley voted their entire strength for John P. White. This seems to contradict the claim that these miners are progressive.

HONEST MINERS PASSIVE

The reason such a condition was possible in the Allegheny Valley at the time of Walker's defeat was the same reason that district progressives have been beaten in the past — indifference of the honest voters. The honest English speaking miners were so disgusted with the corrupt tactics of the booze hounds that they made no organized effort to stop the corruption. All they did was to talk about it. This year the progressive miners group is not going to just talk about this corruption, it is going to stop it!

Foreign Miners in the Dark

In the past most of the foreign born miners were left in the dark. Practically none of them were ever nominated for any office, and the result was that they had little interest in the election. They didn't understand what the issues were. They felt that two gangs of Americans were fighting with each other for office.

So when they came up to vote the corrupt American official of the local would hand the foreign born worker a ballot and tell him to vote it that way. Many times such a member would vote as he was told because no one else took any interest in them. This year it is different.

Every radical and language element is fairly represented on the ticket and it is the duty of the active spirits in the various language groups to immediately get busy with their fellows and points the fact that this ticket is an organized movement standing on a definite platform and that it is moving forward with consistent, uniform step presenting a united front to the corrupt reactionaries who have bribed and corrupted for many, many years.

Examples of Corruption

Innumerable examples could be offered of the most brazen corruption in this district. In this article we will offer only the case of some Alleghany Valley locals in the election of 1920.

At Brackenridge and Natrona where two mines were organized many years ago, the Company refused to recognize the union. The miners who had joined the union therefore drifted away to seek employment elsewhere. Notwithstanding this fact the district tellers continued to count the full number of votes for the slated candidates that were organized in the beginning.

On making an investigation of the voting done at these two mines in 1920 the radicals found 26 men receiving strike benefits, showing that this number was all that were entitled to vote at that election. Yet when the returns were made over four hundred votes were counted for the machine slate favored in 1920.

Courage Necessary for Clean-up

If the miners of this district imagine they are going to win this fight without any effort they are badly mistaken. While the overwhelming majority of the miners in this district are progressive and if all their votes are counted they will win 5 to 1.

But they need not expect men who systematically peddled booze in previous elections to corrupt the voters and brazenly stole votes and padded the returns not by hundreds but by thousands are going to quietly submit to being removed from power.

The officials of District 5 have a Kingdom beside which the smaller kingdoms of ancient times were insignificant. If, as claimed in a court suit now pending, they accomplished the vanishing trick with almost $3,000,000 in the defense fund, they are men with no small amount of influence and power.

When certain progressives made a tour of investigation after the election of 1920 they were told numerous tales of officers of the District who peddled whiskey in a touring car on election day and gave it to tellers of local unions in the Allegheny Valley. They also met men who admitted they were given money to corrupt the miners who voted in the election.

If the "gang" would go this far in 1920 how much further will they go this year when they are desperately fighting against certain defeat. If there is any possible way for them to bribe or steal their way thru there is nothing they will not do.

We undoubtedly have the votes, but the big fight now is to see they are honestly counted and every honest miner in District 5 must decide now to make sacrifices now. Whiskey and money must be driven out of this election campaign in every form and an honest election guaranteed the members of District 5.

Evicted Coal Miners Picket Home of Boss in New York City

By HARRY GODFREY

NEW YORK.—Fifth Avenue—Upper Fifth Avenue—the home of wealth and splendor, of idleness and fashion, of marble halls and marble hearts—has been having just a glimpse into one of the sources of its opulence. Upper Fifth Avenue, from its sumptuously draped windows, from its high-powered automobiles and from its cold eyes, for two hours looked upon two coal miners from the coal fields of Somerset county, Pennsylvania. Upper Fifth Avenue, too, gazed upon a placard the miners carried, reading:

JUST LOOKING At E. J. Berwind's House
We, his Evicted Miners,
Have to Live in Tents,
And Chicken Coops

SUBWAY COAL DIGGERS
SIX MONTHS ON STRIKE

E. J. Berwind, who lives at the corner of Fifth Avenue and East Sixty-fourth Street, is the president of the Berwind-White Coal Co. The miners who walked back and forth in front of his palatial home, Joseph Kopchek and Michael Fazeks, have been in the employ of the Berwind-White Co. for more than ten years, and never have seen their boss. If per chance they thought they might get a glimpse of him entering or leaving his home, they were disappointed. Berwind encountered, at his downtown office a day or two before, some of the pickets who were stationed there, and he sputtered and stalked angrily away.

[illegible], Cal.—The prosecution in the trial of the five com[illegible] here has offered in testimony [illegible] of William Z. Foster's "Syn[illegible]," bearing marks which show [illegible] it was introduced formerly in [illegible] trial of Anita Whitney.

It is claimed by the police that this book was seized at Communist Labor party headquarters in 1919.

Police Inspector William E. Kyle, who led the raid in which the defendants were arrested in 1919, was asked by James F. Dolsen, one of the defendants, if it was not true that he had received two copies of this book from the United States Steel corporation, and had planted one at Communist Labor headquarters and one in Miss Whitney's home. The judge refused to allow the question to be answered.

"We found a large part of the literature we seized not in violation of the law," Kyle stated, "but we took it so as to mess the organization up. We wanted to force them to cease their propaganda."

The defense forced Kyle to acknowledge that files of The World, Socialist party weekly, dating back to 1911, had been seized without search warrants and burned without court order; also that most of the magazines and papers seized were at the time openly on sale on newsstands in Oakland and San Francisco, and that one of them, The Liberator, the Oakland police had been enjoined by court order from interfering with.

John G. Taylor, formerly state secretary, Socialist party, later state secretary, Communist Labor party, and twice Socialist candidate for mayor of Oakland, who is out on parole from San Quentin on a criminal syndicalism charge, was subponead by the prosecution, but made a boomerang witness.

The district attorney tried to force him to state that the communists had endorsed the I. W. W., but he vehemently denied this, stating that the national convention had several times refused such an indorsement, while praising the heroic anti-war stand of the organization.

Meanwhile the stoolpigeons, Coutts and Dimond, and the state's new find — first used in Sacramento — W. E. Townsend, are waiting in court, ready to testify if the prosecution can find someone to connect the communists with I. W. W. So far no one has been found to perjure himself in this regard, and so the familiar tales of burnt haystacks and copper nails, recited in all former criminal syndicalism trials, have not been heard.

Taylor's testimony further showed that the raid had been marked by great brutality, one man being pushed thru a glass door. The judge refused to allow Dolsen to bring out the fact that there was blood on the floor after the raid but a good deal of evidence of the police cruelty got across.

[illegible] by Mrs. Margaret Sanger

By H. M. WICKS

[illegible] Marxists who have been thinking all these years [illegible] society are inherent in the system of capitalist [illegible] Mrs. Margaret Sanger, apostle of Malthus and [illegible]

Mrs. Sanger has just returned from Japan, where she discussed the question of "population" before sundry audiences of the yellow race. At her first appearance since returning which occurred the other night in Carnegie Hall, New York City, she blandly informed her audience that the situation in Japan today is similar to that of Germany in 1910.

The German nation and not the clash of imperialistic interests was responsible for the world war for the simple reason that it did not practice birth control. It foolishly permitted its population to expand to such an extent that war was inevitable. Witness the profound historical insight of the birth control champion:

"* * * With a limited territory the high birth rate in Germany increased the density of the population so that there arose a cry for expansion, for new colonies, for new territories, for 'a place in the sun.' And national expansion, based on potential overpopulation, breeds militarism and the machinery of war."

Japan, according to Mrs. Sanger, is in the same condition today that Germany was before the late war and, altho Japan may send her surplus population out of the country the problem would not be solved for "the disease would break out in some other part of the world."

The birth control advocates, in their zeal to propagate their doctrine, resort to the methods of religionists and proclaim that their particular nostrum will cure all the ills of mankind. To a very limited extent and among certain strata of society the advocacy of birth control is of value, but to attempt to explain militarism and war as the result of failure to embrace the doctrines of Malthus is to indulge in absurdities.

If anyone imagines that the "first step toward international peace has been taken because birth control has now triumphantly girdled the globe," the facts of history will soon dispel that notion and whoever fails to perceive that war clouds are lowering over the Island of Japan is totally incompetent to discuss the question of war and peace.

How It Would Work In Japan

Tho half the population of Japan were to emigrate and spread over the face of the earth and tho every woman in that nation practiced birth control for the next decade it would not change the development of industry in that nation, it would not change the course of history and the inevitable clash of imperialistic interests over the partitioning of China; in fact it would not alter anything except the birth rate and the population.

An understanding of the fundamental law of population would be of immense value to the birth controllers and prevent them making fools of themselves when they venture beyond their narrow specialty. Marxists have long known that every system of wealth production has its own laws of population, which are compatible with the demands of its productive forces, and we know that if the Japanese followed the advice of the birth controllers and depopulated their nation, they would be forced to offer inducements to foreigners to enter the country and help carry on production, just as the capitalist class of the United States offered inducements to Europeans to emigrate to this country to satisfy the demands of an industry that increased a hundred-fold faster than human beings could reproduce.

As a horrible example of a nation ignoring birth control Mrs. Sanger pointed out China and declared that "If anyone wishes to refute the Malthusian theory it is worth while, before wasting his time, to take a trip to China, for there the population question with all the horrors that Malthus depicted is vindicated."

She then depicts the squalor poverty and ignorance of the Chinese, but she says nothing of the pillaging of certain sections of China by British, French, Japanese and to some extent Americans which deprives the teeming millions of that nation of their means of subsistence.

Confuting Parson Malthus

Evidently Mrs. Sanger imagines the Malthusian doctrine stands on a rock as impregnable as Marxism for she has admonished us not to waste our time trying to refute the Malthusian theory.

The doctrine of Malthus, briefly stated, is that the population increases much faster than the means of subsistence increases. Malthus lived at the close of the Eighteenth century and his principal work bears the date of 1789. He was a Christian minister of the Protestant faith who lived in England and he entered the ranks of writers on economic subjects with his "Essay on Population." This work is considered the bible of the birth controllers, their "scientific foundation" upon which is reared their whole theory of overpopulation. Altho the work attained a certain vogue among the ill-informed at the time of its publication it was completely riddled by the leading economists of the day. Many years later it was stigmatized by Karl Marx (Capital, Vol. 1, footnote beginning p. 675) as "nothing more than a schoolboyish, superficial plagiary of DeFoe, Sir James Steuart, Townsend, Franklin, Wallace, etc., and does not contain a single sentence thought out by himself."

Thus the modern birth controllers, while boasting of their knowledge of history, economics and ethics, hark back to the ignorant pulpit-pounder, Malthus, unaware of the fact that what is now accepted as a profound scientific discovery in certain uneducated circles has been exploded for over a hundred years.

Malthus, himself, as charged by Marx, pilfered the works of his superiors and perverted them to conform to his pre-conceived errors, but his plagiarism has been further distorted by the soft-headed females and fat-headed males who conduct the birth control propaganda in the United States.

Depleting the Population

If the depletion of the population of the world were the solution for all our ills it seems that we ought now to be near a Malthusian paradise, considering the fact that the war destroyed millions upon millions of the young manhood of the world, thereby effectively reducing the population of this generation and future generations for some decades to come. Instead of solving our problems, those problems are intensified. If there were nothing else in all history to refute the Doctrine of Malthus it seems to us this fact alone would be sufficient.

As to the contention that the population increases faster than the productive forces and that the world is over-populated, we only need consider the fact that scientific agriculturists have estimated that the state of Texas alone, properly cultivated, can produce enough food for the entire population of the world.

When we consider the fact that millions of former productive workers were taken from their places of toil and placed in the armies of the world for a period of five years, that other millions were engaged in the manufacture of war materials and that sufficient food and clothing was produced by a minority of the workers for all humanity we have another crushing refutation of the Malthusian theory.

As a matter of fact, birth control will never solve anything except the problem of an individual mother who desires to limit the number of her offspring, and for Mrs. Sanger to endeavor to magnify her sentimentalism for disseminating this information among women into an elaborate system affecting world politics and to try to vindicate her position by an appeal to the thoroly discredited and almost forgotten Malthus will never gain her the serious consideration of informed people.

Announce New Book on Struggles of American Labor with Oppressors

The Research Bureau of the Workers Party announces that it has in preparation a book that will deal with the role of the government in the recent industrial crisis. Jay Lovestone is the author.

The facts, figures and documents gathered in this book are the most recent and authoritative. We have here an arraignment of the capitalist government and its exposure based on the utterances and deeds of the various departments of our government and the records and activities of the capitalist organizations in the recent textile, mine, and railway strikes.

DO YOU WANT TO KNOW?

1. How the heroic miners stopped the attacks of the capitalists?
2. How the Government solidly lined up with the railroad and textile magnates to smash the unions and crush the workers?
3. How the brave textile workers, against overwhelming odds, stopped the capitalist offensive?
4. How Congress is forging new chains for the workers?
5. How the Department of Justice is persecuting innocent workingmen and sheltering powerful criminals who robbed the country of hundreds of millions of dollars while the workers were dying on the battlefields of France?
6. How the Employers' Associations organized the country wide Open Shop Movement to smash the unions and slash wages?
7. How the United States Government plays the role of the greatest strikebreaking agency on earth?
8. How a small clique of bankers controls the mines, railway, and steel industry of the country?
9. How the American workers have suffered from the tyranny of "Government by Injunction"?
10. How the Government has aided and abetted the capitalists in violating their own laws when their profits demanded it?
11. How the press aids the capitalists thru misinformation and villification?
12. How the Supreme Court serves as the bulwark of reaction?
13. How the workers can overcome their enemy — the capitalist class — and drive on to victory?

Then make sure to get this book. It is an arsenal of the most up-to-date and authentic facts, figures, and documents on the political and economic situation in America and the struggles of the workers arising therefrom.

In the World of Books

By MAX SCHACHTMAN

One of the many counts on which we indict the capitalist system of production and distribution is its appalling inefficiency; and Stuart Chase in his brochure "The Challenge of Waste" (The League for Industrial Democracy) very ably marshals all the evidence for the prosecution. Capitalism's inability to satisfy the most elemental needs of the vast mass of working people was never so manifest as it is today. The conclusions drawn by Chase are, from the nature of the pamphlet, weak, but it is well worth ten cents to all propagandists, if only for the incontestable facts it presents.

FOSTER'S NEW BOOK

"The Bankruptcy of the American Labor Movement"

By WM. Z. FOSTER

The one book American workers have been waiting for. A critical analysis of the tactics and policies of every wing of organized labor. Foster shows up the reactionary tendencies of the leaders of labor. He outlines the new methods which must be followed in order that Labor may climb out of the morass of contradictions in which it finds itself to-day, and assume it rightful place of power in government and industry.

[illegible] the Crazy [illegible] and the [illegible] Bottomley

NOTE.—We have been fortunate in securing several articles from one of the most prominent of British writers, R. W. Postgate. These articles bear on the present political situation in England. The present campaign will not witness the antics of two of British capitalism's kept editors, Bottomley and Northcliffe; one in prison, the other gone to his grave. In the accompanying article Postgate tells of the stagnation in the ranks of British labor, due to the betrayal of its leadership, and then shows the kind of spokesmen that the imperialists and capitalists place in control of their press. Postgate writes as follows:

By R. W. POSTGATE

Prominent Contributor to British Communist Press

The main events in the history of this last month or so in England have, as usual, concerned the capitalist class.

There is no labor history in England now. The defeat of the English working-class, which has begun by Sir Thomas' (Secretary of British Railwaymen's Union) action on "Black Friday," (collapse of Triple Alliance) has not stimulated trade unionists to renewed activity.

They have not reorganized their antiquated machinery or expelled their discredited leaders. They have simply fallen back into apathy.

Here and there, as in the building trades, we find a knot of more enlightened leaders proposing some long overdue reconstruction.

The rank and file acquiesces; but it acquiesces equally easily in the attacks made by Mr. J. H. Thomas upon his opponents and in his defense of his conduct on Black Friday. Union officials act more and more in the void; the rank and file barely listens or attends to them, and the membership of all unions falls each month.

We are forced, therefore, to be content to chronicle the internal history of the capitalist world. The most remarkable event here has been the disappearance of the two political leaders, who, next to Sir Lloyd George, counted for the most in Great Britain—Lord Northcliffe and Sir Horatio Bottomley—the disappearance of these two men is bound to have an enormous effect on British polities; we have indeed scarcely had time to readjust our views of the political prospects.

Let us take Northcliffe first. Northcliffe's original name was Alfred Harmsworth. He started in a very small way. His first success was with a paper called Answers, and the only thing that made it a success was a puzzle which a man brought in one day, and which Harmsworth saw had money in it. This first victory set the type for all the rest of the Harmsworth successes. Harmsworth never did anything himself. He could tell a competent man at once, and in his early days he had a good eye for what was popular. Cheap encyclopedias, eating wholewheat bread, growing sweet peas—such were the subjects in which he rightly imagined the British working and middle classes could be interested. For the carrying out of these plans and the administration of his primals as soon as he had money, he had a simple plan. He would fix on someone who was obviously competent; ask him what he wanted, to leave his present post; offer him much more than he asked; and then leave him absolutely to himself. Harmsworth never, in his best days, interfered with his employes. He left them to do his work for him, knowing that he had not the brains himself.

By these means he made himself far and away the most powerful newspaper owner in the country. The figures given of the newspapers he owned vary, but it is certain that they were more than 400. Of these, the Daily Mail had at his death a daily circulation approaching two million copies. The Times, another of his papers, probably has more real influence than any other single journal in the world. He not only made himself a Viscount but made the Government give titles to every member of his numerous family, and even to his mere friends. His power as a politician was shown during the war, when he decided that Sir Asquith must go, and Lloyd George take his place. It was no intrigue of Sir Lloyd George that won that victory; it was the Northcliffe Press. Lloyd George is a Northcliffe-made man. Part of his power came from the fact that he represented no interest but himself, and the general interest of capitalism. The Berrys, for example, another great newspaper group, represent coal and steel and their papers are run in those interests. The Manchester Guardian is the magnificent mouthpiece of the cotton trade. Northcliffe was never tied to any particular interest.

Now he is dead. It is an open secret that before his death he was not entirely in his right mind. He had for some time been suspected of megalomania. He used to collect Napoleonic relics and sign his letters with a great flourishing "N". He gave up his old practice of letting the competent man do his work; interfered in internal affairs of his newspapers; suddenly promoted raw recruits to positions of highest authority. "You never know when he will make the office-boy editor" was the complaint of a Carmelite House man. Finally, the Times articles on Germany, and certain details of his private behavior—about which there are the most phantastic stories—left no room for doubt, and he was put under treatment.

What cannot be settled ever is how long he was mad. The man who was read and followed by millions of Englishmen of the working and middle classes, whose policy was for years the main directing policy of Great Britain, was—not to put too fine a point upon it—crazy. Not, I suppose, since the last days of the Spanish empire has there been anything parallel to it.

The other great press magnate who has passed from among us is Sir Horatio Bottomley—not dead but gone to quod, as the poet says. Bottomley, whose reputation was rather on the decline, has been sentenced to prison for seven years for defrauding small investors of some millions of dollars.

Bottomley, who himself encouraged the story that he was the bastard of Charles Bradlaugh, was known before 1914 only as a shady financier who had just escaped jail. The war gave him his chance. He publicly announced that his soul had been "purged of dross", that he was convinced that Jesus Christ was on the side of the English, and that henceforth he would lead a clean life. We have his secretary's word for it that he did keep off women—for about a week. (Wine he never could do without.) After this reformation, he became in all seriousness the moral teacher of the British worker and middle-class man. He comforted those who lost relatives in the war, telling them that Heaven had told him that their cause was just and the dead were waiting for them above. "I heard a voice from Heaven, saying to me: Write!" he began his article. ("That's the slush to give them" he added privately to his secretary.) Lacking the most elementary political sense he based his articles solely on the extremest optimism, the most violent jingoism, and the pettiest German-baiting. Personalities interested him—his articles and notes proved Ramsay MacDonald a bastard, suggested "a sound spanking" for a girl who fed German prisoners, demanded that conscientious objectors be tortured—but policy was the thing he knew nothing of. Nevertheless, his meetings were crowded. At high rates, he packed recruiting halls, and got men for the army. Men and women wept at his peroration on "the gentle figure of the Prince of Peace, pointing the way to Bethlehem", which he would deliver when his fee was $500, or at the peroration delivered for an even higher figure, which consisted of a poem of his own called "Why Is the Red Blood Flowing?" to the tune of "After the Ball Is Over." Northcliffe's following was uncertain. He never knew how far his readers would support him, or how many read his papers in spite of his policy. Bottomley never had those doubts. The 3,000,000 readers of John Bull were his devoted followers. They were a Bottomley army. They would always do as he told them, mob the people whom he indicated.

Therefore, when Bottomley entered Parliament after the war he had not only an organized group behind him, but large sympathies within the ranks of the ordinary M. Ps. The 1919 session was called "Bottomley's Parliament". The Observer, perhaps the best informed Conservative Sunday paper, noted only a year ago that the Premiership lay between Bottomley and Lloyd George.

The end came suddenly. Bottomley, it is known, had offended a number of financial interests. His own position was far from secure. Somebody helped a man called Bigland, a discarded tool of his, to defend a libel suit Bottomley was silly enough to bring.

Once given the chance, Bigland recited in Court a few of the meaner thefts and frauds that Bottomley had been guilty of. No defense was possible; some millions of money had vanished, nearly all the property of poor men. His secretary estimated the grand total of Bottomley's life thefts at sixty million dollars—all gone. The Public Prosecutor took up the case. Bottomley fought it to the last, but it is over now.

And so "Good Bye!" to our two greatest political leaders—one mad, one a sneak-thief. The British governing class has had some great leaders. The Earl of Chatham, Charles James Fox, the Duke of Wellington, Disraeli, Sir Gladstone—this not despicable line ends in Alfred Harmsworth and Horatio Bottomley. British Capitalism is very near its end; it is ripe to stinking.

Aid for Reconstruction Work in Russia Planned by New York Conference

Organizations in New York and vicinity which are interested in providing relief for Soviet Russia and assistance in the work of reconstruction now going on in the workers' republic have been asked to send two delegates each to a conference called by the Local New York Friends of Soviet Russia. The conference is scheduled to take place at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning, Nov. 12, Room 16 Labor Temple 243 East 84th Street.

The work of the conference, as outlined by the appeal for delegates, will consist of three main divisions. First, there will be given and discussed a report of the Local's activities during the past year. Second, a complete report will be given of the Berlin Conference and international working class efforts to aid Russia. Third, plans will be laid for another year of intense work for Russia.

The response to the appeal to date, the Local office states, has been gratifying. Among those who have already sent in credentials are A. F. of L. unions, independent labor groups, workmen's circles and others. In its invitation of organization the New York F. S. R. calls attention to the pressing needs of immediate help in Russia.

The undertaking for which plans must be made by the forthcom[illegible] conference includes the nation-[illegible] campaign for the adoption of Ru[illegible] orphans. It is reported that al[illegible] a million boys and girls in Russia and the Ukraine are homeless and doomed to extermination unless [illegible] arrives from abroad. "Adoption" of tens of thousands of these, thru providing funds for their upkeep in Children's Homes, will be aimed at by the New York branch of the national organization.

The conference will also take up the question of effective co-operation with the Russian-American Industrial Corporation in its sale of stock. This fits in with the plans for aid in the Soviet Republic's efforts to rehabilitate and modernize industry. The corporation was started by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. An arrangement has been entered into between the corporation and the Friends of Soviet Russia for co-operation.

The conference will also take up ways and means of converting Russian handicraft products which have arrived here into funds for the support of destitute children.

The Local and national organizations urge all those who have the question of Russian relief and reconstruction at heart to take steps to assure representation at the conference. Individuals are urged to bring the matter up at their union branch or lodge meetings.

DRAWING IN THE YOUNG

In the Freeman, Nov. 1st, is an interesting letter on the Bulgarian Communist movement by R. H. Markham.

He describes a parade of young communists coming "down the street, behind a vociferously jubilant drum and gorgeous red flag of imposing dimensions... They are all marching with the precision and vehemence of trained soldiers. A young official of some kind, also scarlet clad, keeps them in perfect formation. Every one is smiling and happy. They are all as erect as royal guards and as eager as spirited horses. The drum beats, the flag waves and down the street they go, triumphantly singing.... They utterly disregard or even hate their national flag. That's awful, isn't it?... But it's vehemently liberating, emancipating and exhilarating... When you find a group of twenty, thirty, or fifty thousand men who are willing before all the world, before policemen and soldiers, ministers and kings, to trample and to spread to the win[illegible] a great red international emble[illegible] then you have a stupendous fo[illegible] which is able to rend empires and draw a great many people into i[illegible]

NOTE:—Workers thruout the United States who hope for the creation of a real Labor Party in this country will be interested in the accompanying report of the recent congress of the British Communist Party, by Walter Stoecker, fraternal delegate from the German Communist Party. It may be stated, this congress was held in London, in a public meeting hall, without the interference of the local police or the King's royal sleuths. Our report is as follows:

By WALTER STOECKER

LONDON.—As the German Communist Party represents the direct continuation of the revolutionary movement which existed before the war under the leadership of Rosa Luxemburg, so the present Communist Party of Great Britain is also the successor of the old Marxist "Social Democratic Party", which later became the "British Socialist Party" and which before the war was the only political organization which consciously and clearly represented the principles of Socialism.

This old Marxist Party however, did not understand how to come into actual and close connections with the working class and to obtain a strong influence over the proletariat.

The annual conference of the English Communists which took place in October in London, has shown that the present Communist Party has taken over the good Marxist theories of the old Social Democratic Party —supplemented in the meanwhile by the experiences of the Russian Revolution—while it does not intend to fall into the tactical errors which for decades hindered the former party from becoming a real proletarian mass party.

It is true that this same tendency which consciously limits itself to purely theoretical propaganda, also existed in the present Communist Party.

It shows itself in the anti-parliamentary tendency and in the great aversion to working with, and in the Labor Party.

And the young Communist Party which came into existence in August 1920 thru the fusion of the British Socialist Party with the Socialist Labor Party, particularly strong in Scotland, and several smaller groups, had a great deal of work during the first two years to overcome these tendencies.

The conference which has just ended has shown that this work is practically completed, and that the Party has succeeded in convincing almost all these "left elements"—and they were for the most part good and excellent revolutionary comrades—of the necessity of a real Marxist revolutionary policy.

The decisions of the present conference clearly show that the present tactics will not only be theoretically recognized but will be carried out in practice by the overwhelming majority of the Party. The Party is thereby more practically consolidated and has obtained a firm basis from which it can successfully work. Thus the first preliminary condition has been established in England for the creation of a Communist mass movement.

That there is in the meanwhile a certain amount of resistance in the Party is shown by the debate on the tactics of the United Front which has particular difficulties in England on account of the peculiar conditions and relationships of the labor movement in that country.

In England there are no political party organizations such as we have on the Continent. The working class is politically organized in the Labor Party which in its composition consists of trade union organizations and of the smaller Independent Labor Party, the Fabian Society and individual members. The Labor Party which originally was an altogether vague product has developed more and more into the political organization of the English working class which is today almost entirely in the hands of the reformist leaders.

If the Communist Party wishes to gain influence over the proletarian masses, then it must work within the Labor Party. There were long disputes in the Communist Party over the question of affiliation to the Labor Party but the opposition to this affiliation is becoming continually weaker.

At the present London Conference it came to an exhaustive debate upon this question. Happily however, the decision of the Central Committee which newly affirmed the tactics of affiliation, was finally adopted by 80 votes against 10. The opposition thereupon expressly and independently declared their acquiescence in this decision and promised to direct their political work to this end. The arguments of these comrades were very weak and mostly of a purely sentimental character. The decisive paragraph of the accepted resolution states:

(5) The Communist Party claiming to be the vanguard of the fighting working class can only fulfill its mission by constant contact with the workers organizations and constant participation in the workers' struggle against the forces of capitalism.

To this end it declares its readiness to support the Labor Party in every act of resistance against capitalist oppression; proclaims its solidarity with the whole working class organized in that body, and demands its right to affiliate as an integral part of the working class movement whilst maintaining at the same time its own independent and revolutionary point of view based on the unassailable principles of Communism.

While the Communists work in the local organizations of the Labor Party, often with great success for the aims of Communism, the Labor Party as a whole has up till now refused the affiliation of the Communist Party as it did at its last conference in Edinburgh.

As the leaders of the Labor Party refused this affiliation of the Communists for the reason (among others) that they ran their own candidates at parliamentary elections in opposition to the Labor Party, the Central Committee decided, as an expression of its earnest desire to link up with the organized labor movement, to withdraw all candidates who are standing in opposition to official candidates of the Labor Party.

This decision which is to be traced to the peculiar English electoral system, naturally means a great sacrifice for our comrades, so much the more as many candidates of the Labor Party are scarcely to be distinguished from liberal capitalists.

As they have however succeeded in a whole series of local organizations of the Labor Party in getting Communists adopted as official candidates of the Labor Party this decision does not imply any shutting out of the Communists from the new Parliament or the Municipal bodies.

Notwithstanding the opposition at the conference against this decision was fairly strong. The decision was finally approved by 55 votes against 25.

Gentlemen:

Your circular letter of Sept. 29 has come to my attention by reproduction in the Boston Transcript of Oct. 21. I enclose my check for $10 to aid in defraying the legal expenses incident to the defense in the new Red Raid cases.

Yours truly,
Wilder H. Haines

In the "Reds in America" feature of the Boston Transcript, issue of Oct 21st, the following paragraph occurs dealing with the activities of the Labor Defense Council.

"One of the first things done by the organization was the appointment of a publicity department to flood the daily newspapers of the country with propaganda for the movement. Press releases were issued and sent broadcast. MUCH OF THE MATERIAL THUS FURNISHED WAS PRINTED IN REPUTABLE NEWSPAPERS IGNORANT OF THE FACT THAT THEY WERE PRINTING APPEALS FOR A MOVEMENT AIMED AT THE OVERTHROW OF THE COUNTRY." (Emphasis ours.)

The management of the Boston Transcript, from which the Brahmans of the Back Bay District get their mental nourishment, would never believe that even their own beloved and respected journal had fallen into the same "trap" of which they so vehemently warn others.

The photographic copies of a letter and check displayed above are proof, however, that even the Boston Transcript and its staff of enthusiastic red-baiters are doing their bit for the "movement" they denounce so bitterly.

The Labor Defense Council has nothing but a feeling of kindness for the decrepit Transcript and its one regret is that its circulation is not larger. It has not only graciously given the Labor Defense Council access to all its readers and increased the normal circulation of its literature by several thousand but it is also paying a good price to a needy Harvard professor, one R. M. Whitney, for material that the Labor Defense Council and all other organizations mentioned in the series would gladly furnish free of charge.

In assisting the impecunious employees of "Fair Harvard" the Transcript is doing much for culture in America and in giving publicity to the Michigan case it is aiding the victims of this culture.

Could anything be fairer?

Y. W. L. to Celebrate Liebknecht Day, Jan. 21

January 21 has been set aside by the International Committee of the Young Communist League for the celebration of Liebknecht Day, as a day for celebration and commemoration of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxembourg.

The Young Workers' League will arrange nation wide demonstrations on that day. All branches of the Workers Party are requested to cooperate in making these demonstrations a success.

Branches of the party are requested by the C. E. C. not to arrange any other meetings on Liebknecht Day. In those localities where there are no branches of the Young Workers' League the party branches should arrange the celebrations and should use them to make a special appeal to the youth and for the upbuilding of the Young Workers' League.

The National Office of the Young Workers' League is preparing folders, buttons and a special edition of the "Young Worker" for use in connection with the celebration. Orders for these materials should be sent to the Young Workers' League, 2517 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Educational Drive in Bronx for Open Forum and "THE WORKER"

The first big house-to-house campaign for The Worker and The Workers' Hall Open Forum will take place Nov. 24-25. Back issues of The Worker and a neat folder announcing English, Jewish and Russian lectures will be distributed. This drive will continue on Dec. 2-3.

The lectures in English will take place Sunday Evenings, starting Dec. 3rd, with Comrade Salvatore Iarossi, organizer, Italian Workers' Federation as speaker on "The Fascisti and The Italian Situation." The English Branch, Workers Party, and Young Workers' League conduct their lectures jointly. The Jewish and Russian lectures and dates will be announced later.

This drive will mean that every worker in The Bronx will get the lecture announcements and a copy of The Worker. To do this every member of Workers Party and The Young Workers' League of The Bronx should get on the job not only "to go to the masses," but have the masses come to us!"

The Young Worker for November is now out and is, as usual, filled with excellent articles written by some of the keenest young men in the young communist movement of America. Put a copy, which may be obtained from any member of the Young Workers League, into the hands of a young worker of your acquaintance and you will be surprised at the result. The price of a single copy is ten cent, and a subscription for a year is $1. Address the Young Workers League, 2517 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, Ill.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

Just [illegible] magnificent work accomplished by Sidney Hillman, president of [illegible] Workers' Republic re-establish its clothing industry, we find The New York Times, Nov. 5, giving Gompers' hired man, Benjamin Schlesinger, the president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, nearly two columns of space to attack Russian Soviet Rule.

Schlesinger's latest convulsion is timely as counter-revolutionary propaganda, and quite as useful to the enemies of the Russian workers and peasants as Abraham Cahan's attack on the Friends of Soviet Russia.

When Gompers sent the head of the International Ladies' Garment Workers to Great Britain, as fraternal delegate to the British Trade Union Congress, he did not give him instructions to investigate conditions in Soviet Russia for himself.

Instead we find that Schlesinger gathered a lot of anti-Bolshevik gossip in England to the effect that British labor had been "sobered by its contemplation of four years of Bolshevist rule." This information was forthcoming from such anti-Communists and Bolshevik haters as Henderson, Thomas, Bondfield, Brailsford and Snowden, who claim that they favor recognition of the Soviet Government by imperialist England because that will mean the downfall of the Communists. Schlesinger joins in this hope.

The rest of Schlesinger's hemorrhage is a mere rehash of the usual anti-Soviet propaganda that would never find space in such a kept sheet as The Times, if it did not fit into the anti-labor policy of this capitalist organ.

In the meantime Hillman is at work in Moscow, having secured a subscription for the Russian American Industrial Corporation from Lenin himself, with the promise, "You can rely on me to help you." In addition to the clothing concession granted the R. A. I. C., Hillman is also developing relations between the Industrial Bank at Moscow, and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Bank in Chicago.

An increasing number of American workers are taking their stand with Hillman, who goes to Soviet Russia to help as a representative of labor, not as a thieving capitalist.

Schlesinger remains at home to give comfort in this country to these same thieving capitalists, but in doing so he is helping to open the eyes of new masses of workers to the crimes committed by reactionary labor officials.

Labor is marching forward with Hillman, in increased numbers. These same hosts of toilers are turning their backs on Schlesinger and Gompers, and betrayers of their kind that have the stamp of Judas upon them so big that no thinking and honest worker can fail to see it.

Perhaps the French government will now give a little more consideration to the demands for the release of Andre Marty, elected for the third time to the Paris Municipal Council. Marty was chief mechanic in the French navy when he led the mutiny of French sailors in the Black Sea, refusing to fire on Odessa in the undeclared war on Soviet Russia. All of the mutineers have been released with the exception of Marty.

A [illegible]

The [illegible] than it was a year ago, according to a statement just issued by Edo Fimmen, secretary of the Amsterdam International. This reactionary champion of the Versailles Peace and the League of Nations, blames the Communists of France and the Fascisti of Italy for the deplorable conditions in these two countries.

Like Gompers, Lewis, Jewell and other reactionary leaders in this country, with whom we are familiar, the leader of the Amsterdam International blames every [illegible] his own organization for the deplorable condition of the world labor movement. Since the notorious alliance of the Amsterdam International and the ruling class of France, England and Italy is known to all the world, it is not difficult for intelligent members of the working class to determine who are responsible for the splits in the labor movement.

The Communists are today and have always been in favor of a united front of the working class against the capitalist class, but unity has so far been effectively blocked by Fimmen and his cohorts. At the same time the Amsterdammers were using all their power to prevent a united front with the Red Trade Union International, they were collaborating with the capitalist class. It is they who are responsible for the deplorable condition of the working class in Europe and the world today, and they cannot shift the record of their guilt upon the shoulders of the Communists.

Now that the Fascisti is the present government of Italy the Amsterdammers will conclude alliances with Mussolini and his cabinet and play the part of informers upon their Communist enemies just as Sam Gompers and his crew in the United States furnish the police of our own capitalist government with information upon which to base arrests of militants.

GOMPERS SECRET MISSION

Samuel Gompers president of the American Federation of Labor, is reported to have visited Cincinnati recently for a conference with state and local labor officials on "the general problems confronting organized labor." The nature of his mission is a profound secret.

When we consider the fact that the Ohio State Federation of Labor only recently went on record in favor of amalgamation it is not difficult to imagine the nature of Gompers' visit. Altho the American Federation of Labor has used its influence at various times to bring about amalgamation of kindred trades in an industry it is quite likely that his henchmen of the type of Matthew Woll and George L. Berry becoming alarmed at the spread of the amalgamation idea have insisted that Gompers make use of his power to stem the rising tide of revolt that threatens to engulf the craft union movement and create an effective fighting force for American labor.

Instead of discussing general problems confronting the organized labor movement we venture to assert that Gompers was interested in the problems confronting his own personal machine and endeavoring to persuade the officials of the Ohio State Federation of Labor to sabotage the amalgamation movement in the interest of harmony in the official family of the A. F. of L.

NONPARTISAN CHAOS

Some genius for truth telling ought to be put on the job gathering the facts as to the chaos created everywhere by Gompers' nonpartisan policy so ably abetted by the stand of the Chicago Conference last winter. [illegible]

Gompers' American Federation of Labor committee supported Senator Atlee Pomerene for re-election in Ohio while the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers urged support for his opponent, Simon D. Fess.

In the 12th New York Congressional District the New York Central Trades and Labor Council endorsed both the Tammany Hall candidate, Samuel Dickstein, and Meyer London, the combination Farmer-Labor and Socialist candidate, giving preference to the former. The Workers Party candidate, Ben Gitlow, in this district, was thrown off the ballot because he had been sent to prison on account of his loyalty to labor.

Several instances of this brand of nonpartisanship have already been pointed out in these columns. They should all be registered as labor's crimes against itself. Perhaps by the time the labor conference gathers in Chicago in December, labor will have decided to quit attacking itself and to turn its guns against the common enemy, capitalism. Let those guns be directed by working class political action independent of and opposed to all capitalist political parties.

The E[illegible] Is Over

[illegible] this issue of THE WORKER reaches its readers [illegible] of the 1922 congressional elections will have become [illegible] page in American labor's history.

[illegible] will take many workers a long time to learn its lessons. [illegible] should be studied by labor everywhere in preparation [illegible] Political Conference to be held in Chicago, Dec. 11th.

[illegible] is one thing that labor didn't have in this election, [illegible] that labor ought to have had, and that is a Labor [illegible] all the political forces of the toiling men and women [illegible] for independent political action by the workers [illegible] the capitalist parties.

[illegible] have just been reading the pitiful efforts of The Labor [Record] of Youngstown, Ohio, to swallow the decision of the Legis[lative] Committee of the American Federation of Labor demand[ing] support for Representative John G. Cooper, of Youngstown, [Re]publican candidate for re-election.

Organized labor opposed the re-election of Cooper in 1920. [illegible] had taken a stand against the strike of the steel workers, [as] old party politicians always do during times of industrial strife. Cooper denounced the effort to secure better conditions for the [st]eel workers. He was on the side of Judge Gary and Wall Street. [He] upheld the 12-hour day and steel trust autocracy.

Yet Gompers' committee endorsed him for re-election, again showing that the charges, that Gompers used every possible means to stab the steel strike in the back, were not without some foundation.

Thus The Labor Record falls in line with Gompers' endorsement and urges support of this labor foe, "regardless of recommendation of the central bodies in the district."

The Labor Record claims to be published under the ownership and direction of The United Labor Congress of Mahoning County, and the Trumbull County Central Labor Union and affiliated locals, that attacked Cooper and supported the democratic candidate, William Kilpatrick, of Warren.

It seems, therefore, that there was one thing Gompers' "reward and punish" policy forgot to accomplish during the recent campaign. That was to appoint a lunacy commission to secure even bug-house unity among those wobbling labor unions, labor editors and labor officials that still maintained their capitalist political affiliations.

Such chaos and stupidity should convict itself. The Workers Party shows the way out in the declaration to the December Conference at Chicago that is published on another page. Let every worker that reads it, bring it up for instant and decisive approval in his labor union.

Trade between Soviet Russia and Great Britain is growing. No fewer than 15 ships with cargoes from the Workers' Republic—mostly of lumber, flax and skins—arrived in British ports during the first week in October. Among them were four Soviet-owned ships. No wonder American merchants are getting restless.

Turks Indulge in After-thought

Rafet Pasha, the new governor of Constantinople, after a conference with the Allied generals last Saturday afternoon, by way of an after-thought, told the spokesmen of imperialism about him:

"I must inform your Excellencies that since noon the Constantinople Government no longer exists, and I have assumed the governorship."

Thus did the "Angora Bolsheviki," as they are known to the reactionaries in Constantinople, carry out a bloodless revolution and take over the capital city of the Turks.

It is significant that the deposed Sultan immediately turned to the Allied police for "protection," and that the Allied Extraordinary Council has refused the Angora demand for the Allied military evacuation of Constantinople. Events in the immediate future will tell whether the Paris Allies will support Turkish White Guard elements in a civil war against the Angora government as they did in Soviet Russia. This is not at all improbable

The overthrow of the Sultan, the repudiation of debts contracted during the past two years by the old Turkish government and the practical repudiation of the Mudania armistice will no doubt result immediately in complete unity between the Versailles imperialists.

The governments at Paris and London, where they differed in support of the Angora Turks and the Greeks, will now get together against the common danger that, in the words of Rifaat Bey, Court Chamberlain to the late Sultan, has placed Turkey "on [th]e road to sovietization."

The Associated Press declares that monarchist and reactionary circles in Turkey interpret this most recent step of the Angora Government as "a triumph for the Bolshevist policy in the Near East and a prelude to the sovietization of Turkey."

It is difficult to predict just how far Turkey will go toward Soviet Rule, but it has had an example set for it already by the Soviet Republics on its borders in Armenia, Azerbaidjan and Georgia.

When the French supported the cause of Mustapha Kemal Pasha and the Angora Government, the Paris diplomats no doubt thought they had hitched the revolutionary aspirations of the Turkish peasants to the yoke of French imperialism intriguing against English imperialism and plotting against the rise of Soviet Power in the Near East. But recent events would indicate that there are just as clever diplomats in the Angora Government of the Turkish workers and peasants, as there are in the imperialist government that sits in the Quai d'Orsay at Paris.

Workers thruout the world will watch the developments centering about Constantinople during the next few days and weeks with intense interest.

Bakers' Union, No. 24, San Francisco, Calif., has voted $100 for the defense of the workers arrested in the Michigan raids. There was not a dissenting vote. That ought to put a lot of labor unions on their mettle.

Just as the reformist "Socialists" [illegible] the back of the revolutionary action of the Italian workers, in the [illegible] of the metal industry, in the summer of 1920, making possible the present dictatorship of the Fascisti, so the labor reactionaries in this country are helping to create a military rule under a mob of American "black shirts".

We have already pointed out the part played by Samuel Gompers, at the American Legion gathering in New Orleans, in seeking a "soldier-labor alliance".

George L. Berry, international president of the printing pressmen, one of the swivel chair patriots of the war, and consequently an enthusiastic legionnaire, gives voice to some ideas that Gompers is probably too cowardly to utter. Berry urges war upon the militants among the workers in this country, under cover of an "Anti-Russian Alliance of the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion and the Associations of Commerce", in language as follows:

> "We are too free in America to permit expressions by individuals of favor of the principles of the soviet government. Such expression is scientific propaganda for undermining the government of this country. It is carried on with the intention of stirring up revolution. In a republic revolution is the only method within the hands of the soviets for taking over the reins of government.
> "The American Legion has proved itself a powerful factor in upsetting the designs of the revolutionists. It is the logical antidote. Working hand in hand with the Federation of Labor it can more readily accomplish these ends. Both are evolutionary organizations and therefore opposed to revolution. The end could be even more easily reached by the entrance into the alliance of the associations of commerce. Such a combination would bring together the toilers, the property owners and the men who fought for the protection of the rights of the one and the holdings of the other class."

These views were given wide circulation by the kept press of New Orleans during the Legion's convention. They appeared parallel with the much exploited phrase of the late judge, Landis, "Paste him one for me". This is the Landis who sent the members of the Industrial Workers of the World behind the bars at Leavenworth, Kan., prison, where many of them still remain today. He said:

> "If an American Legionnaire runs across anyone running for a political office who had not been active in the world war, then such a legionnaire should paste him one for me."

In the Gompers-Berry-Landis outfit, therefore, we find a combination of capitalist and labor-betraying interests that makes an American Fascisti possibe.

If the workers of the United States do not want their ranks broken as they have been in Italy, under the blows of the King's government, the Fascisti terror and the traitorship of their own reactionary leaders, then let them wipe out this tendency now manifesting itself in their midst. There should be no more place in the labor movement for men of the type of Gompers and Berry, than there is for a Rockefeller or a Judge Gary.

The Minnesota Daily Star, published at Minneapolis, the organ of the wage workers and farmers of the northwest, while it believes that what is transpiring in Italy is "potentially possible in every country in the world today", and feels that "the process of secret and open mob organization has advanced to an alarming extent in America", nevertheless, it does not see the part played by renegade officials in this movement.

The Star claims to be "devoted to the freedom of the press and liberty of public opinion" and feels that there is an opportunity, for a legal majority, exercising these rights, to win power and democratize industry in this country. It declares that:

"It is significant that these mob movements (the fascisti) all support reactionary principles. It is fair to assume that they represent the early preparation of the American plutocracy to resist and overthrow representative government should the legal majority attempt by constitutional means to democratize the financial and industrial systems it controls."

The Star sees the danger. The Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly was among the first to come to the aid of the victims of the Michigan raids. The railroad workers of Minnesota are leading the drive for amalgamation of the railway unions. Thus there is hope that when the real struggle comes, as come it must, that Minnnesota labor will fight for its own against the American Fascisti, whether in the disguise of the American Legion, the Ku Klux Klan, or some other counter-revolutionary organization, or a combination of all of them.

Let all American labor prepare for the struggle against any attempt at Fascisti rule in this country.

Bonar Law Explains

When Bonar Law accepted the premiership of the conservatives in England he was forced to give an excuse for the break with the liberals. Why separate the forces of these twin capitalist parties? Prime Minister Bonar Law gave the answer at Leeds, England, the other day. He argued frankly that the coalition was broken up to help confuse the workers.

The same arguments that Mr. Bonar Law advances for the maintenance of a conservative and liberal party in England, may also be put forward for the existence of two capitalist parties in this country. He says:

"To have tried to keep a party representing everything opposed to labor (the coalition) against the Labor Party and nothing else, was the one way of making the Labor Party strong, because it would have been the only alternative government. But the working men who are not Socialists now have their choice of two parties, instead of having to choose between one and those supposed to represent them."

This is only another way of saying that either one of the two capitalist parties is sufficiently strong to defeat the workers' political party. No coalition is necessary at present.

Lloyd George, however, is forced to advance the hypocrisies of liberalism and charges that his policies are opposed to tory reaction as well as Socialist revolution. When the British politicians speak of "Socialism" they do not mean the compromises of Henderson, Clynes, MacDonald and the rest whom they do not fear. It is the gradual upsurge from the masses threatening the capitalist state that holds them aghast, and drives them to appeal for strength against Socialism and its attack upon capital. But Lloyd George comforts himself with the feeling that the workers will not be able to muster sufficient support this year for their "semi-revolutionary program".

Yet it is under the Lloyd George (coalition) government, as he confessess himself, that the producers have been driven into unemployment—millions of them, that the workers have been forced to use up their savings, that the unemployment funds of the labor unions have been dried up, that even the little trinkets and other valuables in the homes of the toilers have gone into the pawnshops.

The greatest achievement the workers of Great Britain can accomplish in the approaching elections is to show sufficient strength to drive the capitalist parties, the conservatives and liberals, into a coalition that will hold the capitalist forces together until they are swept away forever. That would be an achievement worthy of emulation by labor in this country.

Five Years Old

Success and Failure

Big business is successful. Little business is a failure. The rich corporations are showing increased earnings, more collosal profits. The small merchant or factory-owner is going into the bankruptcy courts. All this can be shown almost daily on the financial pages of the kept press.

There were only 1,600 business failures in the United States during the month of October. We say "only," because this is 200 less than for October, 1921, altho, with this exception, it was the greatest number of bankrupts registered for any October during the last 12 years.

The failures must have all been among the "little fellows," among what is commonly known as the "cockroach" businessmen.

All those 1,600 bankrupts could muster only $18,966,295 in assets, an average of about $10,000—the price of a good automobile, such as the war-rich buy off-hand.

The liabilities of these 1,600 failures totalled only $36,941,884, or an average of little more than $20,000, the price of an ordinary cottage in the country.

What a spectacle these regiments of bankrupts present; small business men, upholders of capitalism, who thought they could compete in the struggle with the giant trusts.

How puny the struggles of this middle-class business element seems when we compare with its pitiful failures the masses of wealth distributed by the Standard Oil Co. Against the liabilities of $36,941,884 of these 1,600 bankrupts let us place the surplus distributed this fall by a few tentacles of the oil octopus as follows: Standard Oil of New Jersey, $592,021,632; Standard Oil of Indiana, $143,222,710; Prairie Oil and Gas Co., $86,796,851; Ohio Oil Co., $72,806,626; Vacuum Oil Co., $62,664,918; Atlantic Refining Co., $61,709,049; Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, $17,344,463; Standard Oil Co. of Kansas, $6,768,408; Solar Refining Co., the last of the lot, with of course only $4,608,550.

The total loot thus gathered thru the exploitation of large masses of workers in the oil industry amounts to more than a billion dollars—to be exact, $1,047,943,189.00.

We do not remember that the oil trust has granted any substantial increase in wages to its sweated slaves. To be sure, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has been shedding sanctimonious, crocodile Sunday-School tears over the coal miners in Somerset County, Pa., and reading a sermon on the eight-hour day. But that is all.

On the other hand we read that the oil trust isn't happy and contented. It has advanced the price of oil ten cents; see the New York Times, Thursday, Nov. 2nd. It is out to make a richer hawl, since its robbery campaign isn't challenged.

At the same time the United States Steel Corporation announces net earnings of $27,468,339 for the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1922, compared to the earnings of $18,918,058 for the corresponding quarter last year. The steel trust earned nearly $10,000,000 more this year than last year in spite of the strikes affecting the coal and coke regions, and the railroads. And the steel trust announced an advance of $3 a ton in the price of standard steel rails that went into effect on Oct. 1, using as an excuse the recent small advances in wages granted its helpless and unorganized serfs. No challenge is raised against it domination.

When the United States Steel Corporation was first launched with a billion dollars capitalization, the nation held its breath. But now, according to the Wall Street Journal, Oct. 17, the total valuation of the Standard Oil Co., at present market prices, is nearly four times that amount—$3,750,000,000. And they are both getting fatter and fatter.

Thus the big corporations grow bigger and richer as they feed on the thousands of failures of little business, and profit thru the division among the workers, the result of labor's inability to unite and fight in its own cause.

Yet there is failure even in the success of big business. With the growth of the monster combinations, industry will become more centralized, and the workers will be thrown together in greater and greater masses, inevitably forcing the development of huge, industrial unions closely co-operating with each other. It will then need only the aroused intelligence and united effort of the workers to take over industry and proceed under Soviet Rule thru that transition period that leads from capitalism to communism.

While workers continually struggle to build up their own organizations, to develop their own mass intelligence, they are not troubled by the great profits of the masters, or by the thousands of failures among the would-be masters of industry.

Even in the darkest hours of their struggle the workers can be cheered by the fact that capitalism sows the seed of its own destruction, and that the future belongs to them.

Spread Communist Literature

The revolutionary struggles of the workers in various nations are developing everywhere a tremendous Communist literature.

This is especially true in Soviet Russia, in Germany, in France, in Italy, in Austria and Bulgaria. In addition to newspapers, daily and weekly, magazines and pamphlets, a large number of books are coming from the worker-controlled presses in these countries.

Only in the English-speaking countries, in Great Britain and her important possessions, Canada, South Africa and Australia, and in the United States, do we have a scarcity of good Communist literature. There is but one reason for this. We have not, as yet, developed a demand for it.

You will find, on another page, a plan developed by THE WORKER, not only for increasing its own army of readers, but also for winning new students of our Communist literature. This plan should win the enthusiastic support of every reader of THE WORKER.

This season of the Fifth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution, heralding the dawn of the sixth year of Soviet Rule in Russia, should inspire us all to renewed activity. The task of the social revoltion in the United States today is to agitate for, educate for and organize for Communism. Help THE WORKER become a powerful weapon in that struggle. Help the Workers Party develop an awakening Communist literature for this country, that will arouse the masses to intelligent action against their oppressors. Create the demand for that literature and it will be forthcoming automatically.

A PETITION TO THE [illegible] WORLD CONGRESS [illegible] THIRD INTERNATIONAL

Dear Comrades:—We, the [Ed]itorial Staff of the Bolcoms, in the name and by authority of the [illegible] million of our readers, take the liberty of suggesting the following [illegible] for your consideration:

1. Gold medals be awarded [illegible] Daugherty, Burns and Harding for their loyal services to the Communist movement.
2. An itemized financial report of the Comintern be submitted for inspection to the Forward.
3. Demand the reinstatement of Lloyd George to premiership.
4. A million gold rubles be appropriated to subsidize the Fascisti and Ku Klux movements.
5. Appoint Abe Cahan as the dictator of the Communist Party of America.
6. To raise a fund for the support of the ex-Big Four.
7. To invite the Kaiser and his wife to spend their honeymoon in Russia.
8. To make the BOLCOMS the official organ of the COMINTERN.

Editorial Strategy.

Due to the infinite number of contributions that we receive from our fellow aspirants to literary fame, the Editorial Staff of the Bolcoms decided to mimeograph ten millions of the following "diplomatic" rejection slips:

"Most Intellectual and Greatest of All Men:—

We have been very fortunate, indeed, to receive thy wonderful manuscript which we have read and reread with infinite delight. Never have we revelled in all our life a masterpiece so divine and beautiful. As we look thru the pages of literary history we find no work superior enough to compare with thine. Were we to publish it, it would create a furore in literary circles and no doubt would revolutionize the entire art. Men like Euripedes, Shakespeare, Tolstoy, London and others would be thrown off from their high pedestals of fame. Posterity would no longer respect the Kants, Ingersolls, Hegels and Spencers. Therefore, we poor foolish editors of the Bolcoms, taking pity on the aforementioned men are compelled with tears, to return thy heavenly manuscript and doing so beg thy pardon a hundred thousand times."—Irv.

WE'LL SAY SO.

Ourselves—"It's funny if it does".

The advertisements are strictly in accord with the editorial policy: everything but the truth. The only thing truthful in the paper so far is the date . . .

Boy, Page the Arizona Gazette!

To the Editor:—We have read in the esteemed Arizona Gazette that you, reds, are going to overthow, one of these days, our democratic government and establish a Soviet monarchy. To do so, this herald of intellectuality claims, it will be necessary for you to employ a large army of police, all which will have nice soft jobs and an unparalleled opportunity to graft large sums of money from our poor millionaires.

Now, my dear Mr. Editor of the Bolcoms, we're out of work at present and knowing what a tremendous influence you have in the matter, we beg of you to accept our application for one of these soft jobs. We always worked hard and never got much pay for it. We've never been on the police force but we are of Irish descent. For reference write to the Editor of the Gazette.

Yours for a greater Bolcoms.

W. A. H. & Co.

Dear W. A. H.—Your application is accepted. We hereby christen you, the "Chief Soviet of Arizona. Your salary will be $10,000 and three millionaires per week. Be ready to start work on the 13th. All others desiring similar employment are requested to apply to the Arizona Gazette, our authoritative official organ in the West. We grasp this opportunity to extend our sincerest gratitude to this publication for the publicity it has given us. We have send comrade Lenin to Phoenix to thank personally the editors for us.

SPECIAL EXTRA!!
ANOTHER BIG CONTRIB CONTEST!

At a joint conference of the Board of Management and the Editorial Staff of the Bolcoms, it was unanimously decided to offer two prizes each month to our correspondents. The Board of Management insisted that $10,000 be awarded for the best contribution per month but the Editorial Staff objected on the grounds that so insignificant a prize would not arouse enough interest in the contest. It was finally agreed to give Trotsky's "Dictatorship vs. Democracy" for the best contrib this month and an oil painting of brother Gompers in a bathing suit for the worst one. Contestants needn't furnish credentials as to sanity. Every one is eligible: socialists, lunatics, secret-service men, ex-premiers, defeated political candidates, fascisti, etc. This month's prizes will be awarded on the 15th of December. Hurry up!

We can't think of a last line

Trade Union Educational League Says Time Is Over-Ripe for Workers to Take Stand for Class Political Action

Free Speech Only issue in Michigan

The American Civil Liberties Union has issued a statement attacking the federal secret service for its participation in the prosecution of William Z. Foster and C. E. Ruthenberg and others under the Michigan criminal syndicalist law.

The statement asserts that "there is not a single issue in the case except those of free speech and freedom of assembly."

All Forces of Labor on Political Field Must Be United, Position Taken by the National Committee of Militant Workers

Declaring that there must be no exclusion of any group or groups, the National Committee of the Trade Union Educational League has issued a manifesto to the workers generally and to labor's political conference, to be held in Chicago, Dec. 11, demanding the organization of a Labor Party "to unite in common action all the forces of labor on the political field." The manifesto in full, as it will appear officially in the December issue of The Labor Herald, the League's monthly magazine, is as follows:

• • • •

TIME OVER-RIPE FOR LABOR PARTY

Labor in the United States, industrial and agricultural, must have its own political party, uniting all its forces against the organized power of the capitalist class.

The workers in this country must organize to wage the class war upon the political as well as the industrial field. Recognizing this need, the Trade Union Educational League, in its first National Conference, August 26-27, 1922, "unequivocally condemned the Gompers political policy as fatal to the success of the trade union movement, and called upon the workers of America to take the necessary steps for engaging in a militant campaign of independent working-class political action." The time is over-ripe for a general Labor Party.

LABOR'S POLITICAL WEAKNESS

The American labor movement is alone among the important countries of the world, in having no party of its own. In all other countries, industrially developed, it is no longer a debatable question as to whether or not the workers should organize politically on class lines. This is universally understood, and is taken for granted by the workers. Their political differences are only as to what kind of a working-class party they must have, whether it shall be Reformist Labor, Socialist, Syndicalist, or Communist.

Only in America do we find a labor movement so undeveloped, so unconscious of itself, so infantile in its political conception, that it has not yet learned this fundamental lesson. It is still dragging along in the rut of the obsolete policy of "rewarding their friends and punishing their enemies."

This primitive and outworn political method of the American labor movement has reduced it to political impotence. It has practically dis

General Membership Meeting, Dec. 3rd!

Sunday, December 3rd, 1 P. M., at Casino Mansion, 85 E. 4th St., a general membership meeting of the Workers Party will be held for the purpose of discussing our attitude towards the formation of a Labor Party.

Only good standing members admitted. Good standing members are those who are less than three months in arrears.

Every Progressive and Militant Labor Union Should Adopt This Resolution

The National Committee of the Trade Union Educational League has endorsed the formation of a Labor Party, to include the labor unions and all working-class political organizations as well as the farmers and farm laborers.

On Dec. 11th there will be held at Chicago a meeting of representatives of organized labor, farmers organizations and various political groups. This is the time for every union that desires that American labor build a political organization to fight its battles to exert its influence to achieve that end. Adopt the following resolution proposed to the unions by the Trade Union Educational League. Elect delegates to the Chicago Conference:

"Whereas, the political policy of Mr. Gompers, of "rewarding our friends and punishing our enemies," has resulted in the complete political helplessness of Labor, and in the power of Government remaining completely in the hands of the capitalist class, as is witnessed by continuous official outrages against the labor movement, outstanding among which are the recent knocking-out of the Child Labor Act by the Supreme Court, the Daugherty injunction against the striking shopmen, the complete terrorization of the striking miners, railroad and textile workers and the use of troops against them; and

"Whereas, the accumulating experience of Governmental activity as a strike-breaking agency, and as an instrument of the employers in the "open shop" drive, together with the recognition that Gompers' policy of "non-partisan" political action has hitched Labor as a tail to the capitalist political kites — all are forcing the labor movement to the necessity of forming a Labor Party, and

"Whereas, we recognize that only thru a strong party of its own, with a working-class program and the ideal of a working-class republic, can the labor movement combat the forces of capitalists effectively, therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that this organization endorses the formation of a Labor Party, to include trade unions and working-class political parties, thereby uniting all the political forces of the labor movement into one solid front against the capitalist class, and be it further

"RESOLVED, that our officials stand instructed to assist in every possible way in bringing such a party into existence, and be it further

"RESOLVED, that this organization elect delegates to attend the conference for Progressive Political Action, which will take place in Chicago, Dec. 11th.

Longuet Has No Message for Workers

By C. E. RUTHENBERG

The name of Karl Marx was applauded at the meeting Sunday night at Carnegie Hall in honor of his grandson, Jean Longuet, but that is all there was of Marxian ideas connected with this meeting.

The meeting illustrated once more the bankruptcy of the Socialist Party and its leaders. It proved again that the Second International, toward which both the party of Hillquit, the chairman of the meeting, and the party of Longuet are drifting, has lost every vestige of working class character and becomes a hotbed of [illegible]

Hillquit, as chairman, extended greetings to Longuet. His speech, supposedly expressing greeting from one working class group to another, was merely a repetition of the Wilsonian phrases about our interdependence with Europe. There was no suggestion of class solidarity, that the workers of the world must unite against their exploiters. There was no suggestion that the American workers and French workers must fight side by side against all exploiters of labor, merely the sentimental humanitarian appeal.

Longuet did no better. He rehashed the history of the Stockholm conference, the efforts of the workers of Europe to get together at Zimmerwald and Kienthal,—but said nothing about the achievement of that goal in the organization of the Third International.

The worst, however, came in his discussion of the refusal of the sailors of the French Black Sea to fire upon the red flag of Soviet Russia at Odessa. He linked this up with the fact that the French Chamber of Deputies had not declared war against Soviet Russia! In the hands of Longuet this heroic act of class solidarity on the part of the Black Sea Fleet sailors derived its inspiration, not from the refusal of a working class group refusing to shoot down their working class brothers of another country, not from the common aspiration of the French sailors and the Russian workers for the Proletarian Revolution, but because the bourgeois formalities of a declaration of war had not been complied with.

There was something else beside the Marxian principles which were taboo at this meeting to greet the grandson of Karl Marx—that was any reference to the first successful struggle to apply those principles. The Proletarian Revolution in Russia did not exist for any of the speakers at this meeting and Longuets subject was "Europe after the War" but in Longuet's Europe after the War there was no Proletarian Revolution which for five years had kept the whole pack of imperialist nations at bay. Hillquit knew nothing about Soviet Russia. Longuet talked about the co-operation of the English, French an German workers, but not with Soviet Russia—not with the workers and peasants of the first proletarian state.

One slip there was. Longuet illustrated the falling value of European currency by a reference to Genoa and accidentally mentioned the name of Chicherin. The applause, even in the smug, middle class audience he was addressing probably startled him. But he didn't offend again.

Prison in Steel Czardom Yields Support for Fight Against Michigan Attack

The struggle on the part of the workingclass to free itself from the growing oppression of the employers and escape from the intolerable social conditions which threaten the lives of millions, has not been fought and will not be fought without some members of the movement paying the price.

Behind the grim gray walls of federal and state penitentiaries lie the victims of the brutal ferocity of the employing class. To many of them a prison sentence amounts to a living death—and yet from out of one of the penitentiaries in the East —a bastille of the Steel Trust— comes a response to an appeal from the Labor Defense Council.

How the appeal penetrated the walls of a penitentiary we do not know. Neither did we expect that from such a place would funds be obtained to defend those arrested in Michigan. Yet from out of this penitentiary comes a list of names signed to a donation of $35 to the Labor Defense Council.

When the appeal was made to the Standard Oil Trust Wrecked the Lloyd George Government

This issue of THE WORKER goes to press as the voters of Great Britain are casting their ballots in the parliamentary elections called with the downfall of the Lloyd George government last month. The accompanying article shows that the American Standard Oil Trust played a big role in wrecking the Lloyd George government, and that it will have a big influence on the acts of any new government that comes to power. R. W. Postgate, the British Communist, writes as follows:

• • •

By R. W. POSTGATE

Editor of the Communist, Official Publication of the British Communist Party.

The last of the war-time Premiers has gone. All the "men that won the war"—Orlando, Clemenceau, Venizelos, Wilson—had preceded him, but it seemed as tho he would stay for ever. Yet, now that it has come, the fall of Lloyd George has excited much less surprise than the fall of Carpentier. The general feeling was, on receipt of the news, that he had held on so long that he must have gone soon anyway.

But the mere fact that people were tired of him, and that the governing classes were probably a little sick of "always Lloyd George" is not a good enough explanation. None of the Conservative politicians who are disputing for his place have anything like his ability to mislead and delude the electorate. Lloyd George is unequalled in that respect, and yet he has been unceremoniously dismissed.

He has been dismissed because he has been defeated, and the power that defeated him was, ultimately, the United States. The hand of the

[illegible] Halts C. L. P. Trial in West

By M. A. DeFORD

(Federated Press Correspondent)

OAKLAND, Cal.—The trial of the five former Communist Labor party members for criminal syndicalism has been indefinitely postponed by the illness of J. E. Snyder, one of the defendants, who is believed to be suffering from pneumonia. Snyder was for a long time editor of The World and later of The Western Worker.

Before the postponement all the old warhorses of criminal syndicalism trials in California had had their day on the stand, Coutts and Dimond; Joe Arata, with his feet allegedly burned with lime by the wicked wobblies; Hudson, who swore better men's liberty away at Chicago, and the new find, Townsend, was about ready to go on.

All this in spite of the fact, proved over and over again, that the Communist Labor party had never indorsed the I. W. W. or been affiliated with it—quite irrespective also of the perjury of the horror tales which are these witnesses' stock in trade.

The five defendants have issued a public letter to all trade unions and ruled by Judge Samuels and the prosecution has placed on the stand in the trial of Dolsen and his associates for criminal syndicalism those old war horses of stool pigeondom Elbert Coutts and Jack Dimond

The jury was treated to the usual lurid story of the criminal careers of these two confessed highway robbers — for whom many men are already suffering at San Quentin, with the prospect of many more to follow

While men who committed the crimes have testified on the witness stand that they own large estates and enjoy good incomes but are "too busy testifying in criminal syndicalism trials" to settle down and enjoy the leisure their perjury has earned.

Members employed and not paying the tax will not be considered in good standing.—Edward Lindgren, District Organizer.

[illegible] Remarkable Development

[illegible]

The Cleveland agreement was signed in August, and in spite of the fact that the international leaders knew at that time they were not going to sign up the Fayette Field they made no effort worth talking about to raise any relief for the Fayette, Pa., Field.

The situation was allowed to drag along without any information being given to the men. Even William Feeny and John O'Leary, in actual charge of the coke field sub-district, who had to meet the committees of the men every day, stalled and failed to stir up things until a representative of the Pittsburgh Miners' Food Relief Conference toured the coke fields against Feeny's wishes and by leaving resolutions in various locals directed the spirit of revolt against the International for failure to raise a great fund to relieve the 45,000 miners in Fayette County.

Feeny denounced these resolutions as disruptive, but within two weeks he turned about and began a campaign against the Pittsburgh Office of District Five for failure to give adequate relief.

The reason for his switch was because the rising tide of indignation against the neglect of Fayette County threatened to swamp the Lewis machine, and Feeny, as a loyal able the early part of December, the result being that the sub-district under Feeny's control will have the threat of facing starvation over its head unless they vote the way Feeny orders. The history of District Five shows only too well how such situations can be manipulated but if Feeny thinks the progressive miners are going to permit the corrupt methods used in the past he is badly mistaken.

Feeney A Candidate

The second unusual development in the local situation is the announcement made by William Feeny, International Organizer and strong Lewis adherent who has had a falling out with Fagan, Hargest and Company that he will run for president in the district

To those who are not acquainted with this gentleman and his record, Feeny has the reputation of being a pseudo-radical. Since Feeny has decided to oppose the Progressives at the last minute it will be necessary for us in future articles to tell the truth about this man who is one of the most devoted supporters of Lewis and the Cleveland agreement

Any man who at this late day comes out against the Progressive Miners' Group is a traitor to the miners of District 5 and will be treated as such.

Pass the word along to miners of all language groups to support this ticket and start a new day in the U M. W. of A.

[illegible] to His Defamers

William F. Dunne, who is now touring the western states for the Labor Defense Council, has issued a statement from Seattle, Wash., in reply to the charges of Ku Klux Klan membership made against him, first in "The Reds in America" articles in the Boston Transcript, and later by Abraham Cahan's Jewish Daily Forward, and other "Socialist" sheets. Dunne writes:

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Since the arrest of myself and 19 others, August 21, in St. Joseph, Mich., on a charge of violation of the criminal syndicalism law of that state, wide use has been made by the yellow "Socialist" press of a photographic copy, originally published in the Boston Transcript, of what purports to be a receipt for $10.00 issued to me by a branch of the Ku Klux Klan of Bakersfield.

Without going into the ethics of the use of material furnished by department of justice agents to the capitalist press, by papers calling themselves "socialist," in an attempt to destroy my character and standing in the labor movement, I will state first:

That the alleged receipt is not a membership receipt in the Ku Klux Klan.

Secondly: That I was never at any time in my life, in a town or city named Bakersfield.

Thirdly: That on the date mentioned in the alleged receipt I was in New York City as dozens of persons can testify

Fourthly: That the alleged receipt was given me as a souvenir by Mr. Charles Sweeney, special writer for the New York World who was the first writer to expose the Ku Klux Klan, thru the medium of six articles published in the New York World. He made an exhaustive investigation of the organization, the findings of which were contained in the articles mentioned

At my residence in New York one evening, the exact date of which I do not now recall, but which can be easily ascertained, Mr. Sweeney entertained Mrs Dunne, myself and a small party of friends with an account of his investigation of the K. K. K., and ended up by presenting to me and others present souvenir receipts made out in his handwriting and signed with some name that occurred to him at the moment. They were issued from a book of blank receipts he had, I assume, acquired in the course of his investigation

Mr. Sweeney is known to his many friends as a devout Roman Catholic and will hardly be accused of membership in the K. K. K. even by the yellow "socialist" press which has for purely political reasons endeavored to slander and defame me

The damage done is so far as I am concerned irreparable. It is probably useless to expect a denial from the press of an organization that has placed itself on a lower plane than that of the capitalist class in an endeavor to hamper the defense of men who are being victimized by the department of justice and other agencies of the employers and who face years in prison for their activities in the working class movement.

As soon as I return to New York, however libel suits will be instituted against every paper which has charged me with membership in the Ku Klux Klan, and in this instance I have not the slightest scruple in using the capitalist courts in an attempt to force a retraction. Any monetary compensation that may be secured will be donated to the various defense bodies now working for the release of class-war prisoners.

Lecture under the Auspices of the S. T. A. S. R., by Dr. Ohsol

Engineers, Draftsmen, Surveyors!

Russia today is largely an immense engineering and industrial problem, engaging the attention of the world to a hitherto unheard of extent.

The field it presents to the technical men is so large that it can not be overestimated and the possibilities of the individual is limited only by his own abilities

"To Russia!" may be the slogan of the engineer tomorrow. Why not get acquainted with it now?

For your information and enlightenment Dr. J. G. Ohsol, member of the Second Duma, who has recently returned from Russia and who has made an exhaustive study of the Industrial Developments over there, will deliver a lecture on "The Trend of Recent Industrial Developments in Russia."

The lecture will be held under the auspices of the Engineering Section of the S. T. A. S. R., at 231 E. 37th St., on Friday, November 17th, at 8 P. M.

All those interested are cordially invited. Admission free.

The Campaign for the Labor Party

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has placed the Workers Party squarely on record in favor of the organization of a Labor Party, and for a campaign to secure the admission of the Workers Party to this Labor Party.

The formation of a Labor Party with the support of the labor unions will be the greatest step in advance American labor has made. It will mean that the workers of this country have at least recognized that they have interests as a class which are seperate and distinct from the interests of the capitalists. It will be a great step forward in that development which will bring revolutionary struggles of the American workers against their exploiters.

The whole party membership must carry on a campaign among the workers generally for the organization of a Labor Party.

Every party member must thoroly familiarize himself with the reasons for the party policy. The whole party membership must be instructed on the basic question underlying the organization of the Labor Party

The Party Campaign!

1. The resolution of the C. E. C. has been printed and there is a large enough supply so that each member will receive a copy. Branches of the party are instructed to take up the discussion of this resolution at the next branch meeting. If there is no immediate meeting, a special meeting should be called for that purpose.

2. Wherever there are a number of branches and a City Central Committee exists, the City Central Committee should call a meeting of all the members in the city to be held after the branches have had an opportunity to discuss the resolution and thoroly discuss the question of the Labor Party.

The Campaign Outside the Party

1. Party members who are members of unions should bring up the question of the Labor Party and the Conference, Dec. 11, and secure the adoption of a resolution endorsing the organization of the Labor Party and to have their union send a delegate to the Dec 11th Conference. The same policy should be followed in other working class organizations in which we have members.

2. On Sunday Dec. 10th every City Central Committee should hold a mass meeting in favor of the organization of a Labor Party. Special attention should be given to informing the unions about this mass meeting and to inviting them to join in the arrangements for same, and to be represented by speakers and to have their members attend. The National Office will mobilize all the party speakers for this date and will supply speakers wherever possible. The arrangements for these mass meetings should proceed at once so that the meetings can be well advertised. Each such meeting should adopt a resolution in favor of the Labor Party and wire that resolution to the Chicago Conference which meets December 11th right of free speech and free assembly, and if necessary, the Michigan criminal syndicalist law will be tested in the United States Supreme Court. Meanwhile, public opinion is asked to try the issues "for the effect they may have on similar prosecutions elsewhere, and on the state of mind which encourages repressive measures."

Branches and City Central Committees should send a report about their meeting and the action taken to the party press for publication.

A special organization known as the Labor Defense Council, with offices at 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, has charge of the defense work, and a general appeal is being issued for funds. It is estimated that the case will cost at least $100,000. "The American Civil Liberties Union", the statement concludes, "endorses this special defense work and urges all its friends to contribute liberally to the fund, and to aid in other ways when requested. This is the most important single national trial involving civil liberties with which we have been concerned since the big I. W. W. conspiracy trials under the Espionage Act. Any further information can be obtained by addressing us or the office in Chicago given above."

Echoes of the Celebrations

The National Office of the Workers Party is in receipt of a check for $112.50 as a result of the Russian Anniversary Celebration meeting held by the Cleveland (Ohio) Finnish Branch on Nov. 7th

Flag Pins to the amount of $105.50 were sold. The hall was packed to the doors and enthusiasm ran high as speakers together with a splendid musical program rendered the meeting one of the best held in this Branch.

F. S. R. Meeting in Philadelphia

Roger N. Baldwin of the Civil Liberties Union and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn of the Workers Defense Union, will be among the speakers at a mass meeting in Philadelphia, Friday evening, November 24 at Labor Lyceum, Sixth and Brown Streets, under auspices of the local conference of the Friends of Soviet Russia. It is expected that there will be a big turnout as a demonstration of sympathy with Soviet Russia on the part of workers in Philadelphia.

Baldwin was chairman of the committee of five which recently made a thoro investigation of the accounts of the Friends of Soviet Russia and reported that the charges of the irregularities were without foundation. He will discuss the findings of the comittee in his address at this gathering.

The purpose of the gathering is primarily to stimulate interest in the further work for the relief of the destitute in Russia. Allen Broms, treasurer of the F. S. R., will also address the meeting.

Don't Throw This Pa[illegible] Pass It on to Your Ne[illegible]

[illegible] Against Ohio Miners

[illegible] is being exerted in the [illegible]eastern part of Ohio and in the [illegible] part of West Virginia a[illegible] of the working class. More [illegible] still in that the workers of the [illegible] of the nation know little about [illegible] struggle.

Every conceivable form of terror has been continuously used against the union miners of that district. There the blackest of black reaction reigns supreme; the black damp that periodically leaves countless corpses in its wake in the bowels of the earth from which the miners extract the wealth that enables their masters to live in idleness is no more terrifying than the bestiality of the scum of the earth recruited in the mine owners' private armies to keep the workers in a continual state of terror above ground.

Shrapnel, machine guns mounted on armored trains, ambuscades, every horror known to warfare has been used against these miners of Ohio and West Virginia, but has failed to break their spirit of unionism.

The military terror has now been reinforced by the judicial terror—the two supplement each other and to date there have been a total of 631 union coal miners of that region indicted for murder and conspiracy.

The reason for this combined judicial and military assault is the determination to destroy the influence of the United Mine Workers of America in that section of the country. So intense was the hatred aroused against the murderous gunmen who devastated the region for years that new tactics on the part of the mine owners had to be created. Now they clothe their murders in the trappings of the courts. Fake trials are held, with perjured witnesses, bought and paid for judges and juries, and miners are railroaded to the penitentiary wholesale.

Life Sentences Meted Out

At St. Clairsville, Ohio, several miners' trials have been held and two of the miners are now facing life sentences in the state penitentiary on a charge of murder. The trial was typical of such procedure—farcical in the extreme.

One of those receiving a life sentence is Dominik Venturato, president of one of the largest locals in District No. 6. He is an Italian and has considerable influence among his countrymen in the mines. The mine owners and other exploiters of labor offered misleading inducements to the workers of Europe to inveigle them into coming to this country and entering the industries as wage-slaves, but the moment they display intelligence enough to organize in their own interests and endeavour to secure some of the things that had been promised them, they then become victims of capitalist hatred against those who produce its wealth.

The cases grew out of the death of a scab during the strike of last summer. A mass meeting was held in the town of New Laferty, Ohio, and in some sort of drunken brawl a strikebreaker was killed and Venturato was arrested and charged with the crime. His trial and conviction soon followed. Dan Agosti was also convicted of the crime and sentenced to a life term.

Preparations are being rushed to bring the others arrested to trial on similar charges and under similar conditions with the object in view of imprisoning every active member of the union in order to turn the coal fields into nests of scabs.

A defense committee has been organized for these victims and all organizations and individuals who desire to contribute to the defense of the workers can do so by sending their contributions to the Miners' Defense Committee, Room 301, Miners Temple, Bellaire, Ohio.

An interesting booklet covering the history of the cases to date has been issued and can be obtained upon request.

Watch for notice of Mass Meeting for Dec. 5th in next week's "Worker."—All Labor Unions in Yorkville are invited to send Delegates to this meeting.

[illegible] to [illegible] at Chicago, Saturday, Dec. 9

Eleven thousand local railway unions have just been invited to send delegates to the National Railway Amalgamation Conference to be held in Chicago, Dec. 9, the first announcement of which appeared in THE WORKER last week.

This week we are able to publish the complete call as sent out by the National Committee to Amalgamate the 16 standard railroad organizations from its offices, 511 Dakota Bldg. 84 W. 7th St., St. Paul, Minn. It is as follows:

TO ALL RAILROAD LOCAL UNIONS.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

The time has now come when the railroad men of the United States and Canada are ready to amalgamate the many unions into one mighty organization. On July 1, 1922, our committee submitted for approval to 11,000 railroad local unions the method of amalgamation, [illegible] the Minnesota Plan. This plan, with its [illegible] the entire body of railroad workers in [illegible] in favor of the plan has been overwhelming. Thousands of local unions, hundreds of local federations, dozens of system federations, and two international organizations (Railway Clerks and Maintenance of Way) have endorsed and adopted the plan. At least 80 per cent of all railroad workers are now definitely in favor of amalgamation. And the movement has spread to other industries, for eleven State Federations of Labor: Ohio, Washington, Utah, Nebraska, Colorado, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Oregon, South Dakota, and Indiana, have also, in the same period, declared practically unanimously for complete amalgamation in all industries. Never has the country seen such a tremendous drive for solidarity.

The Shopmen's strike, with its tragic spectacle of nine unions working while seven are striking, makes amalgamation more imperative than ever. We railroad men are confronted with the alternative of consolidation or destruction. Therefore, the National Committee to Amalgamate the Sixteen Standard Railroad Organizations, recognizing the need of the situation and the widespread demand for definite action on amalgamation, is hereby calling a NATIONAL RAILROAD AMALGAMATION CONFERENCE, to take place in the North Side Turner Hall, 820 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Saturday, December 9th, at 9:00 A. M., and continuing on Sunday, December 10th, 1922. This National Conference will devise ways and means not only to win the railroad unions completely for amalgamation, but also to bring about their actual consolidation into one body. It is by no means a dual move. To stop secessionism and devise a method of consolidating all unions as speedily as possible is the big problem for this Conference to solve. The Conference will also deal constructively with the closely related problems of amalgamation and strengthening the metal trades generally. All local unions, or local and system federations are entitled to two delegates each. Bring credentials with you, and also notify the undersigned in advance. In order to finance the Conference, all lodges are requested to contribute $2.00 each to the Conference Fund.

Brothers, beware of dual unionism! Be on your guard against those who advocate secession as the cure of our unions' weakness. That's the way to ruin. We must not quit our old unions. We must draw all the unions together, consolidate them, amalgamate them. That is the way to progress. Federation has outlived its usefulness, amalgamation is now an indispensable necessity. The only effective answer to the "Open Shoppers" is complete consolidation of all railroad labor's forces. It is either amalgamation or annihilation. Railroad Labor is now in retreat. The NATIONAL RAILROAD AMALGAMATION CONFERENCE in Chicago will mark the point when it again launches a victorious offensive. Act on this matter at your next meeting, if necessary call a special meeting. Elect your delegates! Send in your $2.00 contribution! Come to the Conference at all costs!

Fraternally yours,

NATIONAL COMMITTEE,

By O. H. Wangerin, Secretary-Treasurer.

Industrial Court Is Doomed, Says Kansas Governor-Elect

By H. M. W.

With the passing of the unspeakably contemptible Henry J. Allen, governor of Kansas, who has been striving for prestige among the flunkeys of capitalism as the labor-hater par excellence, goes also his pet device against labor, the industrial court law.

The new governor-elect of Kansas, Jonathan M. Davis, in his first statement to the press declared that: "The first thing I intend to do as Governor is to bring about the repeal of the industrial court law."

In opposition to the bombastic speeches made by Henry J. Allen before various manufacturers' associations and chambers of commerce in praise of this law, the governor-elect declares that the "court has been unfair and unjust and there is no place for it in Kansas. There have been only a few cases before it and none of them has been settled satisfactorily."

Most of the incoming legislature, elected at the November general election, have also expressed opinions which show their contempt for this obnoxious law.

A Victory for Labor

While the denunciation of the law and the determination to repeal it comes from a person elected on the Democratic ticket, its destruction is essentially a labor victory and due solely to the militant struggle against its enforcement carried on by Alexander Howatt and his associates in the miners' union of that district.

The heroic defiance of the mandates of this creature, who has come to be known far and wide as Czar Henry Allen of Kansas, on the part of the miners of the Kansas district is one of the bright spots in the history of labor in America and confirms our conviction that the working class of this nation, when forced to the wall, will fight to the bitter end against despotism even though it be enthroned under the specious plea of "law and order."

The law was framed by Allen with the connivance of that other notoriety seeking bootlicker of capitalism, William Allen White of the Empire Gazette, at the behest of the mine owners for the purpose of destroying the United Mine Workers of that district.

On the strength of the passage and attempted enforcement of the Industrial Court Law, Governor Allen was endeavoring to become a national political figure with the hope of eventually achieving a presidential nomination on the Republican ticket. The Republican campaign in Kansas was made upon the defense of this anti-labor law while the Democrats, realizing that any political organization appealing to the Kansas voters on the basis of opposition to that law would win, conducted their campaign against Allen and his pet law.

The absence of a labor party in Kansas left the miners no choice and the only way they could repudiate the industrial court law was by supporting the other capitalist party.

That the law will be repealed is a foregone conclusion and it will also serve to put a damper upon other labor haters who have attempted to emulate the example of Henry J. Allen.

John L. Lewis Affected

In the desperate struggle between the forces of progress and the forces of reaction in the United Mine Workers of America the repeal of this law will also be felt, inasmuch as it will release Alexander Howatt from the clutches of that court and enable him to continue his fight against John L. Lewis.

Lewis, the president of the United Mine Workers, and Allen, the corporation governor of Kansas, worked hand in hand in order to send their mutual enemy Alexander Howatt to jail.

Although Howatt and his associates have been expelled from the miners' union by Lewis and Co., and although the reactionary machine has only recently announced the reorganization of the Kansas district, it is certain that the fight to reinstate Howatt will be resumed with renewed vigor. After disposing of Allen it now becomes the task of the Kansas miners and their sympathizers thruout the jurisdiction of the union to dispose of Lewis and his sinister influence in the labor movement, so that he can no longer use his power to aid a capitalist governor of a state to send a true representative of the working class to jail for fighting to preserve his union from destruction.

Necessity of a Labor Party

Because the law is to be repealed by a Democratic governor and legislative body it should not blind the Kansas workers to the fact that the new governor will also represent the capitalist class and that he will use oppressive measures against the workers in case they engage in a militant struggle against the exploiters of labor. As far as the two parties are concerned there is absolutely no difference between them in relation to the working class.

In Kansas, as elsewhere, the workers must organize politically for the purpose of presenting their demands as a class and of exposing to ever larger numbers of the more backward masses, those not yet organized, the true character of the capitalist government as the enemy of the working class and organizing for the final conquest of capitalism—which is also a political struggle.

Joint Board Aids R.A.I.C.

Shop chairmen and members of the Ladies' Dress and Waist Makers and Embroidery Workers' Union of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, are asked by Secretary-Treasurer M. K. Mackoff to call at the offices of the Joint Board for subscription cards to the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, so that every member of the organization may have the opportunity to own at least a share of stock.

The Joint Board of the Union has already subscribed $1,000 for this purpose, $500 of which has just been paid. A meeting of shop chairmen also enthusiastically approved the proposition of soliciting individual subscriptions from the rank and file.

Secretary-Treasurer M. K. Mackoff points out that recent cables from Sidney Hillman, in Moscow, assure stockholders in the corporation eight per cent minimum dividend, as well as a guarantee of their investment by the Soviet Government. The new subscription cards, with stamps, make it possible for subscribers to pay for their $10 shares in instalments of $1 at a time. The use of these cards in Chicago and elsewhere have greatly increased the number of individual subscribers.

The appeal to members of the Ladies' Waist and Dressmakers follows:

To All Members of the Ladies' Dress and Waist Makers' and Embroidery Workers' Union

Sisters, Brothers:—We appeal to you on behalf of an enterprise which is characterized by impartial observers as the outstanding constructive venture in a generation.

The name of the enterprise is the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, its aim is—active and constructive aid in the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia. It's a novel undertaking, entirely unlike what we have been doing or helping to do in years, since Russia has become the experimental laboratory of social reconstruction. It well merits attention, the attention of every militant worker in the country.

The famine situation in Russia called for immediate relief and response to that call necessarily took the shape of getting donations and contributions in kind. That situation is nearly or pretty nearly over.

The problem of the day, in so far as Russia is concerned, is industrial rehabilitation. Its railways must be rebuilt, industry revived, if Russia is to survive, as she will.

Industrial credit is wanted, but the manipulators of money and industrial credit, the international bankers and the imperial magnates of capitalism won't help Russia. They would be willing to support the body of Russia, to buy it, if they were permitted to strangle its soul, the working-class government.

So the workers of the world are asked to step in, to take a hand in the matter and do for Soviet Russia what the "other side" wouldn't do, and for good reasons.

The Russian-American Industrial Corporation was organized for just this purpose—to get together whatever spare means the workers, friends of Soviet Russia, have, and invest it in Soviet Russia, in the operation of its industry, its business—for an idealistic purpose.

To attain this end, vital to the continued growth of the Workers' Government in Russia the Russian-American Industrial Corporation has obtained a most favorable concession to operate the textile and clothing industry in Russia, in partnership with the Supreme Council of National Economy of the Soviet Government, provided American Labor will supply sufficient operating capital. The Soviet Government guarantees the capital invested and a minimum dividend of eight per cent.

A number of large factories already established and operating at full speed are turned over to the corporation of the American Workers, and a Million Dollars is wanted to supply additional equipment and certain raw materials.

The Russian-American Industrial Corporation, chartered under the laws of the state of Delaware and recognized in formal agreement by the Soviet Government, issued 100,000 shares at $10 each, which are now offered to all progressive and labor organizations, to workers and friends of Workers' Russia.

The R.-A. I. C. has the original backing of the men's clothing workers, the Amalgamated having gone as far as to subscribe over $200,000 of the Million Dollars. But it is not an exclusive Amalgamated affair. It is the affair of the entire Labor Movement. It has the unqualified approval of all groups and divisions of labor. Many locals of our own international have subscribed liberally to the stock of the Corporation. Our Joint Board invested $1,000 in it. We now place the proposition before you, members of the union, so that you do what you can individually.

Remember it is no donation that we ask. It is an investment of a part of your savings that is called for. A great and powerful country, rich in natural resources, calls for your aid which will help others and do yourselves good. Your investment is safe with Russia backing it and American labor and liberals actively helping it.

Will you respond to the call?

You, members of the Dress, Waist and Embroidery Workers' Union have always been the vanguard of progressive and militant labor. You never spared your energies, your lives when necessary. You will not stand aside when the purpose is of world significance and the way to achieve it—so easy. "Buy a share for yourself and sell one to some-one else," should be your slogan during the campaign for the R.-A. I. C.

Dress, Waist Makers, and Embroidery Workers, do your duty, answer the call of our millions of fellow workers across the waters battling the cause of all honest, toiling men and women. They are battling for a world that will be owned and managed by all and for all, a world worth living in and for,

Joint Board

Ladies' Dress and Waist Makers' Union I. L. G. W. U.

M. K. Mackoff, Sec'y-Treasurer.

P. S. For those who cannot pay all in cash a plan of instalment has been devised. Apply to our office or shop-chairmen.

The following letter was sent by Secretary-Treasurer Potofsky of the R.-A. I. C. in acknowledgement of the $500 payment.

November 8, 1922.

Mr. M. K. Mackoff,
Joint Board, Waist and Dressmakers' Union,
16 West 21st Street,
New York City.

My dear Mackoff:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your check for $500.00 on account of 100 shares of stock in the Russian American Industrial Corporation, voted by the Joint Board of the Ladies Waist and Dressmakers' Union.

Needless to say, we are pleased and encouraged by the interest shown in the rehabilitation of Russia by a branch of our sister organization. We feel that the membership of your organization has an interest identical with our own in the economic reconstruction of that great country, and that is moved by the same feeling of sympathy and understanding to do all in its power to be of real help.

The RAIC is a medium for such assistance, and we trust that you and your officers will not relax in your efforts so well begun.

We shall mail you certificates of stock as soon as Mr. Hillman returns from Russia, which will be in about two weeks.

Fraternally yours,

J. S. POTOFSKY,

Secretary-Treasurer."

Packages to Russia

(By F. S. R. Press Service)

The national office of the Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 W. 13th St., New York, has just received a cablegram of great interest to those who have friends and relatives in Russia and others who wish to send packages to to Soviet territory. It came in answer to an inquiry about customs charges on such relief packages, and reads:

"According to a decree of the Central Executive Committee issued on November 2nd, relief packages received here up to December 31st addressed to workmen and middle employes are permitted to enter free. On others there is a duty of fifty percent. Contents of packages will be examined; must correspond with the list of necessary commodities and must not contain many objects of the same kind.

Why Lloyd George Fell

United States did not appear openly in the Near East disaster, but it was a United States influence that defeated him as sure as rain comes from clouds.

It is fairly generally known that there has been a conflict between France and England over the question of Turkey. The dividing up of the Near East had given Britain Mesopotamia and France, Syria. To the North of Mesopotamia very near to the dangerous foothills of the highlands of Asia Minor, was Mosul, reputed to be one of the richest single oilfields of the whole world. To the north of Syria was Cilicia, a flat land at the foot of the Taurus mountains, of no economic value but essential for the defence of Syria. Very little while had passed before the French troops in Cilicia found themselves in great difficulties with the Turkish irregular troops, who had been disregarded and had no allies but the Russians. It looked very likely that General Gouraud and his troops might be seriously involved, and it was clear that France had either to come to an arrangement with the Turks or set out to conquer the whole of Asia. France took the former course, and came to an agreement with the Turks—the Angora Pact.

But the Angora Pact was more than an agreement safeguarding the Syrian frontier. It committed France to large support of the Turks with arms and munitions. That is to say, it committed her to waging war through the agency of the Turks—with her ally Britain. For it was well known who was the Turks' real enemy. Islam's worst oppressor has always been Great Britain. The Union Jack flies over Cairo, Jerusalem, Mecca, Medina, Bagdad, Delhi and Constantinople, and there is little question who has seized most of the old lands of the Caliphs. The Turks made no secret of their intention to seize Constantinople, which was for all practical purposes in British hands. Why should France set this dog on at Great Britain?

The answer is that it was not France that did this but America. During the war, and right up till 1921, British oil interests had been predominant in France. Amicable arrangements were made throughout the war concerning the fate of the Mosul oilfields, and France consented to their practical seizure to the British oil interests, Shell. Shell Oil controlled at least one large French bank and one newspaper. It had a representative in most of the shifting French cabinets and had two minor companies of its own in France under French names. In most of this Sir Basil Zaharoff acted as agent.

In 1920-21 this period came to an abrupt end. France no longer continued to be docilely led by Shell Oil. The great American trust, Standard Oil, took the place of Shell. It too took over a large bank, ran its own newspaper, started subsidiary companies. Odds might have been equal, if it had not been for certain political considerations which gave Standard Oil the victory. The various quarrels continually occuring over all Europe had made French politicians quite anxious to teach Britain a lesson. On top of this the United States government gave France clearly to understand that no financial assistance or accomodation whatever would be forthcoming from across the Atlantic until Standard Oil was definitely given first place in all French oil concerns.

Therefore, the Angora Pact handed to France not merely the exploitation of all Turkish railways etc., but in a secret Annex, all oil deposits in Turkish territory, present or future. That meant that Standard Oil would have any oilfields that Kemal Pasha could recover. Therefore the Turks were sent out to fight the British and their servants, armed with the best munitions that French factories could provide.

Standard Oil looked to Mosul first but Kemal Pasha looked to Constantinople. He intended to recover Turkey's position in Europe before he struck south and east. His armies, therefore, marched west. Here they came into conflict with the Greeks, and behind the Greeks were the British. The British ever since 1918 have been in effective occupation of the Straits, and for all the "internationalization" of them [illegible]hey will not leave. They dare [illegible]. The opening of the Panama Canal and the growth of the United States Navy have made the High Seas [illegible] of a British lake. The Atlantic [illegible] the Pacific are not in British [illegible] any more. Britain has to think of the narrow seas. Most of her possessions lie in Asia and Africa, on the shores of the Indian Ocean, and the way to them lies thru the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean. This sea route has become the spinal cord of the British Empire. Now, look at a map of the Mediterranean and just observe how the Straits and Constantinople lie on its flank. In the hands of a hostile power—such as an ally of Russia or America—they are poised like an axe ready to descend and sever the British lines of communication. From the Dardanelles ships can dart out and withdraw again, and make the Gibraltar-Port Said route impossible.

Britain took the Straits for herself, therefore, and sheltered behind her satellite power, Greece. But she occupied them with a relatively small force. This was because Mr. Lloyd George was much under the influence of Sir Basil Zaharoff, who is a Greek. Greek merchants, also, have for very many years held in England a position far higher than would be expected. He believed them when they told him that the Turks were useless guerilla troops and the Greek army could eat them up. Therefore he did not send more troops to Constantinople.

That was Sir Lloyd George's first blunder.

His second blunder caused his fall. He was unceremoniously booted out after it, because is was a gross and monstrous military error and one which has seriously injured the position of British capitalism in the East. It was the occupation of Chanak. Practically no notice has been taken of this in the daily press, so it is worthwhile considering it a little more in detail. Why the occupation of Chanak meant disaster will only be clear if these remarks are read in connection with a map.

In order to hold a narrow stretch of sea like the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, it is necessary to control the land for a considerable distance on either side. In the old days naval power was enough, but with aeroplanes and long range artillery to fight, it is not. To control the Dardanelles, the British must control Constantinople, the Gallipoli peninsula and a good half of Thrace on one side; on the other a broad strip of territory along the Dardanelles, and the coast facing the Bosphorus.

In the face of the approaching Turkish forces, Lloyd George did the wrong thing. He did not care to reinforce the Straits enormously and concentrate there an army that the Turks dare not fight. What he did was to send a small and insufficient reinforcement into Chanak, a place on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles.

The arrival of this force at Chanak gave the Turks all they wanted. Mustapha Kemal of course poured in his troops in enormous numbers. They occupied the heights above Chanak, the positions around it, the shore below it. They occupied or commanded the rest of the forty mile shores of the Dardanelles. Chanak was immediately a hostage in their hands, while as for holding the Dardanelles, the occupation of it "was like holding the front door of a house on which a number of large ground floor French windows stood wide open to the gardens on every side". When the British delegates arrived, the Turks said in effect: "If you do not give us what we want, we shall attack Chanak. Our new campaign will be celebrated by the defeat and wholesale surrender of the largest British force in these regions. How do you think that news will be celebrated in Constantinople, Cairo, Bagdad and Delhi?"

The British answer, in effect, was "What will you take?" And they took Thrace and Constantinople and all that Turkey had lost in the war in this area. And therefore the British task of holding the Straits for herself is thirty times more difficult.

That is the story of how Mr. Bedford, of Standard Oil, scored his first point over Sir Basil Zaharoff, of Shell, and of why Mr. Lloyd George left Downing Street suddenly after seven years of power.

[illegible] to Aid Children of Soviet Russia

(By F. S. R. Press Service)

The extent of destitution among the children of Russia would be in[illegible]able, were the causes of the appalling situation less well known. Those who have watched the catastrophic assaults upon Russia during the last five years—the attacks of subsidized brigands, the blockade of international greed, the terrible famine—learn without surprise that literally hundreds of thousands of children are orphaned, starving, broken in health, doomed to extermination unless help arrives quickly from the outside. Estimates indicate that there are 600,000 orphans in Russia and 400,000 in Ukraine.

Details Gruesome Tragedies

Everywhere in Russia, but especially in the regions devastated by the famine scourge, there are hordes of starving children. The graphic descriptions of their condition and sufferings there is no need to repeat here. The details are too gruesome, unearthly in their tragedy.

Everywhere in Russia little children wander like lost souls, the only hope for life being in the generosity of the workers in other lands. Their fathers have fallen in defending the workers' republic against the Wrangels and Denikins of the world; killed in many instances by American bullets! Or they have died of hunger rather than eat the crust of bread which might save their children's lives.

To meet this situation the International Workers Aid has decided to establish Children's Homes in Russia, equipped to care for and educate the new generation of Russians. Several such Homes are already in existence, supported by the German and Dutch workers. Despite inadequate provisions in many places, these Homes are wonderful oases of happiness for the Russian children in a desert of misery. More such Homes, if started soon, will obviate a great deal of suffering.

Drive for F. S. R. Home

The Friends of Soviet Russia, as the American branch of the international relief body, is conducting a campaign for the adoption of Russian orphans. The Soviet Government has set aside many buildings, some of them the former residences of the nobility, to be used in the care of children. But these houses cannot be used until the necessary equipment is available, until regular donations to keep the homes running have been assured.

The F. S. R. in its drive aims to reach every working man and woman in the United States and Canada with this message: "Your contribution, no matter how small, is not negligible. It takes so little money to keep a boy or girl alive that your mite will save the life of at least one orphan. Two dollars will provide food and clothes, a home and an education for a Russian child for a whole month!"

The appeal of the F. S. R. is directed not only to individuals but also to organizations. Labor unions and other working class groups, women's organizations, children's clubs and other groups are asked to adopt as many children as their treasury can stand. It is expected that some of the larger organizations will adopt hundreds outright. As large an initial donation as possible to go toward equipping a Home and monthly payments of $2 for each orphan adopted—these are the forms which help should take.

Named After Martyrs Here

Homes equipped and supported by American contributions will be named after heroes and martyrs of the American labor movement.

In undertaking the work, the Friends of Soviet Russia and the international relief body of which it is part are conscious of the fact that fruits of the Russian Revolution will be lost unless the new generation is brought up healthy in body and mind. The children of today must be saved from death, and from what is worse—a crippled, stunted life due to bad conditions.

All contributions and inquiries should be addressed to the Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th St., New York.

Plan Big Work for F.S.R. in New York

A season of intensive activities in New York in aid of Soviet Russia is assured following a well-attended and enthusiastic conference of the New York Local of the Friends of Soviet Russia, held in the Labor Temple at 84th Street. More than 130 accredited representatives of labor, political and fraternal organizations in the city were present and laid plans for the work of the coming months. Twenty-eight Workmen's Circles, 12 unions, two Socialist Party branches, numerous Workers' Party branches and other groups were represented.

A more detailed report of F.S.R. work will appear in our next issue.

Time Is Over-Ripe for Class Political Action

franchised the working class. In the matters of Government our labor movement has but the slightest influence. Labor, for example, is almost completely lacking in representation in the various legislative bodies. Those few nondescript "card men," the boast of the "nonpartisan" advocates, are often even more corrupt and treacherous than the capitalist politicians themselves. In the local, state and national legislative assemblies, Labor is almost totally unrepresented. The whole law-making and law-enforcing mechanism is in the hands of the enemy, who do as they please with it. Gompers' policy has resulted in wiping out Labor as a political factor.

That this is so is made strikingly clear if we compare our condition with the position of Labor in European political life. There, where the workers have organized their political power along class lines, Organized Labor is a great political factor. In Germany the various workers' parties control 42 percent of the members of the national legislative assembly, in Austria 38 percent, Czecho-Slovakia 36 percent, Belgium 35 percent, Denmark 34 percent, Italy and Bulgaria 25 percent, Norway, Holland, and Switzerland 22 percent. In Great Britain the Labor Party will challenge the domination of the capitalist parties in the next election. The workers of Europe are a definite political power.

SUPPRESSION FROM WITHOUT, CORRUPTION WITHIN

The political weakness of Labor is realized in the naked Governmental suppression of strikes, annulling of labor protection laws, limitation of free speech, and assemblage, etc. In the field of protective legislation this country hopelessly lags behind, due to our political impotence. Mr. Gompers gave testimony to this in 1909, when, returning from Europe, he said:

"We are in the United States, not less than two decades behind many European countries in the protection of life, health, and limb of the workers. We are behind England 10 years. We are behind Germany 20 years."

Since this judgment was rendered our relative position in respect to all political aspects of the labor movement has become more unfavorable. During the past dozen years, and especially since the war, European Labor has made political gains of great importance, but we have gone backward steadily. While European workers have been wresting concession after concession from the capitalists, our movement in America has been stripped by the capitalist powers of many of our most fundamental rights.

There has been a veritable flood of anti-syndicalist laws, under which hundreds of labor militants have been sent to prison on charges not of criminal actions, but of opinions, for terms the savagery of which has shocked the world. The right of assembly has become little more than a privilege dependent upon the good will of the American Legion, the Ku Klux Klan, or corrupt local officials. Esch-Cummins laws, industrial courts, and the injunction have literally hamstrung the labor unions in their most vital point: the right to strike. Popular representation in legislative assemblies has been violated, by refusing to seat workers' representatives regularly elected while millionaires openly purchase seats in Congress.

Gompers' "great achievement," the Clayton Amendment to the Sherman Anti-Trust law, has been used but only against Labor. The Seaman's Act and the Child Labor Law have been knocked out. In the Coronado Case the trade union treasuries were opened to raids by the capitalists. The Daugherty injunction, outlawing 400,000 railroad men, is only the latest of a long line of acts of oppression and usurpation, testifying to the political incompetence of official Labor's policy.

More serious, however, than even the unprecedented suppression of the workers' rights, has been the [illegible] their [illegible] resulting from the Gompers policy. Our trade unions have been opened to every political crook posing as a "friend" of Labor. These parasites on the working class have then become the source of corruption in the leadership of the unions. Cold cash paid in hand for endorsements as "friends" of Labor, has created almost a regular profession among certain labor officials, of delivering the labor vote. This has, in turn, become the source of industrial corruption, for it is but a step from such political betrayal to industrial betrayal; it is an easy transition from delivering the labor vote according to capitalist wishes, to delivering a strike vote for the same reasons. Capitalist political parties in the trade unions have been the most prolific source of corruption.

Most stultifying of all of the effects of the "nonpartisan" policy of Gompers, has been that upon the mass of the trade union membership.

It has checked the intellectual development of the entire labor movement, and smothered the growth of class consciousness. The whole capitalistic point of view is injected with poisonous effect into the labor movement as the direct result of accepting capitalist parties as the political expression of the workers.

Almost the same social concepts, with their inevitable consequences, are expressed by our labor papers and leaders as by the capitalist press and capitalist officials. The inevitable result is a united front of capitalist press and Government with the labor press and officialdom, against every movement tending to give the workers a clear understanding of their class position in society. These capitalist chains binding the brains of the workers and keeping them in slavery, can only be broken when the workers are organized politically as a class.

Workers Waking Up at Last

The crushing drive of the "open shop" campaign is shaking the workers into some recognition of the facts above cited. The open co-operation of all the capitalist parties in this assault upon Labor with the accompanying armies of gunmen, troops, industrial courts, injunctions, prisons, raids, murders, capitalist financing of the processes of "justice," and the resulting demoralization and weakening of the entire trade union movement has finally cracked the hard shell imposed upon the American movement by the Gompers bureaucracy. A political awakening is taking place.

Undoubtedly one of the big factors in bringing about the new attitude on the part of Labor has been the centralization of power in the capitalist Government which has dramatized and brought into bold relief those facts of class-government which were hitherto obscured in the intricacies of 48 different State governments. In the period following the war the economic problems of the capitalist class have forced it to deal with Labor more and more on a national scale and use the Federal Government for suppression where theretofore [illegible] Labor. The unscrupulous use of the centralized state power by the capitalists has awakened the workers as no other factor has done.

One of the most significant evidences that this is so, is seen in the disintegration of the capitalist party lines. For several years it has become a common thing to see the Republican and Democratic machines unite against candidates of various workers' or farmers' groups. This is now being followed by frank public acknowledgment on the part of prominent and influential members of both, that there is no vital difference between the capitalist parties; the more militant capitalist politicians are urging the amalgamation of their twin parties, because they sense the inevitable coming of the Labor Party into the field, and they fear it.

The old political line-up in America is practically gone, and the clear headed, both among the capitalists and the workers, are announcing the fac.

The Conference for Political Action

The movement for a Labor Party has been favorably received in the ranks of Organized Labor, sweeping thru the unions with particular force in the past year or so. The sixteen railroad unions are committed to the idea, as are the miners, the typographers, the clothing workers, innumerable city central bodies, State Federations, farmers' organizations, and liberal groups all over the country. The movement found a timid expression in the Conference for Progressive Political Action which met in Chicago early in 1922, and which has called a second national conference to be held in December.

The pioneer work in this movement, as in many other things came from the Chicago Federation of Labor. This organization was the initiator of the Farmer-Labor-Party, the first attempt to give expression to the trade unions on the political field. The practical success of the party has been far outstripped by its moral influence which has undoubtedly been a large factor in bringing to a definite expression the movement for working class action on the political field.

The Chicago Conference for political action above mentioned was a distinct disappointment to those who hoped for the immediate formation of an inclusive Labor Party. There were too many feet on the soft-pedal, too much timidity and hesitation, a lack of any clear-cut objective. This spirit of "do-little" was especially evident in the fact that not one thought it advisable to point out the chief obstacle to the formation of a real party of Labor. That obstacle is Gompers. A prime fault of the Conference was that no one raised a voice to point out this fact. The next Conference, with the impetus of a year's development, should get a new spirit into the work. It should positively and definitively commit itself to the formation of a Labor Party, and prepare to fight the reactionary forces which threaten the success of such a move.

What Kind of a Party?

The problem of what kind of a party should or could be created at this time is of vital importance. There are some general requirements which can be stated. The Labor Party must be definitely rooted in the economic needs of the workers, it must be a party of the working class, yet it must be broad and inclusive enough to take in all the various political parties and groupings of Labor. The first is essential to its existence—past history of third parties in American politics has surely demonstrated clearly enough that a miscellaneous collection of people with a grievance is not a basis upon which a permanent party can be founded. The rock of working class interests is the only possible basis for a powerful new party in America. On the other hand it must make every effort to bring into its confines all the existing working-class parties. Not only must there be no exclusion of any group or groups, but there must be a positive effort to unite in common action all the forces of Labor on the political field. A political United Front of Labor against the capitalists is the need. Anything short of this will not meet the historical situation.

Such a united front in the Labor Party means that existing political groupings must be permitted to retain their identity, subject only to the requirements of common action of all groups so united in seizing the political power from the capitalist parties. Such retention of identity by the component groups of the Labor Party is not in the nature of a concession to prejudice, to organization patriotism, or bowing to an insuperbable obstacle. It is a desirable thing that a Labor Party shall not be a homogeneous mass. The conflict of ideas, certain to come from contact with each other by definite groups within such a Party, will be the most positive guarantee against stagnation and sterility. The health of the Labor Party demands that unions, groups, and parties, entering into the federated Labor Party, shall continue their own organization identities [illegible]

The Workers Must Dominate

In order to mobilize all the potential strength of the Labor Party, it is necessary that it make provision for including the exploited small-farming class along with the industrial workers. But the actual workers, being the only class whose interests give them a clear-cut line of action at all times, must dominate the party. The working class is the revolutionary element, it is the element which gives the dynamic energy which alone can create a party capable of coping with capitalism. It must be a Labor Party in fact as well as name.

This means that it must have the backing of the trade unions. The trade unions are the only possible basis for a successful Labor Party. Not alone must such a party have its roots there, but it should be organized on the initiative of the unions. The historic mistake of the Socialist Party in this country, the fact which largely accounts for the decline of that organization, is that it did not recognize this fundamental truth. It thought that it could recruit its strength from the miscellaneous citizenry. But only on the solid rock of the industrially organized masses can a powerful political party be created in America. The power of all Labor Parties in Europe is directly to be measured by the backing given by the trade unions. The only workers' Government, the Soviet Republic, has its roots solidly in the trade unions; when the Labor Party of England takes over power there, the trade unions will be the source of its strength. To "Left" and "Right" parties alike, the trade unions are fundamental.

Class Program Indispensable

In addition to being working-class in membership, the Labor Party program must be working-class in spirit and form. It would be a calamity to attempt, as was done at the Political Conference last spring, to warm over a batch of discarded middle-class phrases and substitute them for a radical and searching analysis of the workers class position in society and a clear-cut solution for their problems.

The supreme task of the December Conference is to form a general Labor Party. Its program, to be of working-class character, should challenge capitalism, and hold up the ideal of a workers' society. This would tend to free the workers' minds from capitalistic methods of thinking, from capitalist concepts, and capitalist prejudices. A program with such a basis would be fit for a party determined to engage in struggle with the powers of capitalism at every point, and substitute in their place the power of the organized workers.

A militant Labor Party must be, essentially, a party of battle. All of those proximate things, "immediate demands," which do not necessarily threaten capitalism itself, must still be set forth as goals to be won by the power of the organized masses, not by compromise and class collaboration. Only in this manner can the Labor Party gather greater and greater strength, and bring closer its inevitable goal of the workers' society. Only in this way can it avoid the corruption and decay which surely comes from collaboration with capitalism.

Bureaucracy Must Be Defeated

Even as in the proposals for amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions, the movement for the Labor Party will have to fight and defeat the reactionary officialdom.

Indeed, not the least value of the Labor Party movement, which is gaining such headway, will be the lining up of the progressive forces, timid though some may be, against the black reactionaries of the type of Gompers and his Crown Prince, Matthew Woll. A good fight for the Labor Party will also help the amalgamation movement, just as the amalgamation movement is going to give power and vigor to the Labor Party itself. The two movements are closely related and mutually assist each other. Gompers' political policy of rewarding his capitalist friends, is one of the props upholding the bureaucratic structure of his machine in the trade unions. Let us join hands in knocking it out from under him.

All Local Leagues, and all members and sympathizers, should immediately throw all their power back of the demand of a Labor Party. Every possible voice should be raised, in the local unions, in the city central bodies, in the district councils, state federations and International Unions. Resolutions should be presented and thoroly discussed. The reasons for a Labor Party should be made clear; the form which it should take should be discussed, the character of its membership and its program should be well debated. The movement for a Labor Party should be shown as related to the movement for the amalgamation of the craft unions,—the one for a United Front of the workers on the political field as the other is on the industrial field. Intelligent political action is as necessary as intelligent industrial action.

Big, strong unions are not enough; the workers must also have a big, strong party.

Let Labor's voice be heard demanding a Labor Party. Our work, as League militants, is to see that the demand is as loud, firm, and definite as possible. We must carry the battle to the reactionaries, and put every one of them on record. We must throw all our strength toward the uniting of Labor's forces, politically and industrially; this means that we must relentlessly fight against all those who block the path of progress. The reactionary officialdom must be made to understand that the day of their policies is gone; they must fall in line or be swept aside by the march of history. We must remove the calamitous disgrace of our present status, the only great labor movement of the world without its own political party.

The F. S. R. Army of 50,000 AND THE R. A. I. C.

There are 50,000 in the FRIENDS OF SOVIET RUSSIA (FSR) army. There are tens of thousands more friends of Soviet Russia than this. But to now we have found 50,000 comrades and sympathizers who will, if given a duty, make a conscientious attempt to perform it.

The RUSSIAN-AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CORPORATION (RAIC), organized by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, has issued an invitation to the FSR to assist it in a campaign to sell a million dollars' worth of stock, the proceeds from such sales to be used to aid in the regeneration of Russia.

Not only has the RAIC invited the FSR, but the RAIC invites every labor union, all workers' organizations to assist in the economic reconstruction of the first Workers' Republic.

The FSR has accepted this invitation. It has accepted it in the name of our 50,000 FSR army.

And now, let us "SUPPOSE" for a single minute. Suppose every member of the FSR army would buy a share of RAIC stock at $10. Suppose in addition every member of the FSR army would obligate himself to sell a share of RAIC stock. And suppose also that every member of the FSR army who is also a member of a labor union, would induce his union to buy a BLOCK OF STOCK out of the money in the union treasury.

Figure it up for yourself, friends. It looks to us as if the RAIC would have to increase its capital stock to TWO MILLION in order to get us all in, if what we "SUPPOSE" would be what we would DO.

We know that there are among us a few with a bit of a balance in the bank. And then we also have the poor, the poorer and the poorest in our 50,000 army. But there's a way for everyone to buy a share. Those who can afford to buy several shares of RAIC stock should do that. Those who can buy one share and remit the full $10 at once, should do that. Those who cannot do this can remit one dollar and pay the balance in instalments.

AND EVERYONE IN THE ARMY CAN SELL A SHARE. AND EVERY UNION MAN IN THE ARMY CAN ARISE AT THE NEXT MEETING OF HIS UNION AND SAY: "I MAKE THE FOLLOWING MOTION—THAT THIS UNION PURCHASE A BLOCK OF STOCK IN THE RAIC."

Big Educational Drive in Bronx, Nov. 25--26th, Many Volunteers Wanted

All comrades and sympathizers who want to have a wide-awake class conscious, working class in The Bronx should come up Saturday and Sunday Nov. 25th and 26th, to help distribute free copies of The Worker and folders announcing the lectures in the Workers' Hall. Drive will continue on Dec. 2nd and 3rd.

No collections, no talking, just handing out this educational propaganda from house-to-house. Everybody ought to get on the job. The Workers' Hall must become the educational centre of The Bronx. Lectures are being arranged in English, Jewish and Russian. They must be advertised. Not only thru the press, but better still the lecture announcements will be put in the hands of as many workers as we can reach. Here is the way: House-To-House Campaign. Don't forget, Nov. 25th and 26th. Come up and do your bit. Workers Hall, 1347 Boston Road.

O Yes! Dec. 3rd. The English Branch of The Bronx and The Young Workers League start their lecture series with Comrade Salvatore Iarossi, Organizer, Italian Workers Federation, speaking on "The Fascisti and The Italian Situation."

Successful Anniversary Meetings in New England

A series of very successful meetings were held in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut during the past two weeks. Most of the meetings were celebrations of the Fifth Anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia.

Comrade H. M. Wicks spoke at most of the meetings and concluded the tour last Sunday in Boston and vicinity. In the afternoon he spoke to a crowded house in Paine Memorial Hall in Boston and in the evening in Norwood, a Boston suburb. The Boston meeting was one of the best meetings that has been held in that city since the old days of 1919, when mass meetings drew thousands of people. From all indications the movement in that part of the country is definitely on the up-grade.

In Worcester and Springfield there were also good celebrations. A meeting was held in the heart of the district where the textile strike occurred last Spring and Summer and where a labor ticket was in the field. The Providence comrades are the moving factor in this movement and have the confidence of the masses of workers there.

Comrade J. Louis Engdahl addressed a meeting in Stamford, Conn., Friday evening and was the principal speaker at a large and enthusiastic celebration in Hartford, Sunday afternoon. Bruce Rogers also spoke at a large anniversary celebration held at Bridgeport, Conn., Sunday afternoon. Rogers spoke Saturday night at Brooklyn, New York.

Comrade Thomas J. O'Flaherty is in the district for a few dates and good meetings are anticipated by the comrades who are enthusiastic over the upward trend of the movement in their section of the country.

Finance Capital Rebukes Harding Administration for Policy of Isolation—Labor Fakirs' Class Policy Is Vindicated—Socialist-Farmer-Labor Debacle—Johnson, Borah and Other "Radicals" Enemies of Labor—A Forecast of the Future

By H. M. WICKS

The election of Nov. 7 is so bewildering to the editors of both the avowed capitalist and alleged Socialist press that volumes of contradictory explanations for the rebuke to the Harding administration have been published, and not anywhere has there appeared anything approaching a correct estimation of the situation.

The New York Call, organ of the "Socialist" Party, suffers from the same mental incapacity to understand the powerful economic forces at work in the major parties of the nation as do the World and the Times.

Just as Cassidy, the candidate of the Socialist Party for governor of New York State, persisted in blandly informing his audiences that there was no difference between the two old parties before the election, the Call today repeats the inanity.

Everyone in the revolutionary movement who can claim to be a Marxian understands that the Republican Party, since its inception in the middle of the last century, has represented the interests of the manufacturing capitalists and that the Democratic Party since 1912 has been the party of the finance capitalists.

The traditional policy of the Republican Party has been to protect the interests of the manufacturers in the United States against foreign competition by raising tariff walls. This policy of the Republican Party, from 1856 until 1896, was based upon the protection of the "infant industries" of the nation. The past year has seen a recrudescense of the tariff activities of the Republican Party, but not for the purpose of protecting infant industries. Those industries have grown to giant size. The new tariff is to shut out the cheap goods that are being produced by the oppressed workers in the vanquished countries; it is to protect the manufacturing capitalists of the United States and is an effort to isolate this nation from the rest of the world. An impossible thing from the Marxian viewpoint

The Two Imperialisms

Opposed to the Republican policy of isolation in the interest of the manufacturing capitalists is the Democratic policy of entering into relations with other nations of the world for the purpose of defending the interests of the American bankers in the arena of World Imperialism.

Certain muddleheads may interpose an objection to our contention and declare that it was the Republican Party, under McKinley in 1898 that waged the imperialist struggle against Spain, thereby initiating the stage of American Imperialism. In reply to such an argument we contend that there have been many changes since 1898 and that the Imperialism of today is not the Imperialism that annexed Cuba and the Philippines. The Imperialism originating in the Spanish-American War was what is known as colonial imperialism, a thing quite compatible with the interests of industrial capitalists, as is proved in this case by the fact that the war was fought in the interests of the Havemeyer Sugar Trust and the American Tobacco Trust. The Imperialism of to-day is usurious imperialism, or the Imperialism of finance capital. It is this latter type of Imperialism that the Democratic Party of Woodrow Wilson and his successors represent, while the Republican Party remains the representative of the industrial capitalists

The Republican Party came into power in 1921 on the wave of reaction against the Wilsonian policy of entering the League of Nations. The intellectual weapons used by the Republican Party during its Presidential campaign were created by such representatives of the small manufacturer as Senators Johnson of California, La Follette of Wisconsin and Borah of Idaho.

Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel Corporation, selected Harding as the candidate on the industrial capitalists' ticket. Gary wanted to keep American capital within the confines of this country and its possessions as he knew full well that the export of enormous sums of capital to a foreign country will develop that country, but that it also has a tendency to cause industrial stagnation in the exporting country.

The House of Morgan, on the other hand, which controlled the Wilson administration and the Democratic Party, altho heavily interested in United States Steel, has far greater interests involved in World Imperialism. It can afford to force curtailment of production in American industries, but it cannot afford to risk its enormous loans to the Allies and its other European and Asiatic investments.

The Revolt Against Harding

The recent election was a distinct gain for the finance capitalists of the United States. Usually about four years pass before the reaction from a new governmental policy develops but the total failure of the government and of capitalism to stabilize conditions caused a wave of resentment to sweep the country.

The farmers felt they were being victimized because of the fall in prices of their produce and the high cost of the commodities they purchased. The new tariff was used to create the idea among the farmers that they had been legislated against. The vicious policy of the Harding administration against organized labor also caused repudiation of the administration. The International bankers and their candidates on the Democratic ticket took full advantage of the situation, with the result that in some of the principal strongholds of Republicanism heretofore, the administration forces were swept from power under a veritable avalanche of votes.

This election is by no means evidence of the fact that the voters have endorsed the policies of the Democratic Party in place of the Republican Party. It is simply a revolt against the party in power, a revolt inspired by widespread discontent among great masses of the population. It is the same condition that created the seven million majority for Harding in 1920. The voters are neither convinced Republicans nor convinced Democrats; and the working class least of all. The workers, dominated as yet by capitalist ideology, swing from one old party to the other in order to express their disapproval of the conditions of life imposed upon them.

Another factor in the election was the booze question. Large strata of the population have become disgusted with the hypocritical meddling of a gang of self-appointed ecclesiastical moral censors with the result that in most states candidates who opposed the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution easily defeated their less courageous opponents.

Newberryism

Newberryism also plagued the Republican Party, and the bankers of Wall Street, backing the Democratic candidates, lost no opportunity to lambast the Republican majority that seated the Michigan political crook after he had been convicted of buying an election.

So desperate was the plight of the administration that the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, was sent on a speaking tour in a futile effort to whitewash Newberry and his own actions in defending the Michigan senator who occupied a seat at Washington that cost him $250,000.

Certain elements of the population of these enlightened United States object to the deliberate spending of $250,000 in one state to buy votes and even tho President Harding intervened to save Newberry from expulsion from the Senate and altho Mr. Hughes, at the behest of Harding, prepared an elaborate defense of Newberry that enabled him to retain his seat, the voters of the state of Michigan defeated the Republican candidate on this very question and no other

Buying votes outright is an obsolete practice in most parts of the country, being reserved almost entirely to New York, Chicago, Buffalo, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco and one or two other machine-controlled places. But the buying is handled by a political machine of wide ramifications making it difficult to trace, while Newberry used his personal wealth in his anxiety to achieve a place at the Old Men's Home in Washington

The "Radicals"

In addition to Democrats replacing many Republicans there is also a group of so-called radicals elected on the Republican ticket. These men are the representatives of the petty business interests, that haven't enough vitality to create a party of their own so they support the "insurgents" of the Republican Party. Great rejoicing rises from the camp of the supporters of the farm bloc and a number of labor leaders also acclaim the election a victory for their policy because of the victory of this insurgent bloc

La Follette of Wisconsin is most conspicuous among this group and he is merely a minion of the petty shopkeepers and small farmers of his state and a clever politician who knows how to keep a personal machine intact that will ensure his reelection. He was a pacifist during the war because of his large constituency of German sympathisers, and he is unalterably opposed to any person or organization that recognizes the fact that a class struggle exists. Senator Borah of Idaho is a notorious labor-hater who would use any methods to crush organized labor. Hiram Johnson of California is one of the most bitter enemies of labor that ever sought public office, a self-seeking demagogue and the one individual more than any other who is responsible for Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings remaining in San Quentin penitentiary in California, after it is known to all the world that they are innocent and were convicted on perjured testimony. Governor Stephens, who succeeded Johnson as governor of California, is a satellite of the insurgent senator and would have pardoned Mooney at a word from Johnson. Not less contemptible was the attitude of Johnson toward the imprisonment of Ford and Suhr, also victims of California frame-ups, who have spent nearly ten years behind prison bars in that state for their service to the working class. These enemies of labor are described by the Socialist Daily Call as "men of independent outlook and social vision." But then not much can be expected of the Socialist Party in New York, considering the fact that the So- [illegible] Party in New York [illegible] Farmer-Labor Party of New York, formed the American Labor Party, and nominated their candidates for office. Tuesday's election resulted in the combined forces of the Socialists and Farmer-Laborites polling a much smaller vote than had been previously polled by the Socialist Party alone.

The American Labor Party of the State of New York was not in a position to reach the masses of the working class, but those that it did reach did not support it for the simple reason that there was no difference between the campaign of the Socialists and that of the Democrats. Cassidy, the Socialist candidate, devoted his time to alternately berating Smith, the Democratic nominee, and Miller, the Republican incumbent, and at the same time declaring that the Socialist Party was not contemplating revolutionary measures in case it won the election. He told his audiences that there was no difference between the two old parties and the voters evidently thought he should have also included the Socialist Party in that category.

The Socialist Party is a "stinking carrion" that is being dragged around by its creators, Hillquit, Oneal, Berger & Co., and they are becoming weary of their burden and are desperately hoping that some sort of party — any party — will be created that will enable them to gracefully dispose of the carcass. Apparently no one wants the thing and they haven't the decency to bury it, so they keep insisting that it is alive despite its obvious decay

The Leaders of Labor

Gompers and his reactionary crew in control of the American Federation of Labor machine have issued statements to the effect that the elections are a vindication of the old policy of "reward your friends and punish your enemies." This flunkey of capitalist imperialism, who used the Federation as an auxiliary to the House of Morgan, which was the United States government, during the war, gloats over the Democratic victories and calls them a triumph for labor conveniently ignoring the action of Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic administration in relation to the threatened mine strike of 1920 and the wholesale murders of workingmen, women and children in hundreds of strikes under the Wilson regime

The Gompers policy has been of tremendous value to the old party politicians and has prevented the organization of a labor party for at least two decades. He professes to be neutral as between the Republican and Democratic Parties, but in most cases he defends the Democratic Party. In New York State labor supported A. Smith and the Tammany Democratic ticket and the "labor leaders" made speeches and devoted columns of space in the labor press in praise of this aggregation of political highwaymen, in spite of the fact that Smith, as governor of New York, used the state constabulary, an aggregation of murderous cossacks, to slaughter men in the great steel strike in Lackawanna in 1919.

Some of the European reactionaries in the labor movement evade the political struggle of labor by pleading that they are neutral as between the Communist parties and capitalist parties, but the Gompers policy is even worse than that of the traitors to labor on the other side of the ocean. He openly expresses his hatred of independent political action on the part of labor and indulges in the vilest vituperation against Communists

The Chicago Conference

Some of the leaders who participated in the farcical conference for political action held in Chicago last February are also declaring that this election is a vindication of the Gompers policy. Labor can expect a number of leaders to appear at the coming December conference and endeavor to block the organization of a labor party by reaffirming the vicious policy adopted in February.

A number of International Unions, State Labor organizatons and Central Labor bodies are attending the conference for the purpose of trying to launch a labor party, based upon class lines. Such a proposition will be hotly contested by such reactionaries as Johnston of the machinists union, whose actions last February led many to believe he was simply baiting those members of organised labor who favored independent political action in order to betray them into following the Gompers policy.

The International Typographical Union is on record in favor of the establishment of a labor party at the December conference and its officers and delegates are bound by the mandate of the Atlantic City Convention to fight for the launching of such a party, irrespective of the attitude of other delegates.

In order to prepare for future struggles on the political field every militant in the labor movement should use his greatest efforts to force the immediate creation of a genuine labor party, and not the miserable caricature that evolved from the Socialist-Farmer-Labor Conference in New York City.

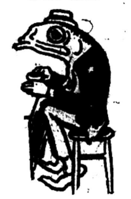
Must Eliminate Adventurers

The labor party must be organized by the labor unions and such odious political adventurers as Morris Hillquit, Victor Berger and the rest of the misleaders of labor in the Socialist Party must be eliminated. A party that burdens itself with these discredited creatures assumes a tremendous handicap to start with and the party of labor cannot afford to assume responsibility before the organized workers of this country for the long record of criminal betrayal by the Socialist Party.

Militants everywhere should strive to create sentiment for such a party and should take a leading part in formulating its policies so that a mass party of labor can be created. At the same time it is imperative that a party based upon the principles of the proletarian revolution be maintained and strengthened for the purpose of convincing the mass of workers that will be attracted to such a mass party that the solution for the ills of the present day lies along the path of revolution and proletarian dictatorship.

Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG



The Poor Fish Says:

Reforming the world has been tried thousands of times without success.

Join the Workers Party

Representatives of the Workers Party are sitting today as fraternal delegates to the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International. They are bringing to this great gathering of the militant spokesmen of labor the world over reports on the activities of enlightened labor in this country, functioning thru the Workers Party, still in its birth year.

These are days of international action, both on the part of the workers and their exploiters, and the Workers Party draws its inspiration from and gives its adherence to the Communist International, the driving force behind the developing world social revolution.

Our delegates will return to us. Reports will be made to the party membership on the discussions and actions of the Communist International with which every member must become acquainted.

The workers of the United States will play an increasingly important part in the international struggle. To function effectively they must not only work thru their labor unions, for unity in the economic struggle, but they must develop power politically thru the Workers Party, the militant vanguard in the workers' fight for power

Workers' organizations that have hitherto held aloof from direct contact with the Workers Party are now joining following referendums of their memberships. We have reported lately the affiliation with the party of the Scandinavian and Czecho-Slovak federations, formerly affiliated with the Socialist Party.

Large masses of the English-speaking workers must be reached and brought into the Workers Party during the next few months. Many will come in voluntarily. Others will be reached thru campaigns of education and organization. Let everyone join this effort. We must build a powerful party before the hour comes for the gathering of the Fifth World Congress of the Communist International next year. You must help! You can always get any information you want from the National Office, Workers Party, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Union Men and All Workers,
ATTENTION!

The Brownsville Section of the Workers Party invites delegates of labor unions and all progressive union men and women to attend a mass meeting of workers to be held at the Brownsville Labor Lyceum, 229 Sackman St., Tuesday, December 5, at 8 P. M. Speakers will be present who will discuss the question of a LABOR PARTY in the United States. All workers are invited. Admission is free. Come and discuss with other workers the question of the formation of a party of labor, the most pressing political labor question at this time.

United Polish Federation Establishes Bureau in National Office

The consolidation of the Polish Federation of the Workers Party with the Alliance of the Polish Workers has been completed. By action of the former Bureau of the Workers Party the federation headquarters have been moved to New York and the secretary of the Federation Comrade W. Kulcsycki will have offices in the National Headquarters. Through this consolidation some seven hundred new members come into the Workers Party.

All communications in regard to the work of the Polish Federation should be addressed to W. Kulcsycki Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City

[illegible]

While the [illegible] wiped out [illegible] Allied victory [illegible] to them, we have the German workers still kneeling in [illegible] fashion before the Versailles peace.

German labor is being kicked in the face by its own exploiters as well as by foreign capitalist governments because it did not [illegible] footsteps of Russian labor, on Nov. 9, 1918, when the [illegible] from his throne.

Against the slogan of Stinnes, the German Rockefeller, of [illegible] production," the "United Socialists" make their feeble ap[illegible] the Versailles Peace and its fake provision for a universal [illegible] hour day. Instead of repudiating all reparations, the results [illegible] not brought on by the working class, the "United So[illegible]" beg their own capitalist, Stinnes, to live up to a forgotten [illegible] of the Versailles Peace.

The fourth anniversary of the German Republic was thus a [illegible] and forgotten thing because capitalism still rules in Ger[illegible] with the support and connivance of the "United Socialists."

[illegible] Gregory Zinoviev, chairman of the Communist International, [illegible] making his report to the Fourth World Congress now in ses[illegible] at Moscow, declared that the possibilities for the spread of [illegible] world social revolution seemed most hopeful in Germany.

Let us hope that Zinoviev's prophecy of working class victory in Germany may soon be fulfilled. Surely the nationalist spirit that inspires the Turkish workers and peasants to daring against the Paris Allies is not stronger than the class-consciousness of the oppressed wage slaves that wiped out Kaiserism but did not prove strong enough to press forward, four years ago, to complete victory. Let the German workers show, however, and that soon, how much they have learned during these four years. Their first step will be a complete repudiation of, not an appeal to the Peace of Versailles.

Postpone Lausanne Conference

Altho the British and French diplomats have been intensely anxious to get the Turkish representatives into a conference room at Lausanne, Switzerland, it developed that their own differences were so great that the "peace talk" had to be postponed a week, from the 13th to the 20th.

In the meantime Great Britain is making much of her magnanimity toward Angora rule in Turkey, referred to by the Associated Press correspondent as "exhaustless patience and moderation."

Mind you, this patience manifests itself in such altruistic acts as the withdrawal of British censorship over the Turkish press, and the abolition of Allied supervision over Turkish telegraph lines. How grateful the Turks should be for this moderating British tyranny. But the Turks are not thankful. They continue to press their claims that the British generals and their armies clear out of Turkish territory. These Turkish workers and peasants, who recently ordered the Sultan into the discard, are getting almost as objectionable as the Russian bolsheviks.

These Turks are even making the startling demand upon foreign lands that they withdraw their missions, that if they desire to send anyone to the Near East that they send technical experts and not religious propagandists. Perhaps the Turks have come to the conclusion that Standard Oil domination of the Near East goes hand in hand with capitalist support of hordes of missionaries poured into the country to save the souls of the Turks for the next world, while they are being robbed of their earthly possessions in this life.

The imperialist rivalry that caused France for a time to support the Turks, and the British to aid Greece may be ironed out during the coming week, resulting in a united imperialist front against Turkey. Then again they may not. In any event the salvation of the Turkish peasants and workers lies in but one direction, an aggressive advance against all their capitalist oppressors, both within and without, and this will no doubt be the position of their representatives when the Lausanne Conference finally gets under way.

Powder Trust Profits

The American Powder Trust, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Co., that supplied "more than one-half of the powder used by the allies" during the world war to blow Germans, Hungarians, Austrians, Bulgarians and Turks into eternity, hasn't had its profits interfered with by Harding's Washington Conference for the limitation of armaments.

Following in the footsteps of the Standard Oil Trust, the Powder Octopus has declared a 50 per cent stock dividend in the form of 200,000 shares of a par value of $100 each.

Under the promise of this increased ability to exploit labor in the powder industry, the price of du Pont shares on the New York Stock Exchange have gone up in price during the last six months from $115 to $169.25 per share. This is a gift of more than $50 on each share to stockholders in du Pont powder.

The Powder Trust has been built up out of 100 different corporations thru acquisition of their capital stocks. Its great profits have enabled it to expand into other fields of exploitation thru the du Pont American Industries Co., that is the largest individual stockholder in the General Motors Corporation, the automobile trust, that was also well fed by the war.

The Powder Trust slaves in Delaware have not only been content to turn out these huge profits for their masters, but they have also kept T. Coleman du Pont, the powder senator, in the United States senate, commonly known as "The Millionaire's Club."

It is even proudly announced that 3,342 employes of this corporation hold stock in it, probably a share or two each. This small holding has no significance in directing the affairs of the industry.

When these facts are considered one begins to realize the great work of education and organization that must be carried on to build up a real labor movement in this country. Centralization of power in the hands of great capitalists in the oil and powder industries must and will develop powerful and centralized organizations of the workers.

Capitalism in the powder industry, as in all other industries, is going thru that evolutionary development that will finally blow itself out of existence.

"Political Expediency"

We are told that most of the "leaders" of the farmers and workers, who again espoused the cause of "nonpartisanship" this year, operated thru the republican and democratic parties purely as a "matter of expediency."

It was an affair of "expediency" that resulted in Berger, the "Socialist," trading with LaFollette, the republican in Wisconsin. We might inject that while both LaFollette and Berger were elected, the "Socialist" candidate in the second Milwaukee district was defeated by a "LaFollette Republican."

It was "political expediency" that caused Socialist traitors thruout the world to favor the war when it broke in 1914, that resulted in their voting war credits, that inveigled them into the war cabinets to preserve "civil peace" so that the slaughter might continue without internal disruption, that is even now causing them to retreat before the onslaughts of capitalism's offensive in order to maintain their sacred "legalistic" existence, clothed with a comfortable respectability.

"Political expediency" is the alibi of a traitor. It is a sweet sounding phrase that is none the less poisonous in rendering labor powerless in the historical struggle for its own emancipation. The champion of "political expediency" is the servant of the capitalist class.

It was because it refused to admit the slaves of "political expediency" to its ranks, that the Communist International won the lasting hatred and enmity of Socialism's renegades everywhere.

The Communist movement will continue to fight as it has fought against any effort to use "political expediency" to chloroform effective working class action. Workers! Watch the "leader" who talks about "political expediency."

Third Party or Labor Party

Politicians who claim to speak for "labor," and who fail to utilize their consciences in making their claims, are busy studying the results of the elections, Nov. 7.

They are adepts at claiming "victories," here, there and everywhere, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Montana, Oklahoma, Nebraska, with a few other states and localities thrown in.

The American working class is endowed with a host of political soothsayers. Gompers, labor's chief political mendicant, as usual, claims a victory for his "reward and punish" beggary. Johnston, head of the machinists, who traveled fast from the Socialist Party, thru the Farmer-Labor Party, to placing last February's Chicago Political Conference as a tail to Gompers' political kite, is also claiming "victory" in the form of the election of two "progressive Democrats" in place of Pomerene and Hitchcock. The railroad brotherhoods play a lone game to protect their own special interests. The Nonpartisan Leaguers, living up to their name, play the game from every angle, from an endorsement of La Follette in Wisconsin, running candidates of their own in the old-party primaries, both or either, to open espousal of the cause of the Farmer-Labor Party, as in Minnesota. It is in the midst of this chaos that the Farmer-Labor and the Socialist Parties have been lost, even as children in the wilderness.

Something will come out of this confusion. This something must be a Labor Party, uniting all the political forces of labor on a class program, and not a "Third Party" that can only be a "Liberal Party," standing on some vacillating platform espousing a doddering labor liberalism, a duplicate of British Lloyd George liberalism. Gompers and Johnston and the Brotherhood chiefs will be for such a "Third Party" before they will be for a Labor Party. More than that, we believe they would espouse the organization of a "Third Party" of fugitives from the old parties and labor reactionaries, to defeat a real working-class Labor Party.

There is, therefore, a bitter and hard struggle ahead to achieve independent political action on the part of America's workers. We believe there are increasing masses of workers who feel the necessity for organization of labor's forces along these lines. The immediate task, therefore, becomes one of intensive effort to bring the sentiment of these masses to bear upon Labor's Political Conference to be held in Chicago, starting Dec. 11.

The "Third Party" idea must be crushed in the ranks of America's working class. The fight for a class Labor Party must win.

The Balance of Power

It isn't an accident that results in the New York World (Democrat) and the New York Call (Socialist), displaying similar headlines on the second "morning after" the recent elections.

The World says: "Radicals Capture Balance of Power in New Congress," while the Call claims: "Insurgents to Hold Whip Hand in New Congress," which, first of all, would indicate that the Pulitzer World brand of "democracy" isn't much different than that espoused by the Ervin editorship of The Call.

It is this same editorship that stands aghast at the Communist slogan of "All Power to the Workers" and bewails the creation of a Proletarian Dictatorship to break and destroy all capitalist resistance.

Both the World and the Call build their theories on the assumption that a half dozen "radicals" in the Senate or the House of Representatives in the national Congress at Washington will hold the balance of power between the Republican and Democratic parties.

This after The Call went thru the campaign under the pretense that there was no difference between Republicans and Democrats, except in Wisconsin and a few other places, while we were doubly assured of this fact by such bulwarks of reaction as Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and apostle of the Civic Federation, and Frank Munsey, millionaire publisher and steel trust stockholder.

But the real test comes in the roll calls in Congress that show that Republicans and Democrats are never divided by party lines. The old-party representatives merely divide according to the economic interests they represent, best seen in the vote on the tariff. There is no difference between the Lodge who speaks for a high tariff to protect New England textile profiteers, or a Hiram Johnson who pleads for protection for the California fruit trust.

The Communist movement alone develops the demand for an unrelenting struggle between the workers and their exploiters.

While the reformist "Socialist" and the befuddled laborite raise the chimerical "balance of power" idea, seeking to delude the workers into believing that they have won something by electing some individual, who is "radical" before the election, the Communist urges class unity politically on the part of the workers. In taking this stand the Workers Party alone holds up the standard for effective working-class political action that recognizes no balance of power, that struggles today, and every day, until complete victory is achieved, for all power for the workers.

Every member of the next Congress is definitely committed against the workers' struggle for power, not excepting the "Socialist," Victor L. Berger, who is so much in love with the "balance of power" that keeps capitalism enthroned in Germany, that he loses no opportunity to attack the rule of the workers and peasants in Soviet Russia.

If the Political Conference to be held in Chicago, in December, would make progress for American labor, then it must place its heel upon the neck of the "balance of power" idea.

[illegible] making a budget [illegible] from running an automobile [illegible] He hated [illegible] pianolas and [illegible] that could not afford them.

There are four planks to Mr. Rockefeller's creed. They constitute the fundamentals of good citizenship. Here they are:

1. Work.
2. Practice economy and thrift.
3. Show respect for authority and law.
4. Show reverence for things that are sacred.

Eight hours a day is a "normal working day" and should be practiced by everyone, though six hours is out of the question, and is to be avoided as a thing that is childish and puerile.

As an illustration of economy and thrift he describes his father advising his workmen to use thirty-eight drops of solder to seal a can of oil, instead of thirty-nine, thereby saving $50,000 a year. He gave the entire credit for the saving to his father, ignoring the fact that the ingenuity of the workmen had something to do with the saving.

But as to work, and the practice of those other capitalist virtues, thrift and frugality, we would not have chosen Mr. Rockefeller as an authority upon them. There has never been a moment in his life that he was compelled to work to earn his living. The unpaid labor of countless hundreds of thousands of wage-slaves has made it possible for John D., Jr., and the balance of his parasitic family to live in idleness and intone solemn platitudes to Sunday School classes, knowing full well that his stupid utterances would be published by the army of pen prostitutes who furnish the alleged news for the capitalist press.

Respect for authority and law is also a virtue that the ruling class likes to impress upon the minds of the workers. John D., Jr., has such profound respect for law and order that whenever it does not suit him he simply buys a part of the state government and it does as he orders. His profound respect for constituted authority was shown in Ludlow, Colo., on April 20, 1914, when his bought and paid for thugs and gun-men in the uniforms of the Colorado State Militia burned alive eleven children and two women for the crime of having working people as their husbands and fathers.

This hideous, blood-streaked, psalm-singing, Sunday-school teaching, baby-burning apostle of wage-slavery also adds that we should have reverence for things sacred and holy.

Since his assassination of women and children at Ludlow is proof of the fact that he does not hold sacred the lives of innocent children; since wholesale murder is one of the methods used by this paragon of capitalist virtue to squeeze dividends out of the working class, the only logical conclusion to be drawn is that the one thing held sacred by him and his kind is the one god that is worshipped by all his class, the national god of the United States, of England, of France, of Japan and every other capitalist nation—the Great God Capital.

He wants us to show respect for authority and law—so long as it is his law. We are good citizens so long as we offer incantations to the things that are sacred and holy to him.

That is his code—the code of capitalism.

Opposed to this is the revolutionary concept of the Communist who holds in contempt all the laws of Rockefeller and his class; that profanes all that he holds sacred, but that will eventually force him to give a living example of the first principle of the creed he so glibly espouses—WORK— or starve.

The Price of Your "WORKER"

The subscription price of THE WORKER is five cents per copy, $2 per year. We would like our readers to consider that fact for just a few moments.

We feel that there isn't a single reader of THE WORKER who does not realize that his paper is worth many times that price.

The contents of one issue of the paper are fully equal in importance and value to what is to be found in the best of workers' pamphlets sold for 25 cents a copy, and compares well in value with many pamphlets offered at 50 cents.

Every week THE WORKER comes with its message from the pens of the best writers and illustrations from the most able artists in the world Communist movement. It reproduces the best things written by Lenin, Trotzky, Zinoviev, Radek, Tchitcherin, Kamenev, in Soviet Russia, as well as the interesting contributions of Communists of other lands.

Every development of the working class struggle in the United States is faithfully reported and interpreted from the militant standpoint. The labor movement in this country has produced no better writers than Foster, Browder, Dunne, Wicks, Minor, Olgin, Amter, Kruse, Lore, Lovestone and a host of others.

Our task is to impress upon hundreds of thousands of intellectually-hungry working men and women the real value of THE WORKER. Once persuaded that our paper is the inspiration and the guide they need in their daily struggles, they will become our loyal adherents.

But this missionary work must be carried on by those already numbered in our circle of readers. You must help! You will help! To make your task easier THE WORKER is offering an especially attractive proposition that will be found on Page Five. Look for it! Help put it across!

Purifying the Judges

The judges of the plutocratic court system in this country are going to be purified under the direction of the American Bar Association, the one big capitalist lawyers' union. The aim is toward more respectability. Chief Justice William Howard Taft, nicknamed "Bill the Fat," head of the U. S. Supreme Court, is leading this drive to remove the judiciary still further from the contaminating influences of the masses.

An improvised code of ethics is to be drawn up. No judge is to be allowed to do anything foolish, to wit: suspending a sentence on a man if the man would mow his lawn, ordering a child to be publicly spanked before him, sentencing a man to sleep in the stable with his horses, etc., etc., great judicial crimes actually cited on the first page of the New York Times, Nov. 14.

Taft may stop children from being spanked in public but his recent decision continues to drive new millions of children into the factories to have their lives there crushed out of them by enslaving toil.

Taft may stop courts sending men to sleep with horses but these same courts show no intention of weakening their drive against thinking workers everywhere, filling the prisons with them, both thru federal and state prosecutions.

Labor will not forget the crimes of Judge Wilkerson and Attorney General Daugherty because some loony judge is prevented from sentencing some victim to mow his lawn.

Taft's campaign to purify capitalist justice should be the last step needed to wreck the faith of the entire working class in the capitalist judicial system. For that reason we wish this bloated capitalist clown all success.

Gompers' outfit in control of the New York State Federation of Labor is congratulating itself over the election of the Tammany democrat, "Al" Smith, as governor. It was none other than the "Socialist," Morris Hillquit, who, when leaving for Europe last summer, gave it as his opinion that Smith was a "good man." Are we to understand that the police club has been sheathed in New York State. We are willing to wait for the next strike to decide, to prove that Smith is anti-labor.

Jean Longuet is here telling us about the "peoples" of the nations. The labor politicians are telling us all about the poor "voters." We wonder if they have ever heard that there is an element in society known as the "workers," constituting the working class. "Peoples" and "voters" are delusive terms used by traitors and renegades.

The Freedom of the Freeman

Apropos of William Morris and John Ruskin, Mr. Van Wyck Brooks argues fervidly for a single tax in his column in the Freeman, of Nov. 8th. They, says he, like everyone else but the editors of the Freeman, never knew the simple economic fundamental that access to the land will free man, not only spiritually, but bodily.

Let us suppose that every man has acquired access to his bit of land. Who, then, will work at producing all the modern immense machines and tools necessary for the cultivation of the soil? Who, then, will build the houses necessary for shelter of the human race? Who, then, will print magazines, including the Freeman? Who, then, will do the work in the steel mills, mines, shops, factories, stores and so on?

The answer is No one. Every one will work his little bit of land, access to which according to Mr. Brooks, is the Alpha and Omega of human subsistence. Perhaps, he advocates a return to a peasant stage of production, for that is the logical result of single tax tracked down.

The truth is that Henry George desired only the abolition of rent on improved land; whereas Marx attacked the entire trinity of evils: Rent, Profit and Interest. With one reservation George accepted Capitalism. His theories are so contradictory that they would require an issue of the Worker to refute them all!

One Price! One Price!

It was down in the heart of New York's jammed East Side, where Orchard Street leaves Canal Street and loses itself among push carts, improvised fruit stands, squirming humanity, plunging auto trucks, all walled in on two sides by rows of decrepit stores of all kinds and descriptions.

"Two cents, three for a nickel!" yells the overlord of a pushcart, close against the curb in a continuous stream of English and Yiddish, judiciously intermixed.

Women, old women, grandmothers, mothers, girls, little children, run their hands thru the rotting pears, almost black from decay, and very mushy. A hand finds one, or two, or three less rotten than the rest, the nickel is forthcoming, and the bearer hurries away to some sick child or invalid mother, happy at the opportunity of making some dreary life more cheerful.

"Three cents, two for a nickel!" yells the man at the next pushcart, who sells oranges and more fruit, handled by many hands, is fingered, kept or thrown back according to the degree of softness, meaning rottenness, that responds to the eager and anxious touch.

Down the block the keeper of a real fruit store, not a pushcart peddler argues with a prospective customer, over the sale of other oranges, a little better grade.

"One price, three cents, one price," says the haughty merchant.

"Two for a nickel," counters the mother in Yiddish, who only has a nickel, and two little children she would very much like to give an orange treat.

"One price! One price!" is hurl[illegible] back into her face.

And she departs.

It is the price of capitalism, "On[illegible] Price!" the price that brings in it[illegible] toll of profits, enough to make th[illegible] business worth while, enough t[illegible] keep this parasite social system in power.

Get Ready for War!

Clemenceau, Anti-Soviet War Premier of France, Here Pleading With Bankers for New Blood Bath

LET LABOR REPLY, "NO MORE IMPERIALIST WARS!"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

I sat for an hour and a half with a battery of 100 newspaper reporters in the orchestra pit of the great Metropolitan Opera House in New York City, listening to an old man, Georges Clemenceau, of more than 80 years, French militarist and imperialist, who was France's war premier.

And on the stage with him, and out beyond and up for half a dozen tiers and balconies, sat thousands of bankers and their retinue, the select of Wall Street's financial circles and the [illegible] of the Money Power.

And always at his side Thomas W. Lamont, of the Banking House of Morgan; Colonel E. M. House, who whispered the words of Wall Street into the ears of Woodrow Wilson while he was president, and General "Jack" Pershing, who led the troops of the U. S. A. into Mexico for the oil interests, and into France for the Wall Street financiers.

And as the many words fell from the lips of this white-haired man, I could see them all shaping themselves into four big words, "GET READY FOR WAR!" and the new blood-bath that this spokesman of capitalism meant, so far as I could see, was a new blow against the Russian Soviet Republic.

He is clever, is this old man, in spite of the fact that he has a low forehead like a gorilla, clever and cunning, so you do not wonder they have given him the name of the thing they call "The Tiger."

And because he is clever and cunning, this aged, doddering old man, typifying in every syllable he utters the dying struggle of a passing social order, doesn't call directly for war against Soviet Russia. He raises the bogey of [illegible] German militarism, keeping [illegible] the effigies of Hindenburg and Ludendorff before his audience, rattles the dried bones of the German invasion of Belgium, claims that the Krupps are making more and more guns, and then declares dramatically:

"It is not within your power to live happy, contented and wealthy in America if you know that much of the rest of the world is suffering, that some of it is covered with blood, with want and with pestilence."

And the next morning I saw in all the capitalist press that Clemenceau had come to plead for America's "heart and soul".

To be sure, they were right. The Metropolitan Opera House for the occasion had been turned into a golden temple of American finance capital, and Clemenceau was worshipping at its shrine. And he knew that the "heart and soul" of the American money power is in its pocket book.

This Clemenceau, pleader for capitalism against rising Communism, was as deceitful as a diplomat in building his case. He did not tell his audience that the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia had been urging peace ever since their revolution, five years ago, that they had urged it again and again, at Genoa, The Hague and now at Lausanne. He did not say that it was always French militarism in support of all the border states on Soviet Russia's frontier, in support of Yudenitch, Wrangel, Denikin and the rest, that Imperialist France had poured forth the wealth produced by her workers.

After working up his audience to the point of tearful sympathy for bankrupt, commercially-broken, morale-shaken France, he asked:

"Need anyone fear France?"

"Yes, yes!" came a cry from the third balcony.

"Throw him out, throw him out", came in a chorus from the bankers in the main floor of the big opera house, and from the tiers of boxes.

And the police quickly administered what is known on New York's "Bowery" as "the bum's rush", the victim of which soon found himself on the hard pavement of the street outside, and Clemenceau continued.

The war premier of France himself got back to earth again by addressing an eulogy to Ignatz Paderewski, who ruled for a short time as president of the French resurrected and buttressed Poland. The pianist, who Soviet Russia is the strongest government in Europe today, with the best title to live. The Russian worker is better paid, fed, housed and clothed than he ever has been before, and production in all lines is increasing by leaps and bounds. The workers there feel much better off than Germany, for they are living their own lives and are in a position to flout whatever the other governments in Europe tell them to do. We are the only government left which has not recognized the Soviet Republic, and we will wake up some fine day to find that we have lost the best customer in Europe.

Newbold Goes to Parliament as Communist

J. T. Walton Newbold, candidate of the British Communist Party, was sent to parliament in the recent elections for the Motherwell-Wishaw Division of Lanarkshire, Scotland. This is the division that has one of the best fighting traditions in all Britain, having first sent Keir Hardie, foe of capitalist wars and advocate of labor internationalism, to the House of Commons.

It was the workers in the Motherwell and Wishaw branches that led the fight inside the Independent Labor Party for affiliation with the Communist International.

Newbold was a candidate from this same district in 1918, while still a member of the Independent Labor Party. This year Newbold was opposed by three candidates, a National Liberal (Lloyd George); a Free Liberal (Asquith), and a freak Conservative (Orangeman).

The British Communist Party also had a second candidate, Willie Gallacher, in Dundee, Scotland, where Winston Churchill, one of Soviet Russia's bitterest foes in the last British government, was defeated. During the campaign Gallacher declared:

"If I go (to parliament) I will do what is humanly possible to help break the power of capitalism by forcing all class issues to the front right in their own institutions, thus preparing the way for the revolutionary struggle for power for the working class."

And again:

"I come before you as a Communist and as a member of the Communist Party. The militant forces of the workers of the world are gathering under the banner of the Communist International. Only thru the international solidarity of the working class can the power of the capitalist imperialist be broken forever."

This district elects two candidates. E. D. Morel was the regular Labor Party candidate, and the Communists sought to develop a campaign to win both seats and send both Morel and Gallacher to parliament, winning Dundee for the workers.

The returns indicate that Morel was elected. Gallacher was defeated for the other place. Churchill ran fourth.

Shapurji Saklatvala, Communist, elected as the Labor Party candidate from North Battersea, London, according to the Communist, official organ of the British Communist Party, "combines in his person the aspirations of labor and Communism, but by virtue of his kinship the hopes of the toiling millions of India. Saklatvala personifies the internationalism of the great proletarian battle for emancipation."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE: "Now, gentlemen of the jury, you are to decide on the defendants' guilt or innocence beyond a reasonable doubt. A reasonable doubt is a doubt that is not unreasonable. What is reason? Reason is the application of jurisprudence to the body politic, so that the sacred and time-honored rights of the best people may remain inviolate. (Juror No. 3 has a rush of reason to the head and calls for a drink of water.) If you are satisfied that the defendants with wilful intent conspired to overthrow, deface, undermine, climb up, lean against, crack, bend, push or otherwise transmogrify the pillars of our glorious government you are to bring in a verdict of guilty."

Communists Enter Joliet, Ill., Prison

After a fight extending over two years the Communists who were convicted of state sedition in Illinois for organizing the Communist Labor Party have entered the walls of the state prison to serve indeterminate sentences of from one to five years.

Ludwig Lore, editor of the New York Volkszeitung; Wm. Bross Lloyd, Edgar Owens, Jack Carney, editor of the Voice of Labor, in Chicago, Charles Krumbein, Arthur Proctor, and twelve others are now added to the list of Communist political prisoners in the United States.

Here Is Proposed Program for Workers Party; It Will Be Presented to Convention Dec. 25th

To All Party Branches and Party Members:

Under the provisions of the constitution of the party the agenda of the national convention is to be submitted to the party members for discussion during the period of the election of delegates.

In compliance with this decision the Central Executive Committee has prepared a new program and resolution covering other points on the agenda.

The proposed program appears below in full. Other resolutions will appear in subsequent issues of THE WORKER.

Every party member should read these documents carefully in order to be able to discuss them in the party units when delegates to the party conventions are instructed.

Fraternally yours,

C. E. RUTHENBERG, Executive Secretary, Workers Party.

PROGRAM OF THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA

The Capitalist World, which in 1914 boasted of its great wealth, of its gigantic powers of production, of its smoothly running system of business, of the power and security of its government, is sinking into decay.

Hundreds of billions of wealth have been destroyed by the great war. The financial structure of many European countries is nearing the point of collapse. Industries produce haltingly or have come to a stop altogether. The Capitalist Governments try one trick after the other to maintain their power in the face of the wrath of the suffering masses.

The victorious and vanquished countries of the world war present a picture that is different only in the degree of the suffering and misery

Select Jurors for First of Herrin Trials

By McALLISTER COLEMAN

(Federated Press Correspondent)

MARION, Ill.—The selection of the jurors for the first of the Herrin trials is fast resolving itself into a lineup of opposing economic forces in Williamson county. So rapidly was the first panel depleted, that Judge Hartwell sent out four bailiffs to bring in more talesmen of "approved integrity." On the sixth day of the trial only four jurors, three farmers and a union miner have been found satisfactory to both sides.

Both sides enter exhaustively into the attitude of the prospective juror towards union labor, the right of men to organize and bargain collectively and his feelings in regard to strike breakers. The prosecution has several times used the term "scab." Such questions as "Is he a member of your local?" "Have you contributed thru checkoff to the fund for the defense?" are frequently put to miners by the prosecution.

The farmers of Williamson county have been told by their local ministers, the press and interested parties that the good name of Williamson will be destroyed unless the miners on trial are convicted, and many of them show an eagerness to serve on the jury that belies their statements that they have formed no opinions on the case.

The sum of $50,000 has been finally raised by the Illinois Chamber of Commerce and the campaign among business men and bankers to help finance the state prosecution of the miners ended Nov. 20.

The ruling class of the United States, blind with fury at the record of heroism written into labor history by the miners of Herrin, Ill., last June, when they fought against the outrages perpetrated against themselves their wives and children by a gang of nameless degenerates recruited from private detective agencies and scab-herding employment agencies operating in Chicago's West Side red light district, is using every means at its disposal to destroy these heroes of the working class.

The instrument used to achieve this purpose is the office of the Attorney General of the State of Illinois. The creature who occupies that office, Brundage by name, is a notorious

He subscribed for ten shares after an enthusiastic meeting had been held in Schenectady, the electrical wizard's home, at which Fred Biedenkapp, R. A. I. C. director for the Friends of Soviet Russia, explained the undertaking.

Steinmetz's name has the company of such other prominent endorsers of the plan to rebuild the textile industry in Russia as Eugene V. Debs, Frank P. Walsh, Jane Addams, Prof. Harry Dana, Elsie Clews Parsons, Lillian D. Wald, Charles W. Erwin.

President Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America who has just left Russia, has concluded an agreement whereby American investors in the corporation are guaranteed a minimum of eight per cent dividends, and also the full payment of principal by the Soviet Government. All steps have been taken toward cutting down overhead expenses and making the enterprise successful both for the Russian workers in the factories and the American workers who are investing. Practically every International in the labor movement of the United States and Canada is represented among the purchasers of stock.

For the accomodation of individuals who wish to buy shares but cannot pay the entire ten dollars, which is the amount of one share, at once, arrangements have been made for payment in instalments. Shares should be bought from, and arrangements made directly with, the corporation, 31 Union Square, New York.

[illegible] action at Labor's Conference in Cleveland, Dec 11, the Trade Union Educational League declared there were "too many feet on the soft pedal" at the conference last February in Chicago.

There are even now many indications that a multitude of feet are already seeking a place on the soft pedal that will make an effort to permeate the Dec. 11th conference with the same "timidity and hesitation" that characterized its predecessor of last winter.

Not the least of these indications is the conference called by Senator La Follette and other old-party "progressives" for Dec. 1, at Washington, just one week before the Cleveland gathering. La Follette has been careful to invite all the "labor leaders" who are directing the Cleveland political conference, even including some "Socialists."

La Follette and Co., many of the members of which have been re-elected to six years more in office, intend to continue to work in the old parties. They have no use even for a "Third Party," except to use its possibilities as a threat against the reactionaries at the throttles of the Republican and Democratic machines. Absolutely nothing can be expected from them in aid of a class Labor Party.

The American La Follette is an imitation of the British Lloyd George. Let labor remember that the progressive, pro-labor La Follette, in the opposition, as he is today, becomes the anti-labor, strike breaking Lloyd George in power, using all the forces of the capitalist state to crush the workers, as was the case in the strikes of the British Triple Alliance, the railroaders and the coal miners. Borah, in Idaho, became the prosecutor of Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone, of the Western Federation of Miners, while Johnson, in California, keeps Mooney, Billings, Ford and Suhr in prison and winks at the most extreme so-called state anti-syndicalist law in the nation.

Lloyd George leaned on British labor for years. After he had served the purpose of British reaction during the war and thru the Peace of Versailles, he was given the boot by the conservatives, and what was to be expected but that he should again make overtures to the British Labor Party with its 142 votes. But British labor is thru with its La Follettes, its Borahs, its Johnsons. It is standing on its own feet.

Let American labor depose those leaders in its drive for class political action, who insist on flirting with La Follette's Dec. 1st conference. The timid and hesitating feet must be kicked off the soft pedal in order to produce a militant labor symphony instead of the chaos of sound that the workers now create politically without any resulting benefit to themselves.

Labor must strike the shackles of the old political parties completely from its limbs and build its own class Labor Party, in the words of the Trade Union Educational League manifesto, "uniting all labor's forces against the organized power of the capitalist class."

Get Ready for War!

has now deserted Poland, and is back on the concert stage, sat in the box nearest the stage on Clemenceau's right, surrounded by gorgeously clad women, smiling his reply to Clemenceau's complimentary remarks.

Clemenceau stressed that he had told Lloyd George of England, before 1914, that the war would come. He then told how France had suffered, 20,000 factories destroyed, 90 per cent of her cotton, her linen, her steel industries wrecked.

"We have lost men, we have no money, our reparations haven't been paid", he complained. "It is doubtful if Germany can pay. If she does we won't even get half that the Versailles Treaty promised."

"If France knew three years ago what she knows now", said Clemenceu again, "she would not have consented to an armistice until her armies were in Berlin," and again the bankers who have their debts to collect from France applauded vociferously.

Then Clemenceau kept the eyes of his audience on Germany, asking:

"Do you know that they are manufacturing cannons by the hundreds, that they are making machinery everywhere. The German taxpayer pays, I think, $13, let's say $14,—the French $43. And what are they preparing?

"I tell you plainly, as I told Lloyd George before the war, they are preparing war again. Don't you see what is going on? (More Applause.) Don't you read the papers? Why haven't you heard of the treaty between the Turks and the Germans and the Russians. Look at all this manufacturing that is going on in Germany. Now, I say, that General Ludendorff and Hindenburg are preparing war, civil war to crush the German democracy, if they can.

"Have you forgotten what the Prussians did after Jena, how with 50,000 men they brought Napoleon down? Now it is the same game. It is written, nobody can deny it."

The French, with the British and President Wilson in this country, showed how little they cared for democracy when they allowed the Russian Bolsheviki to face the Kaiser's General Hoffman alone at Brest Litovsk.

If Clemenceau were honest, and no capitalist politician is expected to be, he would have whittled down his speech to the question, "Have you heard of the Rapallo treaty between the Russians and Germans?"

Then he could have talked a little more frankly about his frontier on the Rhine, the next frontier against the westward sweep of the working class revolution.

"We have been guaranteed a good frontier," pleaded this old man, Clemenceau, and he meant capitalism's frontier as well as France's frontier on the Rhine. He continued "England promised it. We haven't received it."

Clemenceau argued that the "New Europe" of the Versailles Peace, depends upon France adding, "And I would say upon America."

Which is without doubt the reason for Clemenceau's coming to America under the bankers' auspices organized into the "Council of Foreign Relations", numbering among its members such 100 per cent American financiers as Otto H. Kahn, Paul M. Warburg, W. W. Atterbury, George Barr Baker, T. Coleman du Pont, the powder king, Robert Goelet, John Hays Hammond, Thomas W. Lamont, Henry Morgenthau, Charles H. Sabin, Mortimer L. Schiff, E. R. A. Seligman, and a host of others, all of whom the chairman announced "hold no office of profit under any government." They are too busy using the government as their instrument. They want the United States government to forgive France her debts so that France may pay her private debts to these bankers.

1. There is going to be another war. The United States can't keep out of it. She must be prepared for it.

2. France is broke. She cannot pay her debts to the United States, not now. Of course, she will pay, perhaps, some time, but the United States, rich, must not press France poor. It was France that made the collection of her debts against Soviet Russia an excuse for waging war against the Workers' Republic.

3. France is capitalism's frontier. The United States and Great Britain must help her hold that frontier.

4. The United States must threaten the German workers into paying the reparations demanded by French imperialism, even by supporting France in her seizure of the Ruhr coal and iron industrial district beyond the Rhine. It must do this even at the expense of curtailing its own "economic imperialism" as a result of which the United States is capturing markets that France is unable to go after on account of the breakdown of her industries.

This war-hungry Clemenceau declared, "I do not see how war will ever be prevented among men."

He is in America, and will tour many cities urging:

"GET READY FOR WAR!"

Let the workers of the United States and France join with the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia in declaring:

"No more imperialist wars!"

The "Tiger" of France

By H. M. WICKS

Georges Clemenceau, the atavism who became war premier of France, is in the United States and is being wined and dined by our plutocratic nabobs. He declares he comes to defend the League of Nations, not as the representative of any country, but as an individual. He further asserts that he wants to convince the people of the United States that France is not militaristic.

Like our own Woodrow Wilson, Clemenceau, the hireling of French Imperialism, even as Wilson was the hireling of American Imperialism, ruminates about the League, entirely oblivious to the fact that history these past four years has destroyed all that there ever was to the League of Nations except the treaty provisions, which were declared inseparable from the League, but which to-day exist without it. There is one thing, however, that must exist if the provisions of the [illegible] treaty to which all the [illegible] Big Four—Wilson, Lloyd George, Clemenceau and Orlando—were [illegible] orators, are to be carried out and that is French militarism.

This old man, the most ancient and the most venomous of the Big Four, journeys to these shores in order to convince the people of America that black is white; that Militarism in France spells Peace for Europe; and to indulge in other sophistry calculated to appeal to the unthinking in this nation.

It is said that Poincaré, present Premier of France, time-server for the Foundry Trust, was not pleased with Clemenceau's visit to this country. Poincaré should not object to his predecessor, who, in the interest of French Imperialism, shared responsibility for formulating the policies that are to-day the motivating force of the French government. The contemptible treaty was written for the specific purpose of permanently enslaving those parts of Germany that are rich in raw materials needed by the Schneider-Creusot concern. The only way to enslave them is through maintaining a standing army, under the shabby pretext of enforcing the Treaty and endeavoring to collect the reparations.

The last thing that Clemencean Poincaré and the other French imperialists desire is that Germany shall ever be in a position to pay off the reparations.

This creature who has represented every ruling class of France the past half century is nicknamed the "Tiger" by the truckling prostitutes of the capitalist press, but never in all his odious existence has he evinced the slightest personal courage. When a young man, at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, he evaded military service by sneaking into some governmental office where his safety was assured. His greed and avarice for personal power is so monstrous that it has few equals in modern history. In this respect he stands with Roosevelt, Wilson and Lloyd George. A miserable hireling of capitalism whose very name will be synonymous with the cowardice, viciousness and violence of this stage of decadent capitalism.

It is significant that Clemenceau has been in constant association with Col. House, of the House of Morgan, who was the real President of the United States during most of the Wilson administration. He is also entertained by Thomas W. Lamont and other representatives of American finance capital. There are interests in common between American and French finance capital and since Woodrow Wilson collapsed at the outset of his pilgrimage thru America to spread the gospel of World Imperialism, as typified by the League, old man Clemenceau is brought over as a substitute attraction. Clemenceau is the megaphone thru which finance capital speaks to the American public.

History will hold Clemenceau, Wilson and the other gladiators of Imperialism responsible for the heaps of corpses that cover Europe to-day, no matter how many trips they make to various countries throughout the world in their efforts to explain their part in the wholesale assassination of the working class dupes who fought in the Imperialist war.

From the soil drenched with the blood of the working class will arise the social revolution, hurling from power the capitalist imperialists and their doddering representatives of the Clemenceau type.

Reports of Fourth World Congress of Communist International on the Way

We deplore the fact that we have been unable, as yet, to publish any of the reports of the Fourth Congress of the Communist International.

However, we have just received the speech of Leon Trotzky, recently delivered on the eve of the assembling of the Fourth Congress of the Communist International, wherein he declares that a revolution in the United States would be most advantageous to the world movement, because this country, economically, is in the most advantageous position and would be able to continue indefinitely in spite of any blockade imposed upon it by capitalist nations.

In a remarkable review of the world situation he emphasizes the necessity for constant propaganda in order to win over the working masses of all countries.

Next week we shall publish Trotzky's speech in full and such other reports as we are able to obtain. Our aim is to keep our readers informed on important happenings everywhere and particularly in relation to our movement, and our readers can rest assured that no effort will be spared to furnish them the information of importance as quickly as possible.

[illegible] White House as President of the United States.

Brundage has been charged by the governor of the State of Illinois, himself a political crook connected with the notorious Thompson machine in Chicago, with using the state funds in playing a game of political chicanery in an effort to advance his own interests.

Since the state fund at the disposal of the attorney general had been exhausted in the game of crooked politics, there were no funds with which to serve the interests of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association of that state, so it became necessary for the Chamber of Commerce to appeal for a special fund so that the Attorney General could employ an army of mercenaries to frame up evidence against the men of Herrin who electrified the organized working class of this nation by resisting the murderous assaults of the scab-herding thugs.

Anti-Labor Propaganda Used

Every avenue of publicity was used by the capitalist class of the nation in order to arouse sentiment against the miners of Herrin. They were depicted by every organ of the manufacturers from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf as beasts who should be exterminated.

Even the "scab shop" President of the United States, elevated to his position by Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel corporation, addressed Congress on the strike situation and indulged in the most venomous diatribe against labor that ever fell from the lips of a human being. This pompous ignoramus, who was selected by Gary because he was a total mental blank, a creature who never had an idea worth repeating and whose thinking is done for him by more intelligent, but obscure, servants of capitalism, branded the heroes of Herrin butchers, murderers and criminals before a grand jury indictment had been returned against them.

Other servile creatures who grovel in the mire before their capitalist masters, even as does Harding, added their quota of lies against the Herrin miners. The Illinois Chamber of Commerce eagerly seized upon these statements and heralded them to the capitalist class of the country, at the same time making an appeal for a slush fund to "investigate" the Herrin mine war. When a Chamber of Commerce wants to bribe perjurers and to hire a gang of detectives to frame up evidence against labor they conceal their real motives by calling their contemplated frame-up an "investigation".

Attorney General Brundage, as the representative of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, altho drawing part of his salary from the State government, announced that he wanted a "real" investigation of the Herrin affair. His idea of a real inquiry is one that will indict the whole population of that district for retaining a spark of manhood.

Want a Blood Atonement

The Chamber of Commerce and the employing class of the United States are not so much concerned about investigating the real cause of the Herrin mine war as they are determined to make an example of the miners of Herrin. The one thing on earth that is detestable to the capitalist bloodsuckers of labor is a slave that refuses to be docile under every oppressive measure capitalism attempts to impose upon him.

Capitalism is shouting for a blood atonement from the miners of Herrin in order to terrorize the balance of the working class of the nation so that they will never attempt to emulate the heroism of the sturdy miners at Herrin who refused to permit the thugs, gunmen, pimps, porch climbers, pick-pockets, procurers, recruited by a private detective agency, hatched in a dive in Chicago, to overrun the district, rape their wives and daughters and commit murder with impunity.

Capitalism wants to impress upon the working class that the most heinous of all crimes is to resist the terror of capitalism.

"Our citizens visiting elsewhere have been compelled to hang their heads in shame," wails a circular sent out by the Illinois Chamber of Commerce. They mean the members of their organization are compelled to hang their heads in shame before other capitalists in the United States because something went wrong with the rule of the masters for a day in Herrin, Illinois. Instead of the workers being slaughtered, these miners defended themselves and the ruling class of Illinois is ashamed because it has not, as yet, been able to wreak its vengeance upon those magnificent men who proved to the workers of the United States and of the world that they can and will defend themselves.

Workers May Strike in Illinois

The workers, who are citizens of Illinois, do not hold their heads in [illegible] class is exterminated from the face of the earth.

The real reason for the lugubrious wail from the Chamber of Commerce of Illinois, the real reason for the [illegible] that hovers over them is because they fear Herrin may be repeated elsewhere.

The workers everywhere are watching developments in Herrin. They view with sardonic smiles the attempts of the Attorney General of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce to get a jury that will suit his purpose and convict the miners who have been indicted on the perjured testimony of stool pigeons. Particularly are the workers of the state of Illinois watching developments and the sentiment is spreading like wildfire thruout the state for a general strike in case the Chamber of Commerce secures convictions at Herrin.

Altho every Union has contracts with employers the officials of many Chicago unions openly declare that in case of a conviction secured by the Chamber of Commerce hireling, Brundage, they will not be able to hold the membership in line and that they have no inclination to do so anyway.

Such sentiment augurs well for the future of the labor movement in that section of the country and all militants should take advantage of that situation in order to crystalize the militant sentiment against the Herrin persecutions into action.

Another Farcical Trial

In the summer of 1919, during the steel strike, four blacksmiths were murdered in cold blood at Hammond, Indiana, by private guards of the Standard Steel Car Wheel concern and city police of Hammond. These men were part of a small group of pickets that had been stationed by their union near the entrance of the concern for the purpose of peaceful picketing. The employers saw a number of their prospective scabs stop and talk to the union men with the result that they were having a great deal of difficulty obtaining slaves.

One morning the police and private thugs opened fire upon the unarmed pickets without a moment's warning. Twenty were severely wounded and four men fell dead. The writer of this article was in Hammond in less than two hours after the tragedy and verified the fact that every one of the dead men had been shot in the back. When the guards and police drew their guns the pickets started to run, as they had been threatened with death unless they stopped picketing. There has never been a more coldblooded murder in the annals of the labor movement in America. Yet not one of the murderers was arrested until months afterwards, when the blacksmith's union started a legal battle and charged the police and the other thugs with murder.

After over three years a legal fight is being staged in Federal Judge Anderson's court in Indianapolis in an effort to at least force the Standard Steel Car company to pay the families of the dead men enough to enable them to exist for a short time. The Blacksmith's union has raised a defense fund to prosecute the cases.

No President of the United States has branded the murderers on the Hammond police force for what they are and there have been no demands from the Chambers of Commerce for a searching "investigation" of the murders of these four workers.

The Standard Steel Car concern is controlled by the Mellon interests, Wall Street and some large bankers in other parts of the country. Perhaps Secretary of the Treasury Mellon could enlighten the country newspaper publisher, Mr. Harding, regarding the slaughter of the workers at Hammond and prove to the satisfaction of the head of the capitalist government of these United States that the system of private guards is a fine thing so long as it functions as it did in Hammond, but that in cases like Herrin it should be supplemented by the United States Army, an institution Harding threatened to use against the rail strikers.

Herrin and Hammond furnish excellent contrasts and it does not require a great deal of intelligence to get a true perspective of the [illegible] in which capitalist class justice functions.

The wives and other dependents of the men murdered in Hammond may never get a penny of the Mellon millions, and the working class has no recourse in those cases. The workers are dead who were on the firing line in Hammond.

But in Herrin there are only three of the miners dead; killed unarmed by the thugs the day before the thugs themselves were annihilated. The others are alive and the workers of the State of Illinois and the United States must see to it that they remain alive in spite of the chorus of calumny that arises from the fetid throats of the buzzards in the White House and in the Chambers of Commerce of the nation.

"Appeal to Reason" Passes

The Federated Press carrie obituary notice of "The Appeal Reason", Girard, Kansas, with comment that, "It never recov from its dubious pro-war stand."

We know of no tears that w shed, except perhaps among so-called "Socialists". The "Ap Army" quit when Louis Kopelin Emanuel Haldeman-Julius turned sheet over to the jingoes during war, just as any army deserts w it is betrayed by its leaders.

Wayland made of "The Appe a propaganda organ with a w appeal. Warren increased its circul tion thru one sensation after another always carrying a thread of milit labor activity, and a million copies came from the presses each week.

But then the Social-Democratic League inaugurated its jingo regime in "The Appeal" office. The Spargo and Russell pro-war propaganda crept more and more into its columns. Carl D. Thompson carried on an at ack against the Socialist St. Lo Anti-War Stand. W. J. Ghent foug he Bolsheviki, denouncing Trots and Lenin as pro-German. Then th government sent the Spargo-Kope in-Russell mission to Europe to hel keep the European workers faithful o allied imperialism.

From then on matters went from bad to worse for "The Appeal". It is now dead. In the present crisis, however, we find the entire Socialist Party press and organization imitating, in these days, the stand of "The Appeal" in the war days. No wonder the same fate awaits it.

Don't Throw This Pap Pass it on to a New

[illegible] in [illegible]ovinces of [illegible]oviet Russia

NOTE:—This is the first of a series of articles by A. C. Freeman which will be published in THE WORKER from time to time. Freeman is travelling thru Europe and is planning to spend some time in Soviet Russia. In this article he tells about the revolution among the peasants in the provinces as follows:

By A. C. FREEMAN

It is a favorite delusion of counter-revolutionist writers in America that the Soviet power has no real strength outside of the cities. The peasant villages, including the majority of the Russian population, are supposed to lie quite outside the orbit of its influence. This theory may be consoling to disappointed backers of Kolchak, Denikin and Co.; but it does not stand up under the slightest contact with Russian realities.

I recently paid a visit to the Friends of Soviet Russia tractor colony which is operating in the province of Perm. One of the first things to be seen after getting off at the nearest railroad station, sixty miles away, is a huge wooden monument, decorated with pictures of Marx, Lenin, Liebknecht and other Russian and foreign revolutionists. Near the monument is a great common grave, where the bodies of the workers and peasants who fell in the struggle against the counter-revolutionist leader, Kolchak, are buried. The grave has a rough wooden covering, with the inscription: "Eternal Glory to Those Who Fell in the Struggle for Communism." There are similar monuments and graves in all the towns and larger villages throut this region, which was the scene of desperate fighting in the spring of 1919, as may be seen from the deep trenches which are now being ploughed up and sowed with grain by the help of the tractors which the American workers sent to their Russian comrades.

The Soviet organization reaches down to the smallest villages; and it is a very live and conscious expression of the will of the peasants. On the road from the railroad station to the camp I stopped at a peasant's house in a small village. It was a typical peasant's home, a one-story log dwelling with ikons on the wall; and the old farmer who lived there with his wife was certainly not a Communist. Having learned from Mr. Bertrand Russell that the whole Soviet system had been reduced to a nullity and a farce by the Communist dictatorship, I asked the peasant whether there was a soviet in his village. He replied that there was and that it managed all the local affairs of the community. He went on to say that the elections were carried on without any kind of compulsion, and that the villagers were free to elect Communists or not as they chose. And he added: "We are a free people." This last remark showed the sad lack of the educating and enlightening influence of The New York Times and similar American journals.

To anyone who travels thru Russia at the present time the idea that the Communists are holding down the masses of the people at the point of the bayonet must seem a grotesque fiction. The Soviet power relies on influence and persuasion, rather than on force for its successful functioning. The best proof of this is the fact that Nonpartisans often outnumber the Communists, both in Soviets and in trade union meetings. Even where they are in a minority, however, the Communists almost always carry their program thru. This is due to their discipline, their organization and their ability to put forward practical solutions for the problems of reconstruction which are the only subjects of absorbing interest to the Russian people today.

I met a typical Communist on the Soviet farm which is now being developed with the American farm machinery sent by the Friends of Soviet Russia. He was a Ural miner; and he had spent several years in prison under the Czar. He had helped to organize the miners in battalions to fight Kolchak. After Kolchak was overthrown he fought on one revolutionary front after another—against Denikin, against Wrangel, against the Poles, against Makhno.

Now he is working night and day to develop the farm, so that the Ki[illegible] Kop miners may have more bread and produce more coal. I found him full of enthusiasm, of hopes and plans for Russia's future, now that the menace of war and blockade had been removed. He outlined schemes for building a miners' rest home in the beautiful grounds of an old monastery, for piping the water of a stream near the monastery to homes in the neighborhood. He saw visions of peasant Russia lifted out of its ignorance and dirt and poverty by schools, tractors and electrification. It is men like this comrade, who fought for the Revolution and are now working for it, who offer the surest guarantee that the workers and peasants who lie buried in common graves throut the Ural country have not died in vain.

[illegible] Should Adopt This Resolution

The National Committee of the Trade Union Educational League has endorsed the formation of a Labor Party, to include the labor unions and all working-class political organizations as well as the farmers and farm laborers.

On Dec. 11th there will be held at Cleveland a meeting of representatives of organized labor, farmers' organizations and various political groups. This is the time for every union that desires that American labor build a political organization to fight its battles to exert its influence to achieve that end. Adopt the following resolution proposed to the unions by the Trade Union Educational League. Elect delegates to the Cleveland Conference:

"Whereas, the political policy of Mr. Gompers of 'rewarding our friends and punishing our enemies,' has resulted in the complete political helplessness of Labor, and in the power of Government remaining completely in the hands of the capitalist class, as is witnessed by countless official outrages against the labor movement, outstanding among which are the recent knocking-out of the Child Labor Act by the Supreme Court, the Daugherty injunction against the striking shopmen, the complete terrorization of the striking miners, railroad and textile workers and the use of troops against them; and

"Whereas, the accumulating experience of Governmental activity as a strike-breaking agency, and as an instrument of the employers in the 'open shop' drive, together with the recognition that Gompers' policy of 'non-partisan' political action has hitched Labor as a tail to the capitalist political kites—all are forcing the labor movement to the necessity of forming a Labor Party, and

"Whereas, we recognize that only thru a strong party of its own, with a working-class program and the ideal of a working-class republic, can the labor movement combat the forces of capitalism effectively, therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that this organization endorses the formation of a Labor Party, to include trade unions and working-class political parties, thereby uniting all the political forces of the labor movement into one solid front against the capitalist class, and be it further

"RESOLVED, that our officials stand instructed to assist in every possible way in bringing such a party into existence, and be it further

"RESOLVED, that this organization elect delegates to attend the conference for Progressive Political Action, which will take place in Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 11th.

Sixth Installment of the Series of Articles Issued by Publicity Committee, Progressive Miners' Group, District 5 (Pittsburgh), U. M. W. of A.

Reactionary "Machines" Unite in War on Western Pennsylvania's Militant Coal Miners

The Progressive Miners of District Five (Pittsburgh) have driven the "machine" to desperation. Both wings of the "machine" are exhausting every effort to sidetrack the "progressives." It is important that the miners and their friends distinctly understand what we mean by the two wings, for if they don't understand they may be misled.

Strange as it may seem there is a "Phil" Murray faction solidly entrenched in the District Headquarters in Pittsburgh, comprising Acting President Fagan, Secretary-Treasurer Hargest, et al., and the Lewis faction comprising International Board Member John O'Leary, William Feeny and William Hines.

Between these two groups there has recently been a bitter fight for the chief control, but the Lewis faction has been compelled to accept the "leavings" at Brownsville.

This crowd, particularly Feeny, had staked everything on running for District President, thinking that he could "plump" the Fayette field vote for himself and due to the disgust of the miners in the old organized district get a large vote on the strength of an unjustified reputation as a pseudo-radical.

He hoped to bolster this reputation by the open support and with the help of William Hines, who claims to be a "socialist," as he is regarded as a "radical" among superficial people who have no class-consciousness, no realization of the real nature of the struggle between the operators and the miners.

Acting as an understudy to Hines is a "socialist" union carpenter of Brownsville, "Bob" Norman, and a renegade industrialist who seemed to have been sincere in the days gone gone by, "Peggy" Delbarre.

These latter two have acted for months as "volunteer organizers" out of the Brownsville headquarters and taking their orders from Feeny. Delbarre was defeated for the secretaryship of the State Federation of Labor at the last convention, and it is not beyond the realm of probability he has been promised something good if he could deliver the "radical" miners' vote in this election.

It is vital for the progressive miners to get the correct measure of these men at this time because they are the ones whom the machine now relies upon to save the day. Their reputation as "radicals" is to be used to fool the progressives as we will show later in this article.

Feeny has announced himself as a candidate for district president making the election a three-cornered affair between the Murray, Lewis and Progressive groups—the progressives standing on a straight class-conscious platform while the Feeny crowd pretend to be "reformers" and the Gagan group admitting they are reactionary.

Before Feeny knew the progressives were to have a ticket in the field he started to lay the foundation for a campaign for himself by calling a rump convention of part of the locals of the district at Charleroi on September 24th. At that meeting his denunciation of the Fagan crowd was extreme although he resented any criticism of Lewis. The same afternoon Hines and Delbarre posing as "comrades" appeared unexpectedly in the midst of a progressive meeting in Pittsburgh and there asked to be heard. Hines' denunciation of Fagan and his regime was so extreme that one of the progressive group suggested that he be put upon the progressive ticket for International Board Member. The experienced heads refused to agree to this. Before leaving Hines and Delbarre tried to extort a promise that the progressives would not put up a ticket. However, the progressives, after these renegades had left, adopted a clean-cut platform and nominated a slate strictly on organized lines. This platform and slate were printed and distributed at the door of the next meeting of the Feeny forces in Pittsburgh on October 1st. This coup by the progressives forced the hand of the Feeny "reformers." Feeny who had been heralded as the speaker who would take the lid off of the district office was very tame. Fagan and Hargest were prominent in the meeting. The same William Hines who had denounced Fagan and Company so vigorously the Sunday before took the floor and sanctimoniously announced that while there may have been mistakes he was sure that no official of the U. M. W. of A. was guilty of intentional wrong. The value of this meeting lay in the fact that many miners who really thought Hines was honest were disillusioned by his conduct.

It was very evident that when the life of the machine was threatened by real militants the two crowds would unite to save the day. This opened the eyes of hundreds of miners who are now busy educating the men in the camps to the fact that Feeny and Fagan are tarred with the same stick—craft union politics instead of real industrial solidarity. They believe in the union for the officials and not for the rank and file and their own conduct is proving this.

Norman and Delbarre Try to "Reach" Myerscough and Ray

That Norman and Delbarre have degenerated into labor politicians of the cheaper class is revealed by their effort to get Myerscough and Ray, who are running for president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, on the progressive ticket and were former friends of these renegades to desert their positions of trust at the last minute.

A week ago Norman who was carefully picked for the job by the Feeny forces wrote to Ray and asked for an appointment to talk things over. Myerscough and Ray met Norman by appointment and found he had brought Delbarre along for company. The meeting was on Nov. 16th.

They began by telling the progressives they had no chance to win altho they had come clear from Brownsville to tell them. They advised them to withdraw from the ticket immediately and that Myerscough should run for secretary-treasurer on a Feeny ticket. They still claimed that Feeny was fighting to "reform" the district. They were distinctly informed that Feeny's record shows him as part of the machine and a willing tool of John L. Lewis.

These politicians who had come as friends then employed characteristic craft union methods. They whispered, "Do you know that your nominee for International Board Member, William Guiler, had a long conference with 'Pat' Fagan about the eighth of November? You know what that means."

With such methods they tried to split the progressives by planting the poison of suspicion in the minds of their colleagues. Myerscough and Ray having had years of experience in this district with such methods of the "machine" were not trapped and refused to withdraw. Then these "friends" showed their teeth. They said, "Well, you got the nomination at Vesta 4 (one of the largest mines in Western Pennsylvania), but you won't get the votes, for you know who the officers are. Feeny will get the votes."

This is a declaration of war. There will be no compromise. On Nov. 18th the progressive candidates held a conference, exchanged all the slimy stories that the two reactionary wings of the machine are circulating, renewed their pledge of confidence in each other and announced that they would all stand solidly on their platform to the end.

They all agreed that the miners will probably witness the greatest mud-slinging campaign of lies that has ever disgraced an election in District 5. The machine will stop at nothing to blacken the character and reputation of the progressive leaders.

The miners must be prepared to hear the most damnable lies about these men. Believe nothing until it is proven. The heads of the progressive ticket have known each other for years and no lies will split the movement. The lies already circulated have only solidified the progressives and will prove a boomerang to the machine.

The machine is trying to call the progressives a "dual" movement, but the name will not stick, for the progressives' platform distinctly denounces dualism in every form. The progressives of District 5 are going to lick the machine inside the organization. Every local must conduct itself strictly within the letter of the district constitution, no matter how hard it may be, and nothing can defeat us.

William Guiler, Thomas Myerscough and Thomas Ray, Publicity Committee, Progressive Miners of District 5, U. M. W. of A.

AN INTERVIEW WITH LENIN

(By F. S. R. Press Service)

After an hour's visit with Lenin during his recent illness, L. Kamenev gave to the press a tabloid account of his interview. Several statements in it are of special interest to American readers. Under the caption "What was Lenin interested in?" Kamenev lists, among other things, the following:

"The American Senator Borah;

"Mr. Hoover's position with regard to the forthcoming elections in America.

"A complete account of the work of the American Relief Administration.

And under the headline, "What did Lenin praise?" Kamenev gives this:

"The American comrades, the twenty tractors which have arrived in the province of Perm for demonstrating mechanical methods in agriculture, and the peasants of Perm, who, in remarkably rapid time, repaired the execrable roads and made it possible to get the excellent American tractors thru to their destination."

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible] the London Daily Herald [illegible] to the British parliament, declares that Premier Mussolini of Italy has been forced to alter his aggressive [illegible] policy, especially against Jugo-Slavia, because the Standard Oil Trust, in the words of the American Ambassador Washburn Child, "is giving quite a lot of trouble to the opening up of the Adriatic and the Balkan markets."

Ambassador Child told Mussolini, as it is reported, that Standard Oil isn't going to allow a bunch of Fascisti to disturb its efforts to widen its market.

Mussolini, in giving in so readily, no doubt had in mind the fate of Lloyd George, late premier in London. There was a time when British oil interests dominated in France. But that day is no more. Standard Oil has taken its place. So that when it is claimed that France supported the Turks against the Greeks, it must be remembered that Standard Oil stood back of the French, with its profit hunger greedily viewing the Near East oil fields. When the Turks routed the Greeks, British oil interests lost and Lloyd George quit his job, leaving the Standard Oil to press for further gains. This was all pointed out in detail in the article by R. W. Postgate, in last week's issue of THE WORKER.

While this is taking place on the other side of the Atlantic, we find the Mexican Congress putting up the battle of its life against interference by American oil interests with the passage of legislation relating to the petroleum industry. It is again significant that this interference took the form of notes directed by George T. Summerlin, the American Charge d'Affaires, to Alberto Pani, the Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs. The American oil interests raise the usual howl that the Mexicans are trying to "tax us out of existence," and they work thru their U. S. government.

The Mexicans reply with a general broadside against Washington's entire imperial policy, citing the occupation of Vera Cruz, Pershing's expedition, Haiti, Santo Domingo and Nicaragua.

It is even urged that Mexico invite the Central and South American countries not to accept the invitation to the American Conference at Washington, D. C., Dec. 4, claiming that there "they would lose part of their liberties."

It does seem as if there is more battle against American capitalism to be found among the workers and peasants of Mexico than is manifest in the ranks of American labor itself. Let the wage slaves on this side of the Rio Grande learn that they are as much the victims of Standard Oil as Mexican, British, French or Italian labor, or the workers and the peasants of the Near East, and they will have laid the basis for bigger struggles for ultimate emancipation from the oil and all other profiteers.

Harding and Daugherty Murder Ricardo F. Magon

By H. M. WICKS

Warren G. Harding and Harry M. Daugherty murdered Ricardo Flores Magon in Leavenworth Prison on November 21, 1922. His jailer was Woodrow Wilson who now sits in doddering imbecility and whines about the glory of his past criminality. The crime of Magon consisted of having sufficient intelligence and courage to tell the truth about the war in his Spanish newspaper, "Regeneracion." For that he was seized and sentenced to twenty-one years in Leavenworth. He died in the fifth year of his imprisonment.

After all civilized nations on earth have released their political prisoners, incarcerated as the result of expression of opinion during the World War, in these United States of America, in this pseudo-democracy, Warren G. Harding, President of the nation by grace of Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel Corporation and the jail-bird lawyer, corporation flunkey, ward-heeling, political shyster and wire-puller for grafting bankers, Harry M. Daugherty, still murder innocent men in prison and conspire to send more men to the dungeons of American capitalism for advocating the abolition of the infamous government that a nation groans under to-day.

Warren G. Harding knew that Magon was on the verge of death, yet he refused to lift his hand that this martyr to labor might once more feel the unwalled earth beneath his feet, once more stand beneath the sun by day and the stars by night—not in the United States, but in what was once known as Barbarous Mexico. Exiled by Diaz, the despot of Mexico, Magon came to the United States only to be murdered by those hideous, lying, foul, distraught, blood-streaked, bastardized descendants of an insatiable capitalism, Warren G. Harding and his twin in infamy, Harry M. Daugherty.

Daugherty, the creature who is said to have reviewed the case of Magin, declared that the health of this courageous Mexican was good and that he was standing the tortures of prison life well; but added that those who repented might be released. Repent for what? What product of a disordered brain is this that asks decent men to repent for having the courage to speak the truth that cowards dare not speak? Such insects as Charles W. Morse, the banker-crook whom Daugherty rescued from jail will repent in order to resume their business of picking pockets, but men of the type of Magon never repent.

What about the stories of the ignorant and lying prison physicians that declared at the behest of Daugherty that Magon was healthy? His dead body today answers that piece of hypocrisy.

Only recently the labor movement of Mexico, representing a half million organized workers sent a plea for the release of Magon; President Obregon of Mexico interceded on his behalf. But the fact that labor desired the release of Magon was one more reason why the labor hating administration at Washington was determined to keep him behind the walls of Leavenworth. When some capitalist adventurer, endeavoring to extort profits from the peons of Mexico, is held in prison by Mexicans Washington roars threats of armed intervention, but when representatives of the working class of Mexico dare cross the Rio Grande this fake democracy murders them in cold blood.

As Magon died, the victim of the blood-lust of the unspeakable Daugherty, other representatives of the working class enter the bastile of capitalism at Joliet, Illinois, for the crime of organizing a political party aimed to emancipate the wage-slaves of America. And at the same time the government exerts its efforts to prosecute and jail seventeen more members of the working class in a Michigan dungeon. Even though the espionage act is no longer operating to jail men for expressions of opinion, the various state governments with "criminal syndicalist" laws are being used by the government to continue the wholesale reign of terror instituted against labor during the war.

Magon is dead. His murder is one more stone in the monument that testifies to the infamy of this administration. But the militant workers of the United States should from this moment hence exert every ounce of energy to see to it that those prisoners now rotting in capitalist dungeons are released and that the vicious persecution of other workers cease.

The only way to pay tribute to the memory of the martyred Magon is to carry on such a terrific campaign against Harding and Daugherty and the things they represent that they will not dare keep the prison doors closed upon our comrades in the struggle.

Let every worker know the story of the murdered Magon!

Down with the tyranny of the Harding-Daugherty combination!

These savage prison murders must cease!

First "Foster Parent" to Orphan in Red Russia

(By FSR. Press Service)

George Hoffmann, 221 S. Main Street, Pratt, Kansas, has the distinction of being the first American "foster parent" to a Russian orphan. In response to the appeal for the adoption of destitute Russian children by workers in America, launched recently by the Friends of Soviet Russia, he has adopted one boy and one girl.

His letter to the organization reads in part:

"If there are more boys than girls to be adopted, I will take two boys and one girl for which I will send you $3 more next month. I understand that it costs $5 to adopt a child and $2 monthly to keep it. Kindly let me know if this is correct."

It is correct—and congratulations!

[illegible] Boss[illegible] Own Th[illegible]

By J. LOUIS [illegible]

". . . to take into their own [illegible] the direction and control . . ."

These are courageous words [illegible] en by the workers in any [illegible] profession. But they are [illegible] steeped in courage coming from [illegible] organized actors.

I have taken those words from the announcement of the "Equity Players," who have taken over the Forty-Eighth Street Theater, New York City, for a year, bouncing the stage profiteers, at least in so far as this theater is concerned. The complete sentence, telling of the significance of the launching of the "Equity Players," reads:

"It is an event, first of all, of historic note in dramatic art, marking the beginning of concerted, intelligent effort on the part of the actors to take into their own hands the direction and control of their profession—that profession so worthy of distinction and artistic freedom."

"Equity Players" is an advance step in the evolution of the actors' efforts to direct and control their profession. They laid the basis for this activity during their strike three years ago, when they won out in their struggle "to enforce their right to organize, to choose their own spokesmen, to have a voice in framing the conditions under which they would work." It was out of this strike that there grew the Actors' Equity Association, that gave the lie to the charge that "actors would not stick together." This actors' union, with its 12,000 members, the largest organization of actors the world has ever known, is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and it is this organized strength that makes it possible for the actors to take over a theater in the heart of New York's "White Light" District and manage it for themselves.

"Equity Players, Inc.," got under way last May when 40 actors and actresses subscribed $130,000 for the purpose of launching this long cherished project of many members of the Actors' Equity Association.

When it is said that the "Equity Players" has a "complete organization," that means that they have a play reading committee, that is continually on the lookout for suitable productions, "the better class of dramatic material, which at present may be lying fallow because of the lack of a clear-sighted discoverer, or because of the lack of artistic courage to offer it to the public, or, indeed, of a lack of an organized audience."

Thru the hands of one of these play readers there goes each week an average of 15 play manuscripts.

"What chance has the manuscript of a radical or revolutionary play?" I asked one of these play readers.

"The same chance as any other," I was told, with the addition, "We would have been glad to put on 'R. U. R.' that is now being produced by the Theater Guild."

"This must be the means," I concluded, "by which the working class of this country will find its expression thru the drama, uncensored by the big combinations of theatrical managers and producers, who exploit the stage and the actors for what profit there is in it."

If the actors are successful in running one theater in New York City, why not take over others; if they are successful in one city, why not in many cities?

In this respect it might be stated that the Actors' Equity Association, among its other duties, looks after stranded companies wherever possible, thus falling into the role of manager. We cite the instance of a company practically abandoned by its management in Chicago. The Actors' Equity Association took charge, kept the performance running three weeks longer, paid the actors their wages in full and their return fare to New York City, in addition to all other expenses, including royalties to the author and 72 per cent of the back salary due the actors before Equity took charge.

Under these conditions we cannot but predict that a great future lies before the Equity Players established at the Forty-Eighth Street Theater. Their first production was "Malvaloca," a modern Spanish play first presented at Madrid in April, 1912. It was greeted with enthusiasm as presented for the first time in America by Equity Players during October.

A modern American play, "Hospitality," by Leon Cunningham, is now receiving a gratifying reception. It will be followed by "Why Not?" by Jesse Lynch Williams.

May we hope that with the rapid development of Equity Players there will soon come the time when at least one theater in New York City, directed and controlled by the actors, will have as an "organized audience," men and women workers, who want to learn as well as to be amused when they go to the theater. All workers can help build in this direction by supporting the Equity Players and the Actors' Equity Association in their present venture.

Program [illegible]

And above the House the Senate and the President stands the Supreme Court which can nullify laws which [illegible] unite in passing.

The character of the Constitution as a document intended to protect the Bankers and Industrial Magnates of this Country has been made clear in many decisions under its provisions. Child Labor laws, laws regulating hours of labor, and protecting the life and health of the workers, and minimum wage laws have been declared void. A weapon to strike down organized labor has been found in its courts as shown in the Coronado decision.

In addition to the protection which the Constitution gives to the Coal Barons, Railroad Kings, and the Industrial and Financial Lords, Millions of workers are disfranchised in this country thru naturalization laws. Hundreds of thousands of citizens cannot vote because of residential qualifications which thru the necessity of earning a living make it impossible for them to comply with.

The capitalists control thousands of newspapers thru which they shape the ideas of the masses in their interest; they control the schools, the colleges, the pulpit, the moving-picture theatre, all of which are part of the machinery thru which the capitalists shape the minds of the workers.

When it serves their purpose the capitalists do not hesitate to expel members of the legislative bodies elected by working class votes. This was done in the case of the Socialist members of the Cleveland City Council and a member of the School Board of that City. These elected representatives of the workers were expelled in violation of all law to stifle their protests against the imperialist war. The expulsion of the Socialist Assemblymen of New York State is a case of similar character.

Under these conditions to talk of "Democracy" is to throw sand into the eyes of the workers. The much-talked of "American Democracy" is a fraud. Such formal democracy as is written into the Constitution and the Laws of the Country is camouflaged to hide the real character of the rule of the capitalist.

While recognizing the impossibility of the workers winning their emancipation thru use of the machinery of the existing government, the Workers Party realized the importance of election campaigns in developing the political consciousness of the working class. The first step toward revolutionary political action by the working class must be made thru independent political action by the workers in election campaigns. The Workers Party will therefore participate in election campaigns and use them for propaganda and agitation to develop the political consciousness of the workers.

It will endeavor to rally the workers to use their power to make real the rights which the fraudulent American Democracy denies them. It will use them to carry on the struggle for the right of Labor to create a revolutionary political party and for such an organization to function openly in the political life of the country.

The Workers Party will also nominate its candidates and enter into election campaigns to expose the fraudulent character of capitalist democracy and to carry on the propaganda for a working class Soviet government. It will use the election campaigns to rally the workers for mass political demands upon the Capitalist State. Its candidates when elected to office will use their offices for the same purpose.

Labor Unions

The division of the organized workers into craft unions is one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the workers in this country against capitalism.

During the past two years organized labor has been dealt many heavy blows by the employers, who are bent on destroying or at least weakening so as to make ineffective the organization of the workers. In spite of this desperate struggle, each craft has fought alone. There has been no united resistance, no solid united front against the Industrial magnates, who are striving to reduce the wages and make worse the working conditions of the workers. The example of the seven railroad shop unions striking while nine other railroad unions continued to serve the Railroad Kings and help them [illegible] the striking workers is but one [illegible] example of [illegible] conditions in the ranks of organized labor in this country.

In addition to the weakness of the craft form of organization the labor unions suffer from a fundamental error of policy. In place of waging a class struggle to free themselves from the grip of the capitalists they have pursued the policy of attempting to come to an agreement with the capitalists on the basis of a "fair day's pay for a fair day's work."

No such compromise with capitalism can be permanent. The hunger of the capitalists for greater profits drives them to seek to lower the standard of living of the workers when they have the upper hand. On the other hand when the workers are in a strong position their need and their desire for more of the good things they produce results in greater demands upon the capitalists.

The gain of the workers during the war time scarcity of labor and their present losses indicate the futility of the hope that the class struggle can be settled thru a compromise.

The Labor Unions must be revolutionized; they must be won for the class struggle against capitalism; they must be inspired with a new solidarity and united to fight a common battle. The existing craft unions must be amalgamated and powerful industrial unions created in each industry. The reactionary official bureaucracy of the unions must be supplanted by the shop delegate system.

The Workers Party declares one of its chief immediate tasks to be to inspire in the labor unions a revolutionary purpose and to unite them in a mass movement of uncompromising struggle against capitalism. It will use all the resources at its command to educate the organized workers to an understanding of the necessity of amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions.

This end cannot be achieved if the revolutionary workers leave the existing unions to form feeble dual organizations. The work of transforming the labor unions must be carried on inside of the existing unions. The members of the Workers Party will [illegible] powerful [illegible] workers [illegible].

The Workers Party declares its support of the Red Labor International and adopts as its program for the struggle within the Unions the theses of the Red Labor International on the American Labor Unions.

The Working Farmer and Farm Laborer

The struggle of the farm laborers is the same struggle in which the industrial workers are engaged. It is a struggle against those who exploit them thru low wages and hard working conditions. The Workers Party will seek to organize the farm laborers into unions of agricultural workers and to unite them with their brothers in the industrial centers for the common struggle against capitalism.

While the exploitation of the working farmer is not so apparent, he suffers in the grip of the same enemy who robs the industrial workers of the cities. The bank which holds the mortgage on his land, the railroad which transports his product, the grain elevator or the commission house which he must use in marketing his product represent the tentacles of the same capitalist system which is robbing the industrial workers.

The interests of the working farmers and farm laborers are linked together with those of the exploited industrial workers and it is the aim of the Workers Party to arouse the working farmer and farm laborer to a consciousness of this and to unite them with the industrial workers in a common struggle against their common exploiter.

The Negro Worker

The Negro workers of this country are exploited and oppressed more ruthlessly than any other group. The history of the Southern Negro is the history of brutal terrorism, of persecution and murder.

During the war tens of thousands [illegible] the South [illegible] the Negro workers.

Altho the influx of Negro workers in the Northern industrial centers has laid the foundation for a mass movement of Negroes who are industrial workers the anti-Negro policy of organized labor has made it impossible to organize these industrial workers. The Negro has despaired of aid from organized labor and he has been driven either into the camp of the enemies of labor, or has been compelled to develop purely racial aims.

The Workers Party will support the Negroes in their struggle for liberation and will help them in their fight for economic, political and educational equality. It will seek to end the policy of discrimination followed by the labor unions. It will endeavor to destroy altogether the barrier of race prejudice that has been used to keep apart the black and white workers and to weld them into a solid union for the struggle against the capitalists who exploit and oppress them.

Soviets, or Workers' Councils

The experience of the workers in the struggle against capitalism has proven that the workers cannot take over the ready-made machinery of the capitalist government and use this machinery to build up a Communist society. The form of organization of the existing government, its constitutional basis, its laws, the bureaucracy which has been built up over a century cannot be used by the workers. They are all of a character to aid the capitalists in the struggle against the workers and cannot be transformed into instruments of struggle of the workers against the capitalists.

The workers' revolution in Russia, Hungary, Bavaria, the revolutionary struggles in Germany, all show that the Soviets or Workers' Councils, are [illegible] in the factories and labor unions. [illegible] councils which [illegible] arise in the case of a great strike embracing all the workers of a city. The local councils are federated in state or district councils and these in a national council, or Soviet, which is the supreme organ of the working class government. The Soviets carry on both the legislative and administrative work of the working class government.

The Workers Party will carry on propaganda to bring to the workers an understanding of the necessity of supplanting the existing capitalist government with a Soviet Government.

The Dictatorship of the Proletariat

The existing capitalist government is a dictatorship of the capitalists. Today in the United States a comparatively small group of financial and industrial kings with headquarters in Wall Street control the government of the United States, of the states and municipalities. Thru the capitalist government this group of financial and industrial kings enforce their will upon the thirty million workers and their families.

While part of the workers are granted the hollow mockery of voting they find that whether they vote for the Republican or Democratic candidate, in time of struggle the governmental power is always on the side of the financial and industrial kings.

The Soviet Government of the workers, will, because of the same necessity—the necessity of suppressing the capitalists—be a dictatorship of the workers. The government expressing the will of the thirty million workers will openly use its power in the interest of the workers and against the capitalists.

The Goal of the Proletarian Dictatorship

It will be the task of the government of the thirty million workers of this country to take from the cap- [illegible] the management of the industries by the workers.

Thru the establishment of this Communist system of industry the exploitation and oppression of the workers will be ended. As the power of the capitalists in industry wanes and Communism is established the struggle between the classes will disappear and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat will become unnecessary and will cease to function. The government will become an instrument for administration of industry and the full, free Communist society will come into being.

The International

The Workers Party accepts the principle that the class struggle for the emancipation of the working class is an international struggle. The workers of Russia have been obliged to fight against the whole capitalist world in order to maintain their Soviet Government and to win the opportunity of rebuilding their system of production on a Communist basis. In this struggle they have had the support of the enlightened workers of every country.

The future struggles against capitalism will take the same character. In order to win the final victory in the struggle against world capitalism the working class of the world must be united under one leadership.

The leadership in the international struggle which inspires hope in the hearts of the workers of the world and arouses fear in the capitalists of every country is the leadership of the Communist International.

The Workers Party declares its sympathy with the principles of the Communist International and enters the struggle against American capitalism, the most powerful of the national groups, under the inspiration of the leadership of the Communist International.

It rallies to the call "WORKERS OF THE WORLD UNITE."

Resume C. L. P. Trial at Oakland, Calif., As Defense Presents Case

OAKLAND, Cal.—The trial of J. [illegible] Dolsen and four other Communists has been resumed, and the defense is about to begin. The state called as its last witness its new stool pigeon, W. E. Townsend, former I. W. W., who told again his wild story, denied by the U. S. department of agriculture, of the havoc he wrought during the war. Under cross-examination he admitted that he had acted as a stool pigeon several years ago in Portland, being planted in jail to try to get damaging information from some wobblies who were imprisoned there. In this he was unsuccessful. When questioned by Dolsen as to his frequent desertions from the army and navy, Townsend boasted that he had "got all that fixed."

Against the protest of the defense, the judge allowed to be read into the testimony the statements of the present defendants when defense witnesses at the trial of Anita Whitney, acknowledging membership in the Communist Labor party.

Dolsen objected on the ground that this forced the defendants to testify against themselves, which they have the right to refuse to do; but the judge overruled the objection.

This city, scene of the trial for political heresy of five Communists, is no place for anyone with unpopular opinions.

During the Armistice Day parade, an unknown man on the sidewalk failed to remove his hat in reverence as the flag passed by.

Austin Page, a police officer standing near, ordered the man to display the proper religious sentiments. The stranger refused, whereupon Page knocked his hat down over his eyes. The crowd then joined in, and decided to lynch the blasphemer.

Finally a riot call was turned in, and it took a squad of policemen to secure order. In the midst of the fracas the recalcitrant stranger disappeared—with his hat still on his head.

Harding, Daugherty, Burns and KKK

Governor Parker of Louisiana recently journeyed to the White House at Washington to lay certain facts regarding the criminal activity of a secret conspiratorial society known as the Ku Klux Klan before the President of the United States, Attorney General Daugherty and Chief of the Investigation Bureau of the Department of Justice, Wm. J. Burns.

This triumvirate, the stupid Harding, the assinine and arrogant Daugherty and the labor-hating head of a private detective agency, decided that the government should not interfere with the operations of the Koo Koos. This aggregation of degenerates meets in secret, conceals its depraved features beneath masks, indulges in wholesale terror, including murder, branding and horsewhipping, and conspires to bring the powers of government under its control. Yet the Harding administration does not consider their activity menacing. Washington winks at the Ku Klux Klan just as Rome permitted the growth of the Italian Fascisti, and Berlin the monarchist activities of the Bavarian Orgesch.

But when a group of workingmen gather for a conference in the state of Michigan the United States government steps in and arrests them and proceeds to prosecute them as criminal conspirators under the state laws. There is no record of murder and wholesale rapine against the Communists who are being persecuted by the government of the United States under the laws of the State of Michigan, but still Daugherty and Burns spend hundreds of thousands of dollars and use an army of spies against these workers, while the Koo-Koos enter into a secret conspiracy against all who do not agree with their bigotry and endeavor to accomplish their aims thru violence alone, and the government does not act.

Yet, in face of this evidence of class hatred on the part of the United States government there still remain workers so unenlightened as to believe that we live under a democracy that should be defended.

One of the reasons for the inaction of the government against the Koo-Koos is that this organization is an avowed opponent of unionism and of the aspirations of the working class in general. Threats have been made by this aggregation of cowards and murderers against organized labor. But organized labor is preparing for the first sign of anti-union activity by the Klan that takes on the menacing form of attacking union headquarters and is preparing to resist.

If the government permits this gang of reptiles to engage in wholesale lawlessness the working class has but one recourse when attacked by the Klan and that is to exterminate the first hooded snake that attempts to attack a labor headquarters or any gathering of workers.—H. M. W.

If Cassidy, Socialist-Farmer-Labor candidate for governor, got 61,917 votes in New York City; and Steinmetz, candidate for state engineer, got 205,808 votes, how many ballots were cast for Socialism? Books by Marx, Engels and Liebknecht offered for best answers.

In the World of Books

By MAX SCHACHTMAN

One would think that a war which killed, maimed and drove mad millions of men, devastated entire countries and did more general catastrophic mischief than a dozen other wars put together, would call forth a literature of enormous proportions. Instead, there is a tendency to "forget it," to refer to it as "the late unpleasantness."

John Kenneth Turner's "Shall It Be Again" (B. W. Huebsch) is a tremendously important addition to the books of Dos Passos, Will Irwin, a handful of others, and the few pamphlets which constitute the only literature of any merit written here.

In his book he comes to the only possible conclusion that "the truth is that there was not a particle of democracy about our war, either in the way it was achieved, in the way it was conducted, in the distribution of its burdens, in the fighting organization itself, in its real motives, in the manner of making peace, or in its fruits, either at home or abroad; that we quarreled with Germany, went to war, and negotiated peace, purely in the interest and at the direction of high finance, and at all stages to the prejudice of the general welfare." And he proves this in no uncertain or answerable manner.

His indictment of Wilson's hypocrisies and lies is perfect and complete. But when he accuses Wilson of having drawn the country into the war single-handedly, he is most naive. He redeems himself, however, when he writes that "the changing phases of the Wilson diplomacy . . . unertingly followed the changing interests of Wall Street."

He is weakest when he discusses a remedy. Tho, in the very last paragraphs, he says that wars can be avoided "by the institution of a new social order based upon economic equality," the general impression created is that he favors the old liberal panacea of "good and better" governments.

Our system of producing, distributing and exchanging commodities causes a periodic surplus. Thru its enormous wastes and luxuries Capitalism tries to consume this surplus but is finally forced to compete with rival "countries" for markets. This inevitably leads to wars. Nothing but the abolition of the original evil Capitalism, can obviate wars. This is, as Van Wyck Brooks would say, a simple economic fundamental.

Mr. Turner gives the war-mongers their due. Even Sam Gompers gets his. As a mere collection of facts the book is a masterpiece and no one can talk with even the least authority on the war without having read this excellent expose of our miserable imperialist ventures, not only in Europe, but those still going on in Haiti, San Domingo and the rest of Wall Street's colonial empire.

Dear "Comrade" Bill Adams and the Burns Detective Agency

"Bill" Adams, the old "Socialist" war horse of the Pittsburgh district who has been trusted implicitly by the radicals but has been acting queerly for some time back has been caught with the goods.

Due to his long membership in the Socialist Party and his perennial candidacy for various offices he had secured a speaking acquaintance with practically every radical in the Pittsburgh district. For several years he made daily trips from Pittsburgh to McKeesport, passing thru the intervening industrial towns and selling the Call. He acquired quite a list of names by this means. He has since discontinued this due to the falling off of interest in the Call among its readers, many of whom said the paper was too spineless.

Recently a group of radicals to whom the Workers Party appealed got together and organized a branch. Shortly after Scott Nearing came to McKeesport and lectured to about sixty people in a spacious school auditorium. At this meeting "Bill" met a member of the new branch. Said he, "The Workers Party is a bunch of disrupters." Now it happens that dear old "Bill" is known as the prize harmonizer among those who do not know him. In fact he is always talking harmony in public a la Debs but dropping the insinuating double meaning words of poison to individuals.

On this occasion "Bill" who denounces disruption proceeded to cause as much disruption as he could. He approached a member of the new branch and said:

"You better keep away from the Workers Party. I was up to the Burns Detective Agency's office the other day and they told me they have the name of every member of the Workers Party."

The result was that this member became frightened and withdrew from the branch. The other members got busy and determined to show Adams and his kind that detectives and spies cannot destroy the branch. No doubt this "socialist war-horse" feels very happy over the result he accomplished in this particular case but we predict that Adams will shortly find a more congenial climate in California where he spent last winter when the radicals here learn of his close acquaintance with the Burns Detective Agency.

England Refuge of [illegible]

Mohammed VI, Sultan of Turkey, [illegible] workers and peasants of [illegible] Constantinople on a British warship. [illegible] the footsteps of King Constantine, of Greece, [illegible] when his Greek army was kicked out of Asia Minor.

It is [illegible] that Great Britain has been the traditional refuge of deposed sovereigns. Napoleon, more than a hundred years ago, like the Sultan now, found safety in flight on a British ship. It is [illegible] that the late kaiser even considered giving himself up to the British.

British protection of the Turkish sultan is a confession that Great Britain's support of Greek armies was merely to aid them in a war on the Turkish workers and peasants, that England has no differences with Turkish capitalists, bankers and landlords.

In hustling the deposed Sultan out of Constantinople the British were worrying more about themselves than about their suppliant tool. By keeping the ex-Sultan under their protection the British hope to set him up somewhere else than in Constantinople as the spiritual chief of all Mohammedans, if not the temporal ruler of Turkey. In this way the British expect to quiet discontent among the Mohammedan subjects in Egypt, India, Mesopotamia and other subject colonies.

But even the last of Sultans in Great Britain's embrace will not blind the Mohammedans to the nature of their real struggle against British imperialism. The oppressed nations everywhere, in common with the subject working classes in all capitalist nations, are having their eyes opened by the developing war of slave against master. The last of the Sultans is gone, another defeat for British capitalism, another retreat of world imperialism.

Dance Among the Kitchen Pans

When Isadora Duncan came to the United States she told the New York immigration authorities that she was "not in politics," not even in Soviet Russia, and after stating her case very strenuously she finally got into the country of her birth, the United States of America.

"I want everybody to dance and sing and be happy. That is my idea of Communism," she told her "farewell" audience at Carnegie Hall, New York City, and she took up a collection, in true Communist style, after her performance, to help finance her school in Moscow, Soviet Russia.

Miss Duncan isn't interested in training children for stage dancing. She says she hates the stage. She wants everybody to dance, to get joy into their lives, to dance, as she puts it, "even among the kitchen pans."

And she had to go to Soviet Russia to realize her ideals, to develop a school with Soviet aid and thru the co-operation of Lunacharsky, commissar of education. But her spirit isn't bounded by the confines of a nation, it isn't limited by narrow patriotism, she expresses it in the word "Internationale."

While the drama reflects the struggle for Communist ideals on the stage thru the Theater Guild production of "R. U. R." at the Frazee Theater, Isadora Duncan, in five performances in New York City, and others elsewhere, preached her gospel of mass joy from the dancing stage to audiences she addressed as "Comrades!", audiences that responded with vociferous applause, an expression of their keen delight and overflowing appreciation.

But this joy will never come until capitalism has been swept away, until child labor and other barbaric outgrowths of wage slavery have become hideous, historic memories, until the mind as well as the body have been liberated by the new Communist order.

Then, too, the happiness of the children will continue to live when these boys and girls as men and women go forth, with the urge of music and the dance in their souls, to do the useful work of a social system that gives first place to those who labor—"even among the kitchen pans."

Renewed Depression in 1923

It is admitted that we are approaching the winter with less unemployment than last year. The jobless army that tramps the streets of the nation's industrial centers is not as great now as it was in 1921.

But we are assured by no less an authority than John Moody, expert on economics and finance, in an address to the Chicago Association of Commerce, that we are faced with another depression, that "reaction from the present revival is not many months ahead of us, and while the first few months of 1923 may be relatively prosperous, we may run into a renewed period of deflation before the end of 1923."

Altho the United States is the "richest" nation in the world, the gold, the industries, the resources are in the hands of the few. The worker who receives 23 cents an hour in wages does not make a good purchaser of commodities. When labor does not get even a "living wage" it has little with which to buy and keep industry going. Thus the home market is at a minimum.

Moody feels that Europe will not be able to pay, that "not in the lifetime of the son of the youngest man in this room will Germany be able to pay the indemnities demanded of her, nor will France or Italy be able to make full settlement with the United States." That means that the workers will continue to pay "taxes" on Liberty Bond issues and other war debts, in addition to keeping a spendthrift capitalist government going, instead of using this money to purchase family necessities. This also reduces purchasing power.

The high tariff wall, aided by the high price of the American dollar in all foreign countries, also makes it impossible for other countries to buy or sell here. Instead of purchasing raw products here, Europe is compelled to turn elsewhere, especially to Soviet Russia. Therefore, American ships lie idle in the nation's ports.

Thus, with the greatest industrial machine in the world, with untold resources of raw materials, the American working class faces another jobless crisis, another period of extreme suffering and misery.

This will be so for the one reason that the workers permit the nation's industrial machine and its resources to remain in the hands of the big capitalists. Let labor think this over. While it is thinking, let it also watch—watch the workers and peasants in Soviet Russia.

By J. [illegible]

We have heard no cry from the British conservatives, [illegible] in the recent elections, for any election reform [illegible] make democracy under capitalism more effective. That is easily understood. If even the rudiments of proportional representation were in force in Great Britain the Bonar Law conservatives would have faced a minority of 127 against the other parties, instead of enjoying a majority of about 80 as at present.

These facts become apparent with the totalling of the votes showing that the ballots were cast as follows: Conservatives, 5,361,830; Labor, 4,225,823; Asquith Liberals, 1,542,109; others 343,890. If each party were represented according to votes cast there would be 207, instead of 346 conservatives; 163, instead of 142 labor members; 99 Asquith Liberals, 59 National (Lloyd George) Liberals and 13 Independents.

Proportional representation is in force in Italy, and is a stumbling block for the Mussolini military dictatorship. Thus Mussolini proposes that this little obstacle be wiped out, and that the party receiving the highest number of votes be given three-fifths of the members of the Italian parliament. This is practically what the British conservatives got without proportional representation. It is what the anti-labor forces get with the rise of the working class to power, thru the unification of capitalism's separate political forces, conservative and liberal in England, republican and democratic in the United States.

When labor becomes strong enough to threaten the capitalist state it is then that capitalism throws off all the shams of democracy. In the words of Mussolini, addressing both branches of the Italian parliament:

> "I am today performing in this hall what is an act of purely formal deference toward you and for which I do not seek your thanks. Italy has given herself a Government OUTSIDE, ABOVE AND AGAINST ANY DESIGNATION BY PARLIAMENT. Now I affirm that REVOLUTION HAS ITS RIGHTS and I add that I am here in order to defend and make the most of the Black Shirts' Revolution by inserting it intimately as a force tending toward development, progress and equilibrium in the history of the nation.
> "With 300,000 youths perfectly armed and ready for anything, I might have punished the enemies of the Fascismo. I might have bivouacked my troops in this very hall. I MIGHT HAVE CLOSED PARLIAMENT AND RULED WITH A PURELY FASCISTI GOVERNMENT. I say I might have done these things, but—AT LEAST FOR THE PRESENT—I have not wished to do them."

Under this threat the obedient political slaves of Italian capitalism in the Chamber of Deputies voted their confidence in Dictator Mussolini, 306-116, thus placing, in the words of the Associated Press, the "seal of legality upon a movement which three weeks ago was considered by the then ruling authorities as rebellion and revolution."

"This chamber is dead and embalmed," laments Turati, the "coalitionist Socialist," to which Mussolini replied, "Petty resentment because I wouldn't let you in the government."

Thus does the mask of democracy fall from the grinning face of capitalist oppression, revealing parliamentarism as a word-feast to which labor is invited when it is weak, but admittance to which it is denied when it becomes strong and powerful. In the Polish elections just held, in spite of the strong Communist movement in Poland, but two Communists were permitted election. Most of the others are in prison, in exile, or dead.

Before the recent elections the British Communists asked, "Why Bother About Parliaments?" and they answered their own question by declaring that the Communist Party runs candidates for parliament:

> "Firstly: Because the Boss Class will use Parliament to give a show of fair play and legality to every act of dictatorial repression against the workers until the workers rob them of that pretence by taking Parliament away from them. Every working-class candidate elected who is man enough to protest against and expose these atrocities can use the very authority of his position as member of Parliament to expose the fraud and humbug of Parliament itself—to show the immorality concealed behind the Law and the brutality and class-savagery camouflaged as government impartiality.
> "This is especially important in the case of strikes and lock-outs, and here a vote for a workers candidate—provided it be the vote of a man who means to back his vote with deeds of determination—is a challenge to the dictatorship of the Big Boss class.
> "Secondly the Communist Party takes part in elections in order to put the whole issue to a practical test.
> "The majority of the workers at present 'believe in' Parliament and see no necessity for the disciplined, planned and purposeful struggle which will be necessary if they are ever to be freed. To cure them of this illusion is impossible without a practical test. Therefore the Communist Party promotes candidatures, and urges the support of others of such a character as will test definitely the question whether Parliament can be used as an instrument of working-class emancipation or whether it must be scrapped as an instrument designed for oppression and capable of nothing else."

Developments in all capitalist countries are furnishing the workers with rich experiences gained thru the electoral campaigns and thru parliamentary activities.

More and more they understand why the Russian Communists disbanded the Constituent Assembly, in the words of Mussolini, as one of the "rights of the revolution."

The workers learn better daily why they must erect their Soviet Rule for the conquest of all power on the wreckage of capitalism's institutions, especially of capitalism's parliaments. Mussolini will prove a good teacher in Italy. He has his imitation in every land.

The Tom Mooney Defense Committee, thru its press service, feels elated over the election of the Democratic candidate for governor of California, Friend W. Richardson, hoping that "under his regime Mooney and Billings and other innocent unionists now confined in California prisons will be given justice." The Mooney Committee classifies U. S. Senator Hiram Johnson as a reactionary, pointing out that his machine suffered a heavy setback in the governorship fight, in spite of the support of reactionary labor leaders. Johnson is one of those listed with the organizers of a possible "Third Party" as an antidote for a Labor Party. Watch him.

You can't keep a trust down for long. J. Ogden Armour, the Chicago hog butcher, is in Washington and telling Attorney General Daugherty that Armour & Co. want to take over some of the other tentacles of the meat industry into a $500,000,000 food trust. Daugherty will surely be willing to permit this for a bribe, commonly known as a fee. It is declared similar overtures are coming from the steel industry.

American Legionnaires are getting first lessons on how to ape the Italian Fascisti. Edward Cosci spoke before the Tiger Post No. 23, American Legion, New York, recently on the "Fascisti Triumph in Italy." Perhaps the American Legion and the Italian Fascisti can reach an agreement for an exchange of lecturers as a development of Fascisti internationalism.

"Two is company, three is a crowd," claims our contemporary, the Wall Street Journal, in referring to the political situation. This spokesman of greed, of course, wants the field for the two old parties. But when the two united old parties are opposed by a solid labor party, even then the country will be too small for them. The united old parties will have to go.

"Nine corporations increase dividends or pay extra ones," says a New York Times headline, Nov. 16. In the same issue we find another headline, "Woman Trains Dog to Steal Meat." But the corporations, of course, will be allowed to retain their loot, while the woman and her dog go to jail. Moral: It never pays to steal on a small scale.

The U. S. Shipping Board has decided to pay the impoverished Standard Oil Co. 50 cents per barrel in excess of the price paid last year. The Oil Trust will provide 17,000,000 barrels in all, thus pocketing a handsome sum totalling $8,500,000 to prevent "John D." from starving to death.

[illegible] that now was the time for the United States to recognize the Far Eastern Republic as the de facto government of Siberia. That would help American manufacturers in their drive for Siberian trade in competition with the Japs.

But now amid the trickling of tears, we hear the sobs of The Times, deploring the return of the Far Eastern Republic to the Soviet fold so that "the red flag of the world revolution rules from the Baltic to the Pacific." And far be it from The Times, speaking for the Wall Street bankers, to urge recognition of Soviet Russia, or any member of the Soviet Federation, that is so inconsiderate and undignified in its dealings with capitalists.

We take it that the term, "Read It and Weep," is but a turn on that exhortation in the game of craps, "Read 'Em and Weep." The Times, in common with the "statesmen" of Washington, and diplomats in Paris, London and Rome, rolled their dice in the world game of politics, no less than the darkie crapshooter rolls his. But they all came up of the same kind, defeats for Kolchak, Denikin, Yudenitch, Wrangel, defeats for world imperialism, victories for Soviet Rule, and the capitalist diplomats of the Versailles Peace and the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk have, as a result, all done their share of weeping.

Now when the editorial writer of The Times reads that Soviet Siberia will be added to Soviet Russia, Soviet Ukraine, Soviet Karelia, Soviet Georgia, Soviet Azerbaidjan and Soviet Armenia, he weeps some more. In the meantime the Washington diplomats and statesmen put on poker faces and await further distressing developments as best they can.

The Soviets and the Turks

From the rather sympathetic cables of Walter Duranty from Moscow to the New York Times we gather that the Isvestia, official organ of the Soviet Government, has served notice on the Turkish Nationalist Government not to oppress Turkish Communists. An article in the Isvestia is reported as saying that:

> "The Russian working class regards Turkish Communists and Turkish workers as its comrades. It shares their joys and sorrows. The Russian proletariat cannot sit cold-bloodedly watching the harsh oppression of its comrades in a country which it has already helped and is ready to help in the future in its struggle against the carnivores of the imperialist world.
> "Not only the Russian Communist Party, but all Russian workers and peasants, hotly protest against this unacceptable situation, in which the Turkish bourgeoisie oppresses the Turkish Communists and the proletariat.
> "In the interests of the existing friendly alliance between the two peoples the Angora government must once and for all abandon this policy of systematic oppression of Turkish Communists."

This can be interpreted as a Soviet invitation to the Turkish workers' and peasants' government, to oust all bourgeois elements, to get rid of the Kerenskys, the Scheidemanns and the Hendersons and establish their own Soviet Rule. Until the Turkish proletariat establishes its own dictatorship it can be expected that there will be counter-revolutionary persecution of Communists wherever possible.

It has come to our notice that the head of only one nation, Mustapha Kemal Pasha, spokesman for the Angora Turkish Nationalist Government, has greeted the Russian Soviet Government on its fifth anniversary, in the following felicitous message:

> "The Soviet Revolution overturned the old regime and inaugurated a new era, one of the principal features of which has been the establishment of a Russo-Turkish friendship which I am convinced will grow stronger and stronger."

No such message of friendship has been received by Soviet Russia from the "Socialist" President, Friedrich Ebert, of Germany, nor the "Socialist premiers" of other lands.

It is safe to assert that every firm stand of the Turkish workers' government against its internal and foreign enemies is prompted by the inspiration that comes from Soviet Russia's example.

Kemal Pasha and the Angora Government may be sympathetic with Soviet Rule in Russia, but they cannot declare their complete solidarity with it until they have wiped out the last bit of influence of Sultan, capitalist and landlord from their own midst. We join with the workers thruout the world in hoping this day will not be long in coming.

British Labor Moving Up

When the British reactionaries had used the Lloyd George coalition government for all that it was worth, they kicked it into the discard and forced the elections of Wednesday, Nov. 15. How well they played their cards is shown by the fact that they won 346 seats in the new parliament, a majority of from 80 to 85 over all parties, the greatest conservative victory since Benjamin Disraeli swept into power in 1874 with 352 conservative votes.

But altho the conservatives have won a great victory, altho Lloyd George and his liberals have been completely ditched, British reaction faces 142 spokesmen of labor in the next parliament, nearly double the 75 labor members in the last parliament.

This labor block, as a result of the struggles thru which the British working class has passed these last few years, will be more cohesive, more of a unit in action, than any previous parliamentary group speaking for the workers.

All of labor's "old guard," with the exception of Arthur Henderson, widely advertised as a possible "labor premier," have been elected, including MacDonald, Clynes, Snowden, Webb, Wilson, Tillett, Jowett and Thomas. Much cannot be expected from these, long alien to any symptoms of labor militancy. It was they who forced into the program of the Labor Party the traitor declaration that:

"Labor's program is the best bulwark against violent upheaval and class war. Democratic government can be made effective in this country without bloodshed or violence. Labor's policy is to bring about a more equitable distribution of the nation's wealth by constitutional means. This is neither Bolshevism nor Communism, but common sense and justice. This is labor's alternative, to reaction and revolution."

That is the declaration of the Scheidemannists of Great Britain, who are more responsible than the labor reactionists of any other country for the revival of the Second (Socialist) International, and the war of the Amsterdam Trade Union International against Communists in all countries.

But among these 142 labor members there are sure to develop young militants who will rise with the tide of revolution. It is they who will make developments in the House of Commons worth watching.

There will be two Communists in the next British parliament. J. T. Walton Newbold has been elected from the Motherwell Division of Lanarkshire as a candidate of the British Communist Party. S. Saklatvala, altho a Communist, was nominated as a Labor Party candidate and elected from Battersea, a working-class section of London. Saklatvala is a Parsee of Delhi, Ind., but has been living in England since 1903. He defeated his Lloyd Georgian opponent, 11,311 to 9,296.

The biggest feature of the British elections is that it strengthened both labor and reaction at the expense of the liberals, thus developing a greater class cleavage. British labor is making progress because it is gradually building a united front against its enemies. Let American labor learn this lesson.

AN ORGAN OF [illegible]

nifesto of the Workers Party [illegible] America's Toilers [illegible]

Organize the Party of Labor

orkers! Organize the Party of Labor!
anifesto of the Workers Party of America:

e working people of this country stand before an important decision. They must decide whether they will continue to support the political parties of their enemies and exploiters, the Republican and Democratic parties, or whether they will create a labor party which will carry political struggles of the workers against these parties.

many years the working people of this country have divided strength between the Republican and Democratic parties. Thru they have placed first one and then the other of these parties [illegible] result has always been the same for the workers. Whether one other of the old parties have been in office the machinery of the [illegible] has been used against the workers and to help the railroad the coal barons and trust magnates.

is has been particularly true since the war. During the war there up in this country a powerful centralised government at Washington. It is this centralized governmental power which is now being against the workers when they try to secure better wages and working conditions from their employers.

he coal strike and the steel strike of 1919 the Washington government mobilized all its power, from injunctions to soldiers, against the in order to beat them into submission to the terms of the employers. [illegible] industrial struggles of the past two years the federal government thrown its strength behind the open shoppers in their effort [illegible] living wage cannot be paid to the workers by the railroads. In the coal strike the Washington government participated actively struggle against the workers. In a half a dozen states soldiers called out by the governors in order to help the coal barons enforce scab shop and starvation wages in the mining industry.

The fight of the railway workers for a living wage and to maintain unions is the most striking example of how completely the government of the United States is an instrument of the capitalists to keep down wages and to smash the unions. [illegible] the Railroad Labor Board, created by the government [illegible] the workers on the railroads. Twice it has forced wage cuts upon the railroad workers. Its rulings have been such as to [illegible] In the shopmen's strike it did all within its power to destroy the workers' organization. The Coronado case decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is another instance showing how openly the capitalists use the governmental power against the workers. The Daugherty injunction issued during the shopmen's strike is conclusive proof that [illegible] the government is ready to take from the workers every right in order to help the bosses enforce their wage-cuts and to destroy the workers' organization.

The Daugherty injunction denied the shopmen the right of free speech. It denied them the right of a free press. It denied them the right of free assemblage. It denied them the right to organize. It denied them the right to use funds which they had paid into the treasury of their unions in the fight against the wage-cut and the effort to destroy their unions. Every page of the history of the last few years shows that the government of the United States is an instrument of the railroad kings, coal barons and trust magnates which they use to fight and rob the workers. The government is not only used in the [illegible] of the capitalists in the direct struggles against the workers, but to put thru such capitalist grabs as the new tariff and the ship subsidy bill. It is used to safeguard the investments of the international bankers as in the case of the rape of Haiti and Santo Domingo.

Are the workers of the United States to continue to use their political power to [illegible] cannot afford to pay a living wage and to enforce their decisions? Do they want more Daugherty injunctions, more Coronado decisions? Do they want to find injunctions and soldiers lined up against them every time they try to secure better wages and working conditions?

Nearly two million organized American workers have declared that they want a party of labor to fight the political battles of labor. The United Mine Workers of America, the sixteen railroad unions, the Typographical union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers have declared for independent political action by labor.

The representatives of these organizations will meet in Cleveland on December 11th together with representatives of the former organizations and the existing political parties of labor.

Workers of the United States! Demand that this Conference for Progressive Political action create a labor party. Some of the leaders of this conference are opposed to the organization of a labor party. They desire that labor shall continue to be the tail of the political parties of their enemies and exploiters. They wish to continue to "reward their friends and punish their enemies" in the Republican and Democratic parties, only to find in time of struggle between the workers and the bosses that they have only enemies in the government. Some of these leaders wish to make labor the tail of a party of small business men led by the La Follette and Borah and other middle class leaders.

Workers of the United States! The road of progress for the workers is thru a labor party. Only a party founded by the labor unions and dominated by labor can succeed. The future belongs to labor. The struggle of the future in the United States will be between a Labor Party and a party of big business. In England the Labor Party has become the second party in the country standing in opposition to the party of the English capitalists. That is the road American workers must travel.

Workers of the United States! You must use your political strength! Refuse to support the parties of your enemies! Refuse to permit your political power to be wasted in another "progressive" party! Demand the organization of a Labor Party!

You can compel the Conference for Progressive Political Action to [illegible] its readiness to become a part of the Labor Party as an autonomous body. It is ready to co-operate with the organized workers to create a mass political organization to fight the battles of labor.

FORWARD TO THE LABOR PARTY!
FORWARD TO THE RULE OF LABOR!

Workers Party of America, C. E. Ruthenberg, Executive Secretary.

he Workers Party Grows!

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, Secretary, Workers Party

The apportionment of delegates to the National Convention of the Workers Party of America, to be in New York City, beginning December 24th, the progress made by the Party during the four months.

The apportionment of delegates for the convention for August 20th was based upon the dues payments for the months of March, April, May and June. This tabulation of dues payments showed an average membership of 8,319 which paid dues for this period.

The apportionment of delegates to the convention be held in December is based upon the dues payments for the succeeding four months, July, August, September and October. For these four months the average dues payments were 12,394.

Contrasting the figures for these to succeeding months period shows an increase in the membership of the Workers Party of 50 per cent for the period. This increase was achieved in spite of fact that many of the Party organizers and speakers including the national secretary, were arrested in Bridgman raid and could not give their attention Party duties for from two to six weeks. The increase also is proof that the Workers Party organization cannot be intimidated by government raids and persecutions.

The figures above, however, do not tell the whole story of Party growth. For the months of October the dues payments to the Party reached 14,556. The October figures do not include dues payments from the majority of the members of the Czecho-Slovak Federation, none from the Scandinavian Federation and United Toilers. These organizations have come into the Party since, and their dues payments will first begin to show in the membership figures for November. It is a conservative estimate to place the dues paying membership of the Party at 20,000 at the present time.

The distribution of the Party membership by districts and the delegates apportioned is as follows:

No. 1, Boston, 2,031, 8; No. 2, New York, 3,175, 13; No. 3, Philadelphia, 411, 2; No. 5, Pittsburgh, 707, 3; No. 6, Cleveland, 1,160, 5; No. 7, Detroit, 656, 3; No. 8, Chicago, 1,242, 5; No. 9, Minneapolis, 1,470, 6; No. 10, St. Louis, 381, 2; No. 12, Seattle, 445, 2; No. 13, San Francisco, 498, 2; Unorganized, 218, 1. Total average membership, 12,394; total number of delegates, 52.

The membership figures above show a solid progress which should be an encouragement to every Party member and to every man and woman who is interested in building up a strong revolutionary organization of the workers of this country.

A complete copy of this surveying the problems confronting the delegates to the Fourth has been received by THE WORKER. Because of its historic we publish it in full as follows:

Spread this issue of THE WORKER among the toilers of this country. It tells the great need for a real Labor Party. [illegible] Trial Date Jan. 15

(Special to The Worker)

ST. JOSEPH, Mich.—Two more of the Michigan raid victims are to be released on bail, leaving eight still in jail, according to a statement issued here by C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary, Workers Party, himself one of the defendants.

Philip Arenberg, member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, of Chicago, has already had bail provided for him, while bail is also expected for John Mibelic, member of the Machinists' Union, of Kansas City, Mo.

The drive for bail for those remaining in jail will be continued with renewed vigor.

At the hearing Monday, Nov. 27, when William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg and the 19 other defendants pleaded not guilty to alleged violation of the Michigan syndicalist law, the trial date was set for Jan. 15.

The motion for the return of papers seized illegally was filed and set for argument Jan. 2.

Attorney O. L. Schmidt, in charge of the prosecution, announced papers ordering the extradition of 55 other delegates and visitors, who, it is claimed, escaped from the alleged convention of the Communist Party at Bridgeman, Mich., shortly before the raid will be drawn up immediately.

U. S. Supreme Court to Hear Arguments in the Ben Gitlow Case

The Supreme Court of the United States has granted a writ of error in the Ben Gitlow case. It means that the constitutionality of the Criminal Anarchy Law of the State of New York, punishing doctrine as doctrine, irrespective of overt acts, will be fully considered. Should it be proved that the law is unconstitutional, it will not only affect the seven New York State cases but will serve as a precedent for the 35 states where similar statutes, masquerading as criminal syndicalism laws, are in existence.

The question then becomes one of national significance. Workers have been subjected to many varieties of persecution within the last five years in many states thruout the country. The prosecutions have not stopped, by any means. In fact, they are increasing constantly.

The appeal of the Ben Gitlow case to the United States Supreme Court carries with it an issue of tremendous import. Every effort must be made to give a flawless presentation in briefs as well as arguments. This means expert legal help and counsel. Funds are badly needed. Any person or persons, labor or fraternal organizations interested in wiping out this reactionary legislation—from our state records should send contributions to: The National Defense Committee, New York Division, Room 405, 80 E. 11th Street, New York City, and help this organization to carry thru the fight.

Canadian Railroads Greet Newbold

WINNIPEG. — Congratulations were sent to J. T. Walton Newbold, newly-elected communist member of the British parliament for the Motherwell division, Scotland, by a group of Winnipeg railroaders. The cablegram read as follows:

"Congratulations, workers of Motherwell. News of election of Newbold hailed with keen satisfaction. You have won honorable distinction. Greetings from some railroad workers of Winnipeg."

Newbold was stopped at the doors of the house of commons by a policeman who refused to believe that he had been elected a member because he did not wear a silk hat and the conventional parliamentary clothes. In his first speech he referred to the king's ceremonial procession in opening parliament as a tomfool show on which too much money had been spent while unemployed were starving. He also praised Oliver Cromwell's manner of dealing with kings.

Progress in West Virginia

The recent West Virginia State Federation of Labor convention at Charleston was the most constructive ever held in this state. A resolution was unanimously adopted demanding the immediate recognition of Soviet Russia, and a loan from the United States of one billion dollars to Soviet Russia to buy farm machinery. This resolution was introduced by A. W. McComis, of Wyatt, and Lawson McMillion, of Rivesville. The resolution passed almost without debate.

The hard fight the West Virginia workers have gone thru for many years, and especially the last year, has opened their eyes, and the workers of this little mountain state are going forward, from now on. Nothing short of the Workers Party will satisfy them.

[illegible] Be Duped by This Buncomb!

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

All indications are that the champions of a class Labor Party will be compelled to battle a tidal wave of "reward and punish" sentiment at the Conference for Progressive Political Action, to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 11th.

The elements that have carried the Socialist Party, Farmer-Labor Party, Nonpartisan League and practically every other working class political effort, with the single exception of the WORKERS PARTY, into the Gompers' camp, are puffed to the point of bursting by their interpretation of the results of the recent election.

"Election Marks an Epoch; Trade Union Policy Succeeds," boldly announces the official weekly news service, Nov. 18, of the American Federation of Labor, yet the next senate will contain but one Farmer-Labor Party member, and the next house of representatives but one Socialist, and one Farmer-Laborite. The British Labor Party having elected 142 members to parliament, is less jubilant than the Gompers' organ.

Gompers claims 24 "friends" among the Senators, and 156 "friends" among the Representatives, including on his list some of the worst enemies of labor, like Johnson, of California; Beveridge, of Indiana, and their kind. But there are still those that can be fooled by this buncomb.

"Reaction Is Routed by Votes of Farmers and Workers," proclaims "Labor," the official organ of the Sixteen Associated Recognised Standard Railroad Labor Organizations, published at Washington, D. C.

From the Pacific Coast comes the assuring headline in the "West Side Union," Taft, Calif., "Labor Won! It Was a Knockout."

This crooked mental twist, that makes a labor "victory" out of the election of old party candidates, seems to have dominated the gathering of the National Committee of the Political Action Conference recently held in Washington.

There has been little publicity about this National Committee meeting, but Morris Hillquit announces thru the New York Call that, "a possible method of action will be the holding of state conventions to determine what method to employ, the permanent national body to support the ticket in each state selected.

In the same breath Hillquit declares that, "The Socialist delegates (to Cleveland) will contend in that conference for the formation of a national party of labor independent of the two old parties, and repudiating the idea of capturing nominations on old party tickets for men deemed favorable to labor."

Yet the Socialist Party, either thru its organization or its press, makes hardly a move to awaken the masses to the need of a class Labor Party. It seems to follow in the wake of anything that is offered.

Hillquit's "possible method of action" is no doubt the one decided on by the National Committee, and the one that it will urge at Cleveland. It is the policy of chaos that will have to be defeated if progress is to be made for a class Labor Party in the United States.

The fight will be the harder since those in power have seen fit to transfer the conference from Chicago to Cleveland. The Illinois city is the home of the militant Chicago Federation of Labor. Such an atmosphere might disturb the tranquility of those who want to make progress by standing still or slipping backward. The calm, conservative surroundings of the Ohio metropolis, home of the railroad brotherhoods, is no doubt more to their liking.

But, no matter where the conference is held, or under what conditions, the battle for a class Labor Party must be made, and will be made.

Workers! Bring up this matter in your labor unions. Send your demand for independent class political action to the Cleveland Conference. Send a demand from your shop, from your factory, from your mine, from your mill.

It is not what the leaders will, but what the masses demand, that wins in the end. Forward for a Labor Party and a greater and more successful struggle for political power.

New Jolt for Those Asleep

If the appointment of the railway lawyer, Pierce Butler, of St. Paul, Minn., by President Harding to the Supreme Court bench will shake the faith of a few more workers in the capitalist politicians, it will have served some good purpose.

It must surely have given a sad jolt to those republicans and democrats who think they are "progressive" and had visions of firing the next congress with something more than talk.

President Harding has put Taft, Sutherland and now Butler, into the Supreme Court, than which there could not possibly be a holy trinity of lawyers more reactionary.

If any forward ideas manage to seep thru the next congress, they will be quickly hit on the head by this wrecking crew togged in judicial ermine. How then will the labor "nonpartisans," who urge voting of old party tickets, make their explanation to the workers? They will no doubt offer some new palliative.

It will be left to the Communists to explain to the workers that the trouble is not with congress, the supreme court, or the presidency. Their enemy is the capitalist state. This must be swept away to make place for labor's own rule.

We do not believe that either Butler or La Follette on the supreme court bench would make much difference in the long run. We oppose Butler for the Supreme Court because it gives us an opportunity to show the workers the type of lash wielders the wage slave system places over them. And any man or woman who stands with either one of the old parties helps perpetuate that slave system.

Let the delegates bear this in mind as they make their way to labor's political conference to be held in Cleveland, Dec. 11th.

Tests made on its trial trip of a Russian locomotive manufactured entirely in a Soviet shop and of locomotives delivered by German shops showed Locomotive Works are being restored. Can't you hear the Russian workers proclaiming, "Watch out! Here we come!"

Sentiment for Class Labor Party Grows Among the Anthracite Miners, Says Kennedy

"The sentiment for a Labor Party is rapidly growing among the great masses of the anthracite coal miners of Pennsylvania," declares Thomas Kennedy, president, District No. 7 (Pennsylvania Anthracite), in a statement to THE WORKER.

Kennedy came to New York the other day to speak at a mass meeting to discuss the subject of "Coal."

He told THE WORKER that the international convention of the United Mine Workers is on record for independent labor political action, and that this ought to be the stand of the mine workers' delegation at the Cleveland Conference.

Coal Miners! Watch your delegates at Cleveland!

Cahan's Supporters in Chicago Try to Knife Soviet Relief Campaign

A group of reactionaries in control of the Jewish Workmen's Circles thru membership on the Chicago City Central Committee of that organization are endeavoring to extend the disruptive work of Abe Cahan and the Jewish Daily Forward. That these enemies of labor and apostles of capitalist reaction are still playing their filthy game is evidenced by a "resolution" to the effect that the Friends of Soviet Russia should submit their books to "a committee elected by the labor movement."

They entirely ignore the fact that an impartial committee has already branded Abe Cahan a liar and an unprincipled traducer of decent men and women who are devoting their time to the aid of Russia, instead of licking the boots of the supporters of Kolchak, Denikin, Pilsudski, Wrangel, the Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionaries who tried to crush the working class revolution in Russia and re-establish capitalism after the manner of the Jewish Daily Forward.

As far as the Chicago labor movement is concerned it will be easy to get a committee from the Chicago Federation of Labor that would verify the findings of the New York committee, which ought to be sufficient to silence the tirade of abuse against the Friends of Soviet Russia in Chicago.

But not even that would silence these creatures who do the dirty work for the capitalist class that their regular prostitutes shrink from attempting. Just as the French military mission in Russia had to go to the camp of the Social Revolutionaries to find human whelps so devoid of decency that they would burn railroad bridges and put glass in flour to destroy the lives of the starving children of Russia, so the capitalist class of the United States has to appeal to the Socialist Party publications to do the work that the descendants of Harrison Grey Otis would refuse to do.

Don't Throw This Paper Away Pass It on to Your Neighbor

"Bethlehem," The Ark of Clemenceau

Georges Clemenceau has started his American pilgrimage for the purpose of enlisting the United States in the Triple Entente—France, England and the U. S. A.—to wage new war against the rising Russian Soviet Power, that the French "Tiger" claims is allied with the Germans and the Turks.

Like Noah of old, he has a great mission,—this time to save the capitalist world—and he travels in a famous ark, than which there is no equal anywhere, the private car of Charles M. Schwab, head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

Schwab's car was christened "Bethlehem" and still bears that name as Clemenceau's ark to help preserve the present social order.

But Schwab didn't christen his luxurious metal palace on wheels after Bethlehem, of Judea, the birthplace of Jesus of Nazareth, the man of peace. He named it after Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, the capital city of Schwab's kingdom of coal and steel, a human cess pool where capitalism runs riot amid all its vices, wage slavery in its worst forms, prostitution, crime, drunkeness, in humanity completely debauched.

Clemenceau, the man of war, with mouth dripping blood, as Senator Borah described him, will enjoy the "Bethlehem" more when he sees the city after which it is named.

Schwab will tell Clemenceau about the great profits taken by the munitions manufacturing steel industry out of the last war, and discuss with him the possibilities for greater profits out of the next blood-letting.

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, in his "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," pictures "War" as riding a dashing steed. He had not seen Clemenceau, typifying war no less, riding the steel horse, Schwab's private car, "Bethlehem," with its sumptuous observation drawing room, inviting dining room, comfortable sleeping compartment and elaborate kitchen, ready to prepare any food.

If the workers of the United States knew the real significance of Clemenceau's war propaganda tour, they would meet this war chariot, "Bethlehem," with its cunning, diabolical rider in every city, town and hamlet thru which it passes, in great demonstrations, demanding, "NO MORE IMPERIALIST WARS." More than that, there wouldn't be workers blind enough to run the engine that hauls the Ark of Clemenceau. Workers! Strive toward that goal!

The Irish Executions

By THOMAS J. O'FLAHERTY

When the Irish Free State was accepted as a solution of the Irish question by Collins and Griffith we predicted that these men and their tools would take the place of the Black and Tans in enforcing British Imperialism on the Irish people. It has come to pass. A few days ago four young Irishmen went down to death before a firing squad composed of members of the Free State Army under the instructions of the Irish officials of the Free State.

These men who did the shooting were Irishmen. The men they murdered were Irishmen. And they murdered them in order to maintain the reign of British Imperialism in Ireland.

Where is the Irish Labor Party? What is the famous Irish Transport Workers' Union doing while these atrocities are being perpetrated? The Irish Labor Party led by the yellow charlatans who posed as revolutionists has by its cowardly silence condoned the murders. The Irish Transport Workers' Union in the grip of the whiskered faker, William O'Brien, the clodhopper, Tom Foran, who claims that "prosperity reigns in Ireland" and that other blatherskite, Cathal Shannon, who goes around with a volume of "Das Kapital" under his arm and talks of a Soviet Republic. These bogus revolutionists are too busy nursing the approximately $500,000 in the union treasury to raise a finger in defense of human liberty.

How long are the militant elements in the Irish labor movement going to tolerate such betrayers in their midst? What a change from the glorious days of Connolly and Larkin to the crawling creatures who today pose as leaders of the Irish working class!

The German republic was "quiet" on the fourth anniversary of its revolution, Nov. 9, and capitalism still lives in the land of Ebert, Scheidemann and Noske.

In the World of Books

By MAY SHACHTMAN

In the welter of cheap platitudes and pious hopes which is the food dispensed to the American working class by the publications of Sam Gompers' machine; amid the senile dronings of age-old formulas and panaceas by the American labor bureaucracy and its servile supporters, the Trade Union Educational League is the one clear note, the one ray of light, the one organization of firm hand and eye that is able to lead the workers out of what William Z. Foster, in his latest pamphlet, calls "The Bankruptcy of the American Labor Movement."

Foster is not a cloister theorist weaving a web of fine, distant possibilities or draughting utopian blue prints like Father Hagerty's famous "Wheel of Fortune." He combines a knowledge of the economics and the theory of industrial development of Marx, and a similar knowledge of the history of American and foreign labor movements, with a remarkable ability for practical mass organization work as exemplified in the packing house strike, the steel strike and the organization of the T. U. E. L.

In his latest pamphlet he shows the absolute insolvency of the A. F. of L. in the face of the gigantic growth of capitalism, the World War, the Russian Revolution, the drive for the Open Shop and the dozens of other developments which have the A. F. of L. not only retarded, but actually on the retreat. Without any sentimental regrets he places the blame for American Labor's comparative backwardness where it belongs—not with the reactionaries so much as with the radicals themselves, more specifically the dual unionists of every variety. Foster does not leave us hanging in the air of destructive criticism, but brings us to the solid earth of the practical program advocated by the T. U. E. L.

Hitherto we have fed American Labor with heavy theoretical tracts, which, while absolutely necessary, did not include works on specifically "American" conditions. They were exclusively translations of Russian, German, French or Italian books. Let us hope that this book by Foster will inaugurate a flood of "100% American" pamphlets. If a million copies of Foster's book, which is a masterpiece of labor pamphleteering, were sold to the American working class and read by them, we would confidently predict an intellectual revolution of unparalleled proportions. The pamphlet is sold for 25 cents or 15 cents in bundles of ten or more. Have you ordered your bundle? Address: Workers Party, 799 Broadway, New York City.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER. KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION.

"The word "Pictorial" in the new title is the key to the change. A major part of the magazine will be given over to pictures, of events and people and places in Soviet Russia. The pictures are supplied by the International Workers' Aid, with headquarters in Berlin, and all proceeds from their distribution will go toward the Orphans' Relief fund.

[illegible] R. Conferences Renew Activities

The revival of F. S. R. activities thru the United States and Canada has been great.

In cities and towns everywhere the call for vigorous action in behalf of the 600,000 homeless orphans in Russia and 400,000 in the Ukraine, and in support of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation has been answered in various ways. Mass meetings, Russian Teas, Bazaars, the showing of F. S. R. movies — these are some of the methods used to arouse interest and to raise funds.

The Forward Attacks Condemned

Resolutions condemning the efforts of the Jewish Daily Forward and other anti-Soviet groups to disrupt the activities of the F. S. R. are still pouring into the national office. There is one before us, for instance, from the Scranton, Pa., Conference of the F. S. R., expresseing full confidence in the organization and labeling the Forward in no uncertain manner.

Shall They Stay in [illegible]

By THOMAS J. O'FLAHERTY

Of the Communists who were arrested and indicted as a result of the Michigan raid on August 21st, [illegible] are still locked up in Berrien County Jail owing to our inability to raise bail for them. For over three months these comrades are confined in a congested stuffy prison without room to exercise outside of the narrow space between their cells; without fresh air except what comes in thru the bars of the jail windows.

Excepting the three occasions on which they were taken to Court these comrades have not seen the sky above them since August 21st. They are watched over constantly by agents of the Department of Justice. Their mail is censored. They are allowed to read only what passes the scrutiny of their jailers and the monotony of prison life is broken only by a visit every Sunday from a local psalm singing preacher and rare—very rare—visits from friends.

These comrades are not serving a prison sentence. They are simply awaiting trial. If Attorney General Daugherty's tools succeed in convicting them, the time they have already spent in prison will not be deducted from their sentence. Can it be possible that we are going to allow them to remain in jail until their cases come up for trial? What are we doing to raise bail for them? It is time we should get busy and do something.

What can be done? Let me tell you what was done and is being done in one city—the City of Detroit. As soon as news of the arrests reached that city the comrades got busy and elected a special defense secretary for each branch of the Workers Party. This comrade was charged with the responsibility of raising bail and funds for legal defense. As a result of this practical method the sum of $15,000 was raised in two weeks for bail and to date they have collected in addition $1,500 for defense.

The members were urged to loan their savings to the defense committee, the money to be used for bail. And they responded generously. One worker went to the bank and took out $2,000—all he possessed—and turned it over to the Committee. He said that his conscience would trouble him if he allowed this money to stay in the bank while his comrades were in a conjested, stuffy jail. What Detroit has done other cities and districts can do.

Appeal to your comrades to loan their savings so that our eight prisoners in Berrien County jail can be released. They deserve your confidence and your support. It has been their lot to fall into the clutches of the enemy. They are standing the test bravely. Are you willing to LOAN a few dollars so that they can come out into the open while they await trial?

Comrades, are we going to allow these victims of capitalist oppression to remain in those narrow unhealthy cells without doing everything in our power to get them out. The Sheriff offers them consolation by telling them that they will eat their Christmas dinner in jail. Let us get out of the apathy that seems to have gripped us. These comrades do not complain. They know they are class war prisoners. But every revolutionary worker who has a sense of duty must, at once, make up his mind that he owes a duty to these rebels. Get to work at once and raise a sufficient amount of bail to secure their release. You cannot shirk this obligation.

Fourth World Congress of the Communist International Opens in Red Petrograd; Greeted by Great Multitudes of Workers

By Radio to Imprecorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to
THE WORKER

PETROGRAD, Nov. 4.—On Nov. 3, the delegates to the Fourth Congress of the Communist International left Moscow for Petrograd where the Congress was to open. The Company of Honor, the Comintern Regiment, gave them an imposing welcome. Then followed speeches by the delegates from Germany, Russia, England, France and America. The road to Petrograd was festively decorated; flags were hung at all stations.

Petrograd itself made an elevating impression. An immense crowd of people had gathered for the arrival of the delegates. Thousands upon thousands of working men and women, members of the Red Army and the Red Navy, squadrons of Cavalry. The International pealed forth in all languages.

Comrade Yevdokimov greeted the delegates in the name of the Petrograd Communist Party. He declared that with the aid of the world proletariat Russia was becoming a great power. All interior and outer enemies are vanquished. Soviet Russia remained the outpost of the world revolution. Comrade Bozern, member of the newly elected Petrograd Soviet, wished the Congress success in its work. He hoped after another five years to be able to greet in Petrograd the delegates of the World Soviet Republics.

Comrade Heckert replied heartily in the name of the delegates. He declared Soviet Russia to be the guiding star of the world proletariat. The workers of the world must, like the Russian workers, vanquish their class enemies.

Comrade Lunatcharsky then spoke on the future of the proletariat. After him, Clara Zetkin, at the wis[illegible] of the clamouring working masse[illegible] mounted the speaker's tribune. Sh[illegible] declared that the minutes in whic[illegible] she had been able to be present he[illegible] to-day were alone worth a life-lon[illegible] fight for the revolution.

The delegations were then greet[illegible] by the Red Cavalry Gene[illegible] Budenny. He pledged himself [illegible] hold on high the flag of the R[illegible] Army until the final victory of [illegible] world revolution.

The delegations then repaired [illegible] the Smolny, at one time the hea[illegible] quarters of the Nov. 7th Revolutio[illegible] Here too they were given a mo[illegible] hearty reception. In the afterno[illegible] eighty meetings took place in [illegible] workshops, factories, institutes, b[illegible] racks of Petrograd, Kronstadt a[illegible] Gadchina. Everywhere the de[illegible] gates spoke. Everywhere masses [illegible] workers and soldiers; everywh[illegible] the same enthusiasm.

The manoeuvres of the Kronst[illegible] Red Fleet offered an overwhelmi[illegible] sight.

Comrades Serrati, Thalheim[illegible] Kun and Souvarine spoke in [illegible] Communist Universities. Se[illegible] spoke for affiliation to the Communist International. The workers bombarded the delegates with questions over the situation of the workers' movement in the various countries.

In the evening a women's meeting was held, with Comrade Zetkin participating.

A festival performance in the Petrograd theatre concluded the day.

Co[illegible] from Ballot

The Communists were prevented from taking any part in the recent elections in Latvia because of the arrest of their principal spokesmen.

The German Vorwaerts, organ of the United Socialists, is happy over the election of 30 members of the Lettish Social Democratic Labor Party and six Right Socialists, giving the Lettish "Socialists" 36 members out of a parliament with 100 members.

In elections to the Swedish provincial councils the Communists advanced from 21 to 31 members. The Left Wing Socialists have united with the Branting (Government) Social Democrats and together they increased from 322 to 346. The Swedish Liberals lost most heavily.

Altho it is claimed that the Peasant Party made gains in Bulgaria, the Communist Party appears to have held its own. Otto Wels, the German Scheidemannist, recently visited Bulgaria and won the Bulgarian Social Democratic Party for the Second (Socialist) International.

It is reported that Dr. Markovich, Communist member of the Jugoslav National Assembly, who had fled to Austria following the issuing of a warrant for his arrest for sedition, recently recrossed the border near Laibach, where he was seized by the police.

Norway is said to be following in the footsteps of Germany in providing for a system of shop councils covering all public and private plants. It is admitted this is a result of the growth of the Communist Party of Norway with 100,000 dues paying members in a population of 2,750,000. The Norwegian Communists publish 35 newspapers with a total circulation of 125,000.

Fourth Congress of C. I. Pays Tribute to Those Who Died for the Revolution

By Radio to Imprecorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to
THE WORKER

PETROGRAD, Nov. 6.—This morning the Fourth Congress of the Communist International paid tribute to the memory of the victims of the Russian Revolution. The place where those who died for the Revolution are buried, is adorned with red and black flags. Wreaths were laid on the graves of the victims to the accompaniment of salvos by the artillery.

Clara Zetkin in an impressive speech referred to the victims in Russia, Hungary and Munich (Bavaria) who fell under the flag of Bolshevism. She declared that we remember the victims not with sunken but with unfurled flags.

After this solemn commemoration came the march of the Petrograd proletariat to the Uritzky Square, where in 1905 the masses of peaceful demonstrators were shot down. In endless procession working men and working women, the youth, students of all faculties, party organizations, members of the Red Army and Navy and aviators passed the tribune of the Congress delegates amid deafening cheers for the world revolution, the Communist International and the solidarity of the proletariat.

The passing procession lasted three hours. In spite of torrents of rain the greatest enthusiasm prevailed among all the participants. This evening the opening session of the IV. World Congress takes place.

The Workers Party and the Labor Party

By C. E. RUTHENBERG,
Secretary, Workers Party

The question has arisen in the party whether the organization of a labor party means that the Workers Party becomes unnecessary and is to be liquidated.

It is of the greatest importance that every party member and the workers generally be given a clear and definite answer to this question. In order to make such an answer it is necessary to examine the reasons why the party has adopted the policy of supporting the organization of a labor party and of endeavoring to become part of the labor party.

Fundamentally the party policy is based upon a study of the economic and political developments in this country. It is the conclusion of the Central Executive Committee of the party that centralization of the state power in the Federal government, the open use of that power against the workers in every strike of any magnitude, the levelling process in the ranks of the workers which has made their status more nearly alike, the limitation on immigration which is developing a more homogenous working class, are factors which compel and make possible the organization of a labor party in the United States. As Communists, whose policies are based upon the economic and political realities of a given situation, we cannot oppose a development which the facts of the life of the workers themselves is bringing.

Even if opposition were not futile in the face of the facts which are bringing the labor party, it would not be desirable. The establishment of a labor party representative of the trade union movement of this country and having the support of millions of organized workers would be the greatest stride forward in the history of the American working-class.

Since opposition to the movement for a labor party would be futile because of the economic forces behind it — an anti-Communist policy — and because it would mean fighting an advance by the working masses, the question which must be answered is, what is the best policy to pursue in order that the labor party, when organized, will help develop the revolutionary working class movement of which the Workers Party is the leader?

In answering this question our policy in the trade unions offers an analogy which points to the right road for us to travel. It is the Communist policy as formulated by the Communist International and as practiced by the Communists in every country, to remain in the trade unions and there to carry on the struggle for industrial unionism and for a more militant and revolutionary unionism. In this country the Trade Union Educational League is conducting the struggle for such a unionism. The Trade Union Educational League is an organization within the trade union movement. Its slogans are, stay in the unions, fight in the unions for amalgamation, for industrial unionism, for a more militant unionism.

This policy is based upon the more fundamental Communist conception that the Communists must stay with the masses in their struggles. They must fight with them. They must not separate themselves from the mass of the workers but constantly carry on the struggle in close contact with the masses and thus develop more revolutionary action. This does not mean that Communists may not take a position in opposition to the desires of the mass of the workers when those desires are of a counter-revolutionary character. But as already shown, the organization of a labor party, far from being a step backward will be the greatest step forward in the life of the American workers.

The policy which we pursue in the trade unions to carry out our policy there is the same policy which the Central Executive Committee proposes shall be pursued in relation to the coming labor party. We must become part of it. We must work with the workers who go into the labor party. We must carry on our work of educating them to a clearer understanding of the class struggle and the tactics which must be pursued for the workers to win that struggle in close contact with them, as part of the labor party.

In what has been written above the answer to the question whether the Workers Party is to be liquidated when the labor party is organized already appears. If the Communists are to carry on a work of education in the labor party, if they are to be the driving force which will constantly push the labor party along the road of more revolutionary action, then they must be a closely united, well organized party within the labor party.

The Workers Party not only cannot be liquidated, but it must be strengthened. It must become more powerful. It must be a better disciplined organization. Its members must have a deeper understanding, a better education as Communists. Only a strong, powerful, disciplined party with an educated, understanding membership can play the part in the labor party which the Workers Party is destined to play.

The Workers Party must publish newspapers, it must publish leaflets and pamphlets and books. It must develop programs and slogans of action, it must lead the labor party into action. Inside of the labor party it must intensify its activities a hundredfold in order that it may inspire the mass of the workers in the labor party with its Communist understanding and purpose. Our part in the labor party is to make it the Workers Party—a Communist party, not to give up the Workers Party for the labor party.

How ridiculous the suggestion is that the Workers Party will not be needed when the labor party is organized is also made clear by what has happened in the trade union movement in this country. There the Trade Union Educational League has been specifically organized to carry on work in the trade unions analogous to the work which the Workers Party must carry on in the labor party. The Trade Union Educational League will be no longer needed when the trade unions become militant, revolutionary, industrial unions and just so the Workers Party will be no longer needed when the labor party becomes what the Workers Party is—a communist party.

Our slogan must be: "For a Labor Party!" But at the same time "For a stronger, more powerful, better disciplined Workers Party!"

Transvaluation of Values

When I was a patriot, saluting the blood-stained flag as it went by, I was one of the employed, and people say I saw.

But, since I studied, and became an idealist, I am out of work, and altho I see red, people claim that I am blind.—Edward J. Irwine.

"For A Labor Party"
Recent Revolutionary Changes in American Politics

In this pamphlet is contained the first scientific study of the conditions which make possible the organization of a Labor Party in the United States today.

Do you know:
The history of the Greenback Party?
Why the Greenback Party, the Knights of Labor and the Populist Party failed?
Do you know the changes that have taken place in the Government of the United States each time it has gone to war?
Do you know what has happened in regard to centralization of the government since the last war?
What effects has the war and the period since had upon the working class?
Why are the conditions ripe for the organization of a Labor Party?
Why will a Labor Party succeed whereas all but one of the third parties of the past failed.
What similarity in regard to its economic foundation will there be between the Labor Party and the Republican Party at the time of its birth?

WORKERS PARTY
[illegible] Broadway New York [illegible]

By JAY LOVESTONE

[illegible]

The Special Session

The dejected pilot of the sinking Republican ship, Gamaliel Harding, [illegible] this wreck and announced, even before the storm, that a special session of Congress would be called. The workers should not get lost philosophizing over the lessons of the Election.

They should forthwith prepare to bring up their heaviest artillery against the sinister plans likely to be put over by this repudiated collection of political bootleggers.

Unless the most powerfully organized pressure of the workers is brought to bear on this Holy Synod of the Bishops of Wall Street, the American workers will be robbed of hundreds of millions of dollars and will be chained still more helplessly to the chariot of their capitalist exploiters.

Rumor has it that Gamaliel the First is ready to talk business with some of his opponents in the House. The political winds seem to blow in the direction of a deal to give the Shipping Trust a bonus of hundreds of millions, in return for some form of crippled, mal-adjusted compensation for the ex-soldiers.

Whether this deal is put over or not remains to be seen, but one thing is certain: the workers must organize politically to put an end to the orgy of bonuses for capitalists.

Thru the infamous Esch-Cummins Act the Railroad Trust was handed millions and now the Shipping Barons are preparing to romp off with their pile of swag.

First we were given a white elephant in the shape of a fleet of wooden ships, the jokes of the high seas.

Then we sold these ships to the same gentry, that charged us exorbitant prices, at one-fortieth the price we paid them.

Now, in the words of the United States Chamber of Commerce, we must put the American flag on the ocean and the best way to do that is to pave the world's vast stretches of water with the dollars of American workers.

The Ship Subsidy Bill is one of the boldest attempts to loot the national treasury. Alongside of it, the old Railway grabs, the Dollar-a-Year Swindlers, and the Teapot Oil Dome Theft sink into insignificance.

United States Government—Strikebreaker

But the workers must not only pay bonuses to capitalists. They must also face a new campaign of capitalist oppression. The United States Government is planning to serve more openly and effectively as a strikebreaking agency of the big capitalists in their offensive which will be resumed with intensified vigor as soon as this spurt of prosperity bids us farewell. For instance the Kellogg Bill, the Dyer Bill the Nelson Bill, and the Hoch and Edmonds Bills.

The Kellogg Bill (S. 1943) aims to put some of Harding's promises to Labor into effect. The repudiated Senator's bill provides "for the better protection of aliens and the enforcement of their treaty rights"

This bill was born when the workers rose in defense against strikebreakers, some of whom happened to be foreigners at Herrin Ill.

This law gives the Federal courts the power to pass upon cases in which aliens are involved. It is another step in the direction of centralizing and strengthening the capitalist state powers. According to the Constitution such cases come within the police powers of the various States. But what is the Constitution when the supreme law of capitalism—the right to exploit the workers—is interfered with?

Section 4 of this bill authorizes the President to employ the marshalls of the United States and their deputies to enforce this law. The Bill goes further. It expressly authorizes the President to use the Army and Navy for this end.

Thus, if a scab happens to be an alien, the Government, pretending to be his protector, will hurl its full military and naval might against the strikers. Where this legal pretext does not exist, aliens might be deliberately hired to afford this excuse for employing the military and naval forces against the workers. This is legalizing strikebreaking by the United States Government on a national scale.

From the Herrin incident the Government has learned that the local courts may sometimes be too near the people. Therefore, such cases are to be turned over to the Federal Courts whose judges are appointed and who are immune to popular influence.

This bill to protect strikebreakers is supplemented by the Edmonds Bill (H. R. 12344) providing "for the deportation of aliens who participate in riotous gatherings' and for other purposes". This is simple. When an alien is a scab he is to be protected. When he is a striker he is to be hounded, subjected to a Third Degree, and then deported.

Even in the Anti-Lynching Bill of Representative Dyer (H. R. 13) there is a section aimed at the workers. This clause gives the Federal Courts the power to try State cases against people charged with rioting. The bill gives the Federal courts jurisdiction over cases of rioting which the State Governments are satisfied not to try after investigation. "Rioting" occurs most frequently when armed guards and private gunmen interfere with the workers' right to live. In considering the fact that this bill aims to secure Federal jurisdiction over industrial disputes we must not overlook the fact that it is next to impossible for the poor man to make a defense in the Federal courts because of the high cost of litigation in these citadels of capitalist injustice.

Senator Nelson in his (S. 3917 and S. 3918) puts the finishing touches on these slavery acts. This High Priest of Capitalist Tyranny seeks to amend the Federal laws so as to make the "summoning of witnesses in civil cases generally the same as that with respect to the "summoning of witnesses in civil cases under the anti-trust acts."

This means that the Federal judiciary will be further strengthened thru being given the power legally to kidnap from the States persons charged with the violation of the law. Under this law a miner charged with the violation of some statute in Pennsylvania might be kidnapped to be handed a dose of justice from His Majesty Wilkerson in Illinois. Attorney General Daugherty has been particularly anxious to have this bill passed. It is fully in line with his union-smashing injunction policies.

Finally we have the bill of Representative Hoch, now called "Hoch the Kaiser", of Kansas. He has introduced a bill (H. R. 12581) to create a Board of Railroad Adjustment whose findings shall be final. This Board is to "determine the justness and reasonableness of wages, hours of labor, working conditions or rules and practices." This bill forbids any union from doing anything which might be construed as interfering with the orders of the Board. These are some of the additional "teeth" Harding has wanted to put into the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act of 1920. It completely robs the rail workers of the right to strike.

What Shall The Workers Do?

The capitalists are desperate. They are forging new chains for the workers. They are strengthening the hand of their centralized organ of oppression—the National Government. Enraged by the heroic resistance of the miners, the textile workers, and the railway men they are bent upon using the State powers more ruthlessly and more speedily. The workers must be crushed. Their unions must be smashed.

It is obvious that our daily struggles are taking on a more and more openly political character. The most sacred of Constitutional scruples have gone to the winds. THE FIGHT TODAY IS A POLITICAL FIGHT. The workers must organize themselves to meet the new attack. They must organize themselves POLITICALLY. And the first step in any effective resistance on the part of the workers lies in their organizing AN INDEPENDENT Working CLASS Political PARTY—A LABOR PARTY.

Fiasco of Fake Labor Party in New York

By ISRAEL AMTER

The fake Labor Party in New York went down in a smashing defeat on November 7th. This party, made up of Socialists and Farmer-Laborites, received a vote far smaller than that cast for the Socialists in 1920 and less than that polled in the off-year of 1921. In 1920, when Debs ran as presidential candidate, the party received 131,956 votes in New York City; in 1921, the mayoralty candidate received 83,209 votes. In 1922, the COMBINED party polled only 62,435 votes, which is nearly 70,000 behind 1920 and more than 20,000 behind 1921. Surely there was never a better year for the concentration of sentiment on REAL labor issues than this year. And yet the combined party completely failed!

In 1916, the Socialist Party polled nearly 1,000,000 votes. That was a year of enthusiasm—in the midst of war in Europe, when the necessity of the revolutionary workers of America standing firm began to crystallize. In 1920, after the party had committed treason, had failed to keep its resolutions and had expelled the revolutionists; and after women's suffrage had become a fact, so that the vote should have DOUBLED, the vote remained practically stationary.

In 1921, in the midst of the worst wave of unemployment that the country has experienced, the vote decreased again; and this year, after the worst labor struggles that the American workers have passed thru and after the most brutal manifestation of force, violence and contempt for law and rights of the workers by the government the Socialist Party combined with the Farmer Labor Party of New York suffered another extensive decrease in support by the workers.

What are the reasons for the fiasco of the Labor Party?

The initial reason is the nature of one of its components the Socialist Party, its aims and program.

The second reason is the composition of the Labor Party.

The third reason is the purpose embodied in the formation of this Labor Party.

The Socialist Party was the predominating element in the Labor Party. Organized as a revolutionary party, this party to-day is utterly discredited in the eyes of the workers. It is useless to go into the history of betrayals by the leaders of the S. P. The diminution of votes cast for the party is adequate testimony to the vanishing faith the workers have in this party. As a talking machine, it vies with the other capitalist parties in making promises, thus lulling the workers to sleep, instead of awaking their fighting spirit. It is a party made up chiefly of lawyers, doctors, journalists and petty shop keepers, whose aims are all petty bourgeois. Reforms under the present system, with the capitalist as the overlord!

A large part of the working class is beginning to recognize the necessity of modern forms of organization. They are demanding a transformation of their craft unions into industrial unions. The reactionary officialdom of the American Federation of Labor is against this transformation—for obvious reasons. It will diminish their power. It will reduce the number of jobs. It will mean a change of form in order to increase efficiency — and to increase the fighting power of the organization. Sam Gompers is against it.

For 16 years, the American Federation of Labor has pursued the fateful policy of "rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies" of labor. As a result, the workers to-day face the worst form of military autocracy in America! This may be regarded as either the reward or punishment of labor for its stupid policy. The A. F. of L. officials, with their non-partisan political policy have kept the workers from independent political action, which alone has any outlook of affording the workers relief or protection from the assaults of the capitalist class. And if ever before, the workers needed protection of this kind, not only against the employers, but also against the government which has functioned openly in favor of the capitalists, it was this year. On Sept. 1, when Daugherty procured his infamous injunction, Sam Gompers recognized it — so did the Socialist Party. But then the merry game of "rewarding and punishing" went on.

How ludicrous this game may become may be seen in the Ohio campaign. The American Federation of Labor "rewarded" Senator Pomerene with its endorsement. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers "put its money" on Simon Fess. A splendid spectacle of organized labor fighting against organized labor for the election, in either case, of a capitalist senator! Each organization called the candidate endorsed by the other organization an "enemy of labor." Fess, the "enemy" assailed by the A. F. of L., won out.

Sam Gompers is against an independent Labor Party—and hence against the Labor Party that "also ran" in New York. He took pains to go to New York to procure the endorsement of the Central Trades and Labor Assembly for the Democratic ticket. Not a member of the Socialist Party or a [illegible] Labor Party dared to oppose him. Sam Gompers strewed a few "endorsements", which quieted the animosity of the Socialists. He endorsed Meyer London—and also his Democratic opponent. He scattered a few more "endorsements" — and peace reigned in the camp of the Socialists.

The rank and file of the A. F. of L. is in revolt against the officialdom of the organization. Large international bodies, state federations of labor and central labor bodies have come out for amalgamation—against which Gompers thundered in Chicago. International labor organizations will assemble Dec. 11th in Cleveland to discuss the question of independent political action by the workers—against which Gompers has hurled all his anger.

The Socialist Party, supposedly representing the revolutionary, the advanced workers of the country, had not a word to say against Gompers and his clique nor against his treacherous policy of keeping the workers from action. Just as the S. P. curried the favor of the Socialist officials at the head of the independent and progressive unions—and lost the confidence of the rank and file, so today it is also catering to the favor of the reactionary, yellow bureaucracy at the head of the A. F. of L. and cannot gain any support from the rank and file of the A. F. of L. A few endorsements silenced them. Gompers, Hillquit, Schlesinger—who can tell the difference today?

The second reason for the fiasco of the Labor Party was its composition. The Labor Party was composed of the Socialist Party, the Farmer-Labor Party and a few labor unions. The initiative in its formation was taken by the political parties. The Socialist Party membership in New York is very small. The Farmer-Labor Party has practically no membership at all in New York. It is made up of a few self-styled leaders, who are hypocritical and ignoran-

[illegible] (In Connecticut the Socialist Party withdrew from united action with the Workers Party and the Farmer Labor Party—the F. L. P. being far more progressive in Connecticut than in New York. In Chicago, the Workers Party supported the Farmer Labor Party, which is a party rooted in organized labor. The stand of the F. L. P. of New York is repudiated by the national organization of that party.)

The third reason for the fiasco of the Labor Party was the purpose for which the party was formed. As shown in the figures given at the beginning of this article, the vote of the Socialist Party is steadily declining. Its membership has sunk to about 6,000. Its composition is no longer working class. If the S. P. was to live any longer, some lawyer's trick would have to be used to give it at least "apparent" strength. A combination with another "party" (the handful of members of the F. L. P.) and the addition of a few trade unions would do. The Workers Party had to be excluded, since it would not give up the right of criticising the Labor Party, even if it supported it!

But the trick failed! The workers of New York had the healthy instinct of refusing to have faith in a party of politicians, who "hogged" the nominations and made the same "promises"—if not a few more and bigger ones—which it knew very well it could not fulfill. For are not the workers of Milwaukee, the "stronghold of Socialism," suffering from the same reaction that holds the whole country in its grip? Has the "socialistic" regime of Milwaukee freed them from the tyranny of the injunction, of the Coronado decision, of the Daugherty injunction, of the repudiation of the "living wage"? The workers repudiated the Labor Party because it was a miscarriage! It did not grow out of the needs of the labor movement: it was a product of scheming politicians, who thought in this way to "come back."

The failure of this fake Labor Party may be used to discredit the idea of a Labor Party. There is not the slightest doubt that the labor movement of America needs a Labor Party, if the trade unions are to survive the reactionary attacks of the big capitalists, of Wall Street and the government. Large unions, such as the United Mine Workers, the Big Four Brotherhoods, the Railway Section of the A. F. of L., the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the International Association of Machinists, the International Typographical Union, the Women's Trade Union League, and central labor bodies have recognized this need, [illegible] will send their delegates to the conference to be held in Cleveland, on December 11th, to discuss the question of a Labor Party.

The trade unions of this country must organize the Labor Party. It must represent the needs of organized labor. It must be a fighting organization, with a militant working class program. The party must also embrace the fighting farmers and working class political parties. It must be a United Front originating in the cardinal needs of the struggle that is taking place in the United States between the workers and small and tenant farmers on the one hand, and Wall Street and the Federal government on the other.

The fake Labor Party in New York has served its purpose. It has shown the workers what they should NOT do. The workers recognized the fake, and refused to support it. It is not to be expected that the politicians of the "labor party" have learned their lesson. Theirs is but to scheme and to plot.

Cleveland is the next goal of the organized labor movement. A REAL Party of Labor must be formed there.

Exhibit of New Russian Art

BERLIN.—The first exhibition of Russian art since the outbreak of the war was opened here under the auspices of the International Workers Aid and of the Berlin representatives of the Russian Commissariat for Public Education and Art. Consisting almost entirely of works since the Revolution, the exhibition has attracted wide attention. The comment in art circles is consistently enthusiastic and there is much in the collection that in its daring and force and freedom is symbolic of the revolution.

[illegible] War [illegible] to H[illegible]

John J. (Black Jack) Per[illegible] started on a Western cam[illegible] Bolshevism under the [illegible] the American Defense [illegible]. His first address was sche[illegible] Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. [illegible] dates: St. Louis, Dec. 4; [illegible] Dec. 6.

[illegible] of the American forces in [illegible] following in the western [illegible] of the French militarist, [illegible] will receive a shock [illegible] reaches Minneapolis to [illegible] first speech. For the World [illegible] Veterans have notified the Min[illegible] Pershing Reception Com[illegible] that the members of this or[illegible] will refuse to join in [illegible] the man they hold guilty of [illegible] murder of many Amer[illegible] soldiers in France. The declin[illegible] of the veterans is as follows:

Minneapolis, Minn. [illegible]
Mr. J. H. [illegible]
Senior Vice-President, Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association, Minneapolis, Minn.

My dear Mr. [illegible]: Your communication of the 22nd inst. received, together with admission tickets to the reception to be accorded General John J. Pershing in this city, Nov. 28th, 1922.

To merely offer my declination and that of the members of the World War Veterans to participate in the above mentioned reception, would leave much room for speculation as to the motive for such declination. I propose therefore, to make it clear to those who may be interested that there are "obligations" to which the World War Veterans bow and abide by—same making it impossible for us to participate in any sort of a gathering purposed to do honor to a man [illegible] of the soldiers and whose acts while he commanded the A. E. F. were responsible for avoidable hardships and deaths. This man, General John J. Pershing, I hold responsible for the condition of my many "buddies" who are at this writing confined in tubercular and insane asylums thruout the country and whose bodies and minds have been broken beyond recuperation.

Would our dead "buddies" if it were possible for them to speak, advise us to honor a man who is responsible to a great degree for many of their premature deaths? It is generally known, for instance, that the Great General was ready to sacrifice 125,000, or so, men to take St. Mihiel. I wonder what personal risk the General would have taken for possession of St. Mihiel? Almost any ex-service [illegible]

[illegible] to the Great General [illegible] efficiency [illegible] an attempt to save their lives." You will note the General speaks of efficiency [illegible] disposed of this by merely [illegible] of the men who served under General Pershing: "How much of the efficiency of the A. E. F. can be attributed to the General's ingenuity or efforts? Any ex-service man with a horse-sense foundation knows the answer.

In the Argonne battle hundreds of wounded men lay on the field of battle for, in some cases, forty-eight and fifty hours, some bleeding to death, others dying of exposure and lack of care. The many army doctors have often admitted that many [illegible] contrary to the orders of the Great General.

The General has attempted to justify himself by saying that sentiment has no room in war. In his justification he is using the language of super generalship, but is he a Super-General? An amateur, I claim; what experience did the General have in handling big armies before the World War? The Mexican Expedition, which at no time operated as a unit under one head, in fact the occasion was a farce from beginning to end. Did this experience fortify the General's ability to a point of efficiency, making him capable of com[illegible] to military affairs and a desire to expend their efforts for greater accomplishments and lesser losses.

Would our dead "buddies"—and those that congest the tubercular and insane asylums not condemn us for honoring a man who knew of the Armistice at seven o'clock on the morning of November 11th, 1918 and who permitted the fighting to go on until eleven o'clock the same day, causing thousands upon thousands to be killed and wounded needlessly? In one division alone, approximately six [illegible]

Concluding permit me to [illegible] of the efficiency [illegible] above that the World War Veterans for whom I have the honor to speak, are morally obligated to our "buddies" who fell and to those who are broken in body and mind. Our obligation demands of us not to honor but repudiate General John J. Pershing, whose inhuman [illegible] manifests itself in many little [illegible] crosses that shouldn't be there, and unspeakable suffering in the [illegible] hospitals. To honor the General is to be traitor to our dead "buddies."

Sincerely yours,
JACK BRADON,
National President, World War Veterans, Inc.

Seventh Installment of the Series of Articles Issued by Publicity Committee, Progressive Miners' Group, District 5 (Pittsburgh), U. M. W. of A.

Feeny Quits to Help Reaction Unite in Bitter Fight Against the Progressive Coal Miners

That the analysis that the Progressives made of the "radicals" who operate out of the Brownsville office was right has been proven this week. The reader will remember that we pointed out that Feeny, O'Leary and Hines belonged to the Lewis machine and that if the Progressive ticket became really dangerous to the machine, Feeny as a faithful tool of the "gang" would withdraw from his candidacy for district presidency to avoid splitting the conservative vote tho all three of these gentlemen had vigorously denounced the very men they are now supporting.

This is just what has happened. A pow wow has been held and it has been decided already that the Progressives may defeat the "machine" so Feeny has announced his withdrawal from the race. This occurred a few days after socialist renegades "Bob" Norman and Peggy Delbarre made unsuccessful attempts to persuade or scare Myerscough and Ray to withdraw at Feeny's instigation.

REAL BATTLE BEGINS

The Progressives are to be congratulated that so soon they have been able to clear the atmosphere, eliminate all hypocrites and reduce the fight to a straight plain issue between the notorious Fagan machine and the Progressives. As part of the trade made between the "left" and "right" wing of the machine International Board Member John O'Leary is to run for re-election to be supported by Fagan.

Altho O'Leary has been working with Feeny in the coke fields and has always had Feeny's support he is one of the most brazenly reactionary officials in the whole country. He led the fight to put Howat and the Kansas miners where they are.

Howat has just sent several thousand letters into District Five in which he says: "President Gibbons and Vice-President Fagan of District 5, and O'Leary, Dalrymple and Steele, International Board Members of Districts 5, 21 and 25, along with practically all other officials in the four above named districts, were extremely bitter in their denunciation of the expelled miners of our district. They deliberately misrepresented the facts to the miners of their districts. They tried to impress them with the idea that I and others were trying to disrupt the organization, and that they were the real Saviors of the Labor Movement, and that it was necessary that I and several thousand others should be kicked out so that they, with their wonderful knowledge and influence, might be able to save it from destruction; while the real facts are, I was fighting for the United Mine Workers of America before such upstarts and many others who were instrumental in kicking us out knew anything about the organization." (Signed) Alexander Howat.

Over Howat's own signature we have the unqualified condemnation of O'Leary as one of the active leaders against Howat. Delegates from this district to International Conventions well know the unfair tactics employed by O'Leary and the threats made personally to delegates who dared to vote for Howat. Does O'Leary dare to deny these charges?

O'Leary's Position on Fayette County Settlement

One might suppose from the fact that O'Leary was in charge of the Fayette County coke fields and public statements he had made, that he was opposed to the Cleveland settlement in so far as it made no provision for the care of the coke fields. The miners thru the coke fields were led to believe when O'Leary came home to join Feeny in the handling of the Fayette sub district that he was opposed to leaving out these miners. He deliberately allowed this impression to grow. But the Progressives have made such use of it that its effect is being felt in Indianapolis and O'Leary got instructions from Lewis to openly defend the settlement. So on Sunday, November 19th, at New Kensington, at a mass meeting O'Leary publicly stated that at first at Cleveland he "was bitter against a settlement leaving out the Fayette coke region, but the "forces" at Cleveland convinced him he was wrong."

Will O'Leary go into Fayette County and make this statement? Will he go among the barefoot children living in tents and shacks in Fayette County at the present moment and say this? No, a thousand times no. New Kensington is a long way from Fayette County and O'Leary was not figuring on the Fayette miners hearing his speech.

Will O'Leary explain why he did not come back from Cleveland and said nothing about a deliberate agreement made in Cleveland to leave out the coke fields which were in his care? Will he explain why he made no serious move to raise relief for these miners until the Pittsburgh Miners Relief had stirred up protest against his maladministration in September?

Watch for Booze and Mud

We have definite information that the "Machine" plans a gigantic campaign of booze and mud slinging in the closing days of the campaign. The booze has already made its appearance and will increase in geometric ratio as we approach election day December 12th, when it will become an avalanche. Only last Sunday members of the Progressive group were deliberately invited by prominent conservative candidates to join them in booze parties and were refused. Any candidate or progressive miner who at a time such as this indulges at any time or place in intoxication is a traitor to the miners and workers of this district and will be treated as such. We know efforts will be made to get miners drunk under incriminating circumstances. Leave liquor alone. We are in the midst of the greatest miners' fight in the history of District Five. Do your part.

We also know that sensational lies are to be printed and circulated broadcast at the last minute against candidates on the Progressive ticket.

There will [illegible] chance to answer them. You know the Progressive candidates and you have read their platform. You know men do not run on such a platform who are dishonest. What does the "machine" offer? Nothing. Therefore when they circulate their lies at the last minute do not listen. Tell them to publish them in time for replies. Vote the straight Progressive Ticket from top to bottom.

We know that Feeney and others are to publish sensational articles at the last minute in the Mine Workers' Journal. Miners who believe in fair play will not be stampeded by anything of this kind and will refuse to vote against the Progressive Ticket because of lies published by the booze hounds.

Revised Ticket

Naturally in a campaign such as the present one it was impossible that the entire Progressive ticket as originally planned should get on the union ballot at the end of two months of bitter fighting. For this reason certain minor revisions of the Progressive Ticket have been necessary. It is really remarkable how well the original ticket has stood up. Below is the correct Progressive Miners' Ticket which you should vote. Cut it out and take it with you to the election.

Organize now a Committee of Progressives in every Local Union who shall act as watchers to see that the correct count is made and the Secretary properly registers the count and mails it. Keep a record with witnesses of the vote cast and mail it the night of the election to Thomas Ray, Secretary, McDonald.

REMEMBER THE TRUMP CARD OF THE "MACHINE" IS "STEAL THE VOTES". If you allow them to steal the votes that is your fault.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

What Bosses Think of Railroad Strike

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE

One of the basic tenets of military strategy is to find out what the enemy wants you to do—and then do the opposite. Organized labor should take this tactic to heart in waging the class war. Had it done so in the recent coal and railroad battles the results would have been much more satisfactory to the workers.

It is not hard to learn what the masters want us to do. Merely by reading their own press, published for circulation among their own class and its satellites, we can easily learn what kind of unions we should belong to, what kind of leaders they should follow, and what kind of tactics they should pursue. We should learn the desires of the enemy—and give him the opposite.

Thus the current "Scribner's," in a lengthy review of "The Financial Situation," gives an illuminating account of the master-class view of recent happenings in the labor movement. The poor Dubb on the street does not associate labor union affairs with "The Financial Situation," but the banker and his editors know better. Only a few excerpts can be given here.

"In America, the five month's coal strike had so far curtailed supplies that even the country's steel and iron manufacturing plants, with unfilled orders on their books 40 per cent greater than a few months before, had been forced for lack of fuel to reduce by one-fifth its daily production of steel, and to blow out more than one-fourth of its active iron foundries. At a moment when hope for a settlement of that industrial dispute was coming into sight, the strike of the railway shop mechanics against the wage reduction by the Railway Labor Board had so far excited the feelings of operating railway forces that trainmen began to quit their duty, sometimes leaving a trainload of transcontinental passengers half way across the Western desert. The possibility of a general railway strike began to appeal to uneasy imaginations; occasionally predictions would be heard of enforced closing down of productive industry, of five or ten million laborers cut of work, of government seizure of the railroads, or a 'social revolution.'"

"That there was a radical element in the union membership, which was ready to resort to disorder, and which might have welcomed the complete upsetting of the industrial and social structure, has been manifest ever since 1918. This has made 'labor union politics,' the formal action on leaders and policies, a focus of contest and manoeuvre quite as active as the conflict of political parties at Washington.

"Nevertheless, conservatism has prevailed whenever the real test came. The bituminous coal strike was settled. The head of the railway trainmen's brotherhood ordered the men to return to work immediately. When the four brotherhoods of railway operating forces intervened to mediate the shopmen's strike they stated positively that no idea of a general railway strike had at any time been entertained."

One can almost hear the writer's sigh of relief over this happy ending. The workers had the plutes on the run. Between the miners and the shopmen a situation was developing in which profits might be pinched. A general walk-out of all railway workers would have resulted in a general tie-up of industry and possible aggressive action against the bosses on the part of the millions thrown out of work. The fighting spirit was in the rank and file of the railroaders, but the leaders "stated positively that no idea of a general railway strike had at any time been entertained," and "ordered the men to return to work immediately."

But this is by no means the end of the story. That will be written only when the workers, thru absolute control of their own government have put an end to the class war by abolishing its cause, the private ownership of industry for the exploitation of labor.

The railroaders do not relish being made scabs by their leaders. One union head, Grable, the President of the Maintenance of Way Workers, has already been told by his rank and file, "to return to work immediately"—in the section gang for all the delegates cared, but not in union office.

Let the writers on "The Financial Situation" write one thing into their hats. The year 1922 marks the last time that the American railroader permitted his leaders to make him haul scab coal in scab engines guarded by uniformed scabs under the orders of a strike-breaking Federal government.

Those "brotherhood heads," by whom the "idea of a general strike," (or any other for the past thirty years for that matter), "had never been entertained"—they are headed for the scrap heap.

When the bugle blows for the next battle we hope there will not be sixteen little armies to be beaten up one at a time—the Amalgamation program, fostered by the Trade Union Educational League is winning such wide-spread support that there should be but one army of railroad workers to go into battle as one man.

Strengthened further by an alliance with the miners and all other transport workers and supported by a solidly organized mass of all workers, the finish of that next battle will mark a great step nearer the final victory for the American working class.

[illegible] that from this point of view the revolution would be most advantageous in the United States. This country is, in the economic sense the most independent country. Agriculture and industry so balance each other, that the country would be able in the event of a savage blockade to carry on a perfectly independent economic life. In addition it is the most wealthy country in the world and has at its disposal the best industrial technique and almost half of the world's gold supply.

If, therefore, the proletariat of this country were to capture power, the material foundations, the organizatory and technical prerequisites for the establishment of Socialism would be extremely favorable.

The second country in line is Great Britain. But Russia, tho she does not occupy the last position in this respect (because there is also Asia and Africa), she at any rate occupies the last position within the borders of Eurppe.

Yet, if we examine the actual state of affairs, we are compelled to say, that the political pre-requisites in this most powerful and leading capitalist country, that is, the prerequisites for the creation of an appropriate class party are lacking the most.

In our country history began to unfold the scroll of evolution, and we were compelled during these five years to labor at Socialist construction in the economically backward country, under the continued domination of capital, which was deadly hostile to us, in the economically advanced capitalist states.

This is a fundamental fact, and from this arose the terrible bitterness of our civil war.

Lessons of the Russian Revolution

If we wish to speak of the lessons of the Russian Revolution, we must in the first place mention with pride our Party, which gave the most magnificent example to the proletarians of all countries, of how to fight for power and how the conquered power is to be defended by most stringent measures—with the help of the hardest, most merciless dictatorship if need be—hesitating before no step that will destroy the bourgeois hypocrisy, when it is a question of retaining the state power in the hands of the proletariat.

The workers of all countries must in the next few years learn from the teachings of the Russian Revolution. Whether we have or have not made mistakes in the civil war (of course, one can find mistakes if one seeks), we have left the classical part of our revolutionary activity behind us.

As to our economic activity we often spoke of mistakes which necessitated concessions,—the one great concession called the New Economic Policy.

The fact that at first we advanced steadily forward, then retreated, and are now digging ourselves in in definite positions, confuses the perspective, not only of our enemies, but also of many of our friends.

Journalists who are well disposed [illegible] American city, and they ask what guarantee is there that we Communists will make a halt on the road of concessions and lead the development in the direction of Communism and not in that of capitalism?

Upon superficial observation it would appear as if the Socialist gains of the first period were now in some way disappearing automatically and as if there were no evidence of those forces which are capable of holding them fast.

But Comrades, the question can be reversed. Let us forget for a moment that previously we proceeded along the way of so-called War Communism and then went back to our present position. Let us compare the present position with the position on October 25th (Nov. 7, new calendar), 1917.

If our foreign friends and the comrades of Europe and America ask us this question, then we can reply as follows: The railways, mines, factories, workshops and a very great portion of the land was at that time in the hands of private owners. To-day, all the railways, the overwhelming majority, or at least all important factories and workshops, all valuable mineral resources are in the hands of the State, in which the working class governs, supported by the mass of the peasants. That is the result which we see after five years of our rule. We advanced and we retreated, but the result is that [illegible] tive. How do you picture to yourselves the process of nationalizing the means of production and the process of organizing Socialism?

Our teachers in all our old books, and we too in our own books, repeatedly said and wrote, that the working class, after taking over the state power, would carry out the process of nationalization step by step, beginning with the most essential means of production. Does this rule remain in force to-day? Most certainly.

At the fourth congress which will consider the Communist program, the question whether, the working class, when it takes over power, in England or France, shall destroy the organization apparatus of the technical means of commerce and set in its place a universal method of accounting, must be answered in the negative.

The working class must employ the bourgeois methods of payment, of calculation, the methods of the exchanges, of the banks, and only gradually, in accordance with its technical strength and capacity, pass to a Socialist economic system.

In this lies the greatest difference between the Russian proletarian revolution and the future proletarian revolution, for example in America. [illegible] revolution took the bourgeoisie by surprise.

We not only disarmed the bourgeoisie before the 25th of October and in the night from the 25th to the 26th, but in the three years after the 25th of October.

The bourgeoisie, the land owners, and the officers only saw the real situation after the 25th of October and began a war against us with the aid of European capital. In Europe this process is going on quite differently than with us. In Europe the organization and arming of the counter-revolutionary forces—side by side with the preparation of the Communist parties for this struggle—is now going on, and the struggle will be much harder,—not after, but before the 25th of October (Nov. 7).

Of course, Socialism receives its practical as well as theoretical justification when it is able to furnish labor power for a greater quantity of products to satisfy its social needs than capitalism was able to. And it is a fact that Soviet Russia is one of the poorest countries.

The French representatives at Genoa impudently reproached us with the assertion that Europe had nothing to learn from us, as Russia was [illegible] year 1917. That is out of the question.

But this is the price we paid for the revolution. Not a single revolution has been carried out without a reduction of the economic level of the country, and the bourgeois conservative historian Taine asserts that eight years after the great French Revolution, the French people were much poorer than before the Revolution. And that is true.

Hence, we see in our country, for the time being, more capitalist ruin than Socialist construction. The time elapsed is still too short. We must emphasize this once more at the fourth congress of the Communist International.

The five years which were devoted to the task of replacing Capitalism by Socialism, the greatest historical revolution, when we began to build up Socialism in the most backward country (while the great French Revolution broke out in the most advanced country on the continent, which stood higher than all the remaining states except England) could not suffice to bring about the necessary modifications of our social life.

These, comrades, are the conclusions, which we, in the name of our Party, shall present to the 4th congress, and there we shall have to ask our European and American comrades and also ourselves, what is the position and the prospects for the development of the European [illegible] and America!

The European Com[illegible] Win Over the Working [illegible]

We now ask, whether [illegible] and world capitalism is [illegible] whether it is still capable of [illegible] During the year 1920, the [illegible] economic system passed thru a terrible crisis. Such a crisis [illegible] precedented in the history of capitalism. This crisis began in the [illegible] part of 1920, extended thruout the whole of Europe, and in the [illegible] half of 1921 reached an [illegible] depth and intensity.

The Third Congress met just at the time when the crisis [illegible] thruout the world, when in America there were about 5 to 6 millions, and in England about 2 million [illegible] ployed.

Many comrades were of the opinion that this was the last and [illegible] crisis which would lead to the collapse of the capitalist system and to the proletarian revolution, to civil war and the conquest of power. The tactics of the March days in Germany arose out of such psychology.

Many lively debates raged round this question, not only among the European comrades, but in our own ranks. And now the Communist International is issuing as an official document the economic report of Comrade Varga, which is based on the fact that the period of prosperity

Comrades of the Jewish Federation!

Stand by the Party!

STATEMENT BY THE CENTRAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE WORKERS PARTY

A faction of the Executive Committee of the Jewish Federation is endeavoring to disrupt the Jewish Federation and to bring disorganization into the ranks of the Party.

This faction, led by Olgin, Hoffman, Wishnak and others, who were entrusted with important places in the Party organization, has become drunk because of the power which the Party membership has permitted them to wield. After months of violation of Party discipline this group has openly defied the authority of the highest Party authority and issued a call for a convention of the Jewish Federation after the Administrative Council of the Party had set the date for the convention of the Federation.

The Administrative Council of the Party submits this statement of facts of the situation to the Party, and particularly to the members of the Jewish Federation, so that these disruptionists, who are trying to break up the Jewish Federation, may be rebuked and put in their places by the members of the Federation.

PARTY UNITY FIRST

In all its dealings with the faction of the Executive Committee of the Jewish Federation which is now endeavoring to disrupt the Federation, the Central Executive Committee of the Party has placed the unity of the Party first. It has repeatedly reconsidered its decisions and endeavored to come to an agreement with this faction rather than use its disciplinary power and suspend the faction which broke the discipline of the Party.

The Central Executive Committee has maintained this policy, because it hoped that the faction which was defying the discipline of the Party would come to its senses and not carry its criminal policy to the point of creating a split in the Jewish Federation.

The time for splits in the revolutionary movement in this country is past. The Workers Party from its beginning has been a movement for unification, for bringing together all those workers who are ready to work in harmony with the leadership of the Communist International, into one powerful centralized, disciplined party. The Party has made great progress in achieving this end. At the outset it secured affiliation with the party of many of these groups and it had added more. Only recently the Czechoslovak and Scandinavian Federations and the United Toilers have joined the Party. The Party has grown in strength and power. It is on the road to become a powerful factor in the life of the American workers.

This progress seems not to the liking of the disruptionist group in the Executive Committee of the Jewish Federation. Because this little group cannot have its own way it has set out to destroy the Jewish Federation. This group of disruptionists is out to destroy the "Freiheit." It must know that its tactics can have no other result. In order that the "Freiheit" may live it must have a united Federation behind it. It must have a united party supporting it. Yet this faction has not hesitated to create a situation which may disrupt the Federation and bring disorganization into this branch of the Party. Such is their loyalty to the revolutionary movement, such is their loyalty to the Communist International, that to achieve their own petty ends they do not hesitate to destroy the instruments which build the movement and support the Communist International.

CITY CONVENTION, DEC. 10

The City Convention of Local Greater New York will be held Sunday, Dec. 10th, at 10 A. M., at Labor Temple, 2[illegible] E. 84th St.

Before a Party Convention

These tactics are adopted by this faction at a time when a convention of the Workers Party is only six or seven weeks off. They call a convention of the Jewish Federation before the Party convention. In place of waiting for the Party, as a whole, to speak they call a convention of the Federation before the Party convention and endeavor to intimidate the Party convention by their threat of disruption if they cannot have their way.

The Open Communist Party

In order to have an issue on which to hang their factional purpose, this disruptionist group has raised the issue of an open communist party. They declare that they desire to make the Workers Party an open communist party but they show by all their actions that they are unfit to be members of a communist party.

A communist party which is not a centralized, disciplined organization is not worthy of the name. One of the fundamental principles which the Communist International has laid down as the basis of a communist party is that it has a centralized authority that between conventions of the party the central executive committee shall have supreme authority.

What do these pseudo-Communists these phrase-Communists say on this point. In their manifesto they mouth the phrases of Communism. They speak of a centralized, disciplined Communist party, but they argue "the Central Executive Committee has no power over the executive committee of the Federation . . ."

That is the kind of Communists they are! No Communists at all but centrists who use the phrases of Communism but do not understand and never can understand the principles of Communism.

The Central Executive Committee has known that it had to deal with men who were Centrists and not Communists in this group, which is now trying to disrupt the Jewish Federation. They were permitted to become part of the Workers Party at the time of its formation for the sake of the following of Jewish workers who still supported them, to whom the Central Executive Committee desired to show by the actual developments of the workers' struggle that they could not be trusted.

These Centrists, the Olgins and Hoffmans, etc., have shown by their methods of conducting the struggles of the Workers Party that they are not Communists. They have never given whole-hearted support to the policies of the Communist International in the "Freiheit"—the failure to uphold the United Front policy of the Communist International is only one instance. In June the C. E. C. of the Party was obliged to sharply call the editor of the "Freiheit" to account and lay down stringent instructions in regard to the attitude of the "Freiheit" toward the Communist International because of the scandalous condition which existed of a Workers Party paper which was sabotaging the policies of the Communist International.

General Membership Meeting, Dec. 3rd!

Sunday, December 3rd, 1 P. M., at Casino Mansion, 85 E. 4th St., a general membership meeting of the Workers Party will be held for the purpose of discussing our attitude towards the formation of a Labor Party.

Only good standing members admitted. Good standing members are those who are less than three months in arrears. The discussion will be led by C. E. Ruthenberg.

The fight these Centrists have conducted against the yellow Socialist daily "The Forward" has not been a Communist struggle but a Centrist fight for clean, literary journalism against dirty, vulgar journalism. Their fight in the labor unions have consisted of attacks on the personal morals and integrity of reactionary leaders rather than a struggle to have the unions work in harmony with Communist principles.

The Party has tolerated these centrists—is still ready to tolerate them in the organization—because their tactics and policies must be exposed in the process of the struggle in order that the workers may realize their true character. But the Party will not permit them to mislead any part of the organization thru their centrist tactics. That would mean that the Workers Party would never be a communist party; but would soon be lost in the quagmire of centrist irresolution and decay.

These Centrists expose themselves as centrists in their very method of endeavoring to establish an open communist party. A communist party is not created by calling it by the name "Communist Party." It is created by its work. The Central Executive Committee is of the opinion that the Workers Party is now a communist party—that in its newly established fraternal relations with the Communist International, that by its tactics in the struggle in this country, by the new program which the C. E. C. has proposed to the coming convention of the Party there is established beyond any challenge that our Party is fighting for, and loyal to the principles of Communism as formulated by the Communist International.

The Communist Party of America

In the character of this attack they again expose themselves as Centrists, as men who have no understanding of Communist principles or who wilfully ignore facts in order that they may make an argument.

The Communist Party of America was organized at an open convention in 1919. It, together with the Communist Labor Party, organized at the same time, declared as their purpose to openly advocate the principles of the Communist International in the United States and to become the American Section of the Communist International. At the time of their organization these two parties had sixty thousand members.

The programs of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party of 1919 endeavored to remain within the bounds of bourgeois legality in stating the principles of Communism. While revolutionary in their implications they were conservative in their statements. But this availed these parties not at all.

The history of the brutal persecution and repression directed against these organizations, the deportations and jailings must be known to the Olgins, Hoffmans and other centrists. These men were at that time attacking the Communist movement in the columns of the "yellow" Forward. These men must know that within a few days twenty members of the Communist Labor Party are being sent to prison in Illinois. They must know that six other former members of that Party are on trial in California. They must know that twenty members of the Communist Party were arrested in August at Bridgeman, Mich. If they know these things they know that the reason the American Section of the Communist International, the Communist Party of America, is an underground organization is because of the brutal repression and prosecution by the capitalist governmental officers.

The Communist Party of America has declared that it is not an inherent feature of a Communist party to be an underground organization. It has declared that it is only bitter necessity which compels it to exist as an underground organization. It has declared that it will do everything within its power to participate openly in the political life of the country.

If the centrist disruptionists really desired an open communist party in place of paper declarations, they would direct their energies to creating the conditions which would enable the Communist Party of America, American Section of the Communist International to live in the open and work in the open. That end can only be achieved thru building a great mass movement of the workers, under the leadership of the Workers Party which thru its power can prevent the government from using repressive measures to destroy the Communist Party of America. That is the task which the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has set for itself. The Workers Party is a communist party, but it cannot become the Communist Party of America, the American Section of the Communist International, as long as the Communist Party is compelled to exist underground. It is the task of the Workers Party to create those conditions which will enable the Communist Party of America to exist openly, to fight and work openly. In achieving that end the C. E. C. asks the loyal co-operation of every Party member.

Facts About the Controversy

The controversy in the Jewish Federation which the centrist disruptionists are trying to turn into a split arose out of the following situation.

By agreement, at the time of the organization of the Jewish Federation, the two groups which united were to be equally represented on the Executive Committe of the Federation until the convention. When this equal division of representation was disturbed the C. E. C. of the Party ordered the Executive Committee to restore it by accepting two new representatives of the former A. L. A. group.

The C. E. C. of the Party did not endeavor to change the situation which had existed. It did not endeavor to do violence to the agreement to which the centrist disruptionists point as the source of their rights. It endeavored to maintain that agreement.

The centrist disruptionists refused to carry out the decision of the C. E. C. They openly violated Party discipline in refusing to carry out a decision of the C. E. C. They had gained an advantage by an organization trick. They knew they could not hope to win in an open struggle over Communist principles so they hung on to their little advantage for dear life.

CONVENTION NOTICE!

City Central Committees and unaffiliated branches of the Workers Party, District No. 2, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, are requested to note that the District Convention will be held at the Labor Temple, 243 E. 84th Street, New York City, on Sunday, Dec. 17. Convention will open 10 A. M. All members of the party in District No. 2, are taxed 50 cents per member in order to defray the expenses of the District Convention and of the Delegates to the National Convention from this district. This tax must be paid by all members to their branch Financial Secretary, who will turn it over to the Secretary of the City Central Committee or the District Office without delay. Members employed and not paying the tax will not be considered in good standing.—Edward Lindgren, District Organizer.

The C. E. C. did not act arbitrarily, as it had a right to do, and expel these violators of Party discipline from the Party. It desired to prevent conflict and disruption in the Jewish Federation. It elected a committee to discuss the situation with the centrist faction of the federation executive committee.

No agreement could be reached, however. The C. E. C. thereupon made the following decision:

1. That a convention of the Jewish Federation be held during the first week of January.
2. That until the convention a committee of ten, made up of five representatives from each side should conduct the work of the Federation. This committee also to arrange the convention.

The Convention was called within eight weeks. Each side was to be equally represented during the period until the convention. Did the disruptionists accept this proposal which gave them equal rights and equal opportunity to win control of the Federation thru winning a majority of the convention delegates?

Their answer was to call a convention in December, to deny the authority of the C. E. C., to trample upon Party discipline. And these men talk about being Communists and about a disciplined party!

Defend the Jewish Federation

Comrades of the Jewish Federation, the Administrative Council calls upon you to defend the unity of your Federation, to save the "Freiheit," to prevent disorganization in our Party. We call upon you to teach these centrist disruptionists what it really means to be a Communist.

Three New York Branches of your Federation have already spoken, by a vote of 51 to 19 in the Down Town Branch, 48 to 29 in Bronx Branch and 30 to 1 in the Brownsville Branch the action of the C. E. C. has been upheld and the Branches have been demanding the removal of the Executive Commitee of the Federation. Let every Branch adopt a similar resolution. Teach these centrist disruptionists their places.

Decisions of Administrative Council

The Administrative Council of the Party has made the following decision which every Party Branch is bound to carry out:

1. That the Administrative Council takes charge of the affairs of the Jewish Federation and arranges the Convention. The convention called by the faction of the Executive Committee is declared not a convention of the Jewish Federation of the Workers Party.

2. That all property of the Jewish Federation, including the "Freiheit" is taken over by the Administrative Council until a new [illegible] elected by the Convention of the Jewish Federation.

3. That the Administrative Council immediately elects a secretary to take charge of the affairs of the Jewish Federation under the direction of the Administrative Council.

4. That all Jewish Branches are instructed to make all payments for stamps and other Party supplies and to make all settlements on account of the "Freiheit" thru the secretary appointed by the Administrative Council.

While the Administrative Council does not recognize the convention called by the centrist disruptionists as a convention of the Jewish Federation it proposes that the Jewish Branches teach these disruptionists a lesson at their own convention.

As the vote of the New York Branches already shows the Jewish Federation is overwhelmingly against disruption of the Federation thru the methods of the centrists. The Administrative Council of the Party, therefore, directs each Branch, which approves of the position of the Central Executive Committee and which wishes to put down the disruptionists and save the "Freiheit," to take the following action:

1. To adopt a resolution declaring the December Convention not a convention of the Jewish Federation.
2. To adopt a resolution denouncing the action of Olgin, Hoffman, Wishnak, Salzman, Siegel, Poll[illegible] and Juditch, and also, demanding their expulsion from the Party.
3. To elect delegates to the December convention called by the disruptionists, notifying the Executive Secretary of the Party of their election. The delegates to hold themselves in readiness for further instructions from the Administrative Council.

Comrades of the Jewish Federation! The issue is clear. Is our Party a party worthy of the name Communist? Is it a party of discipline? Can a group of centrist disruptionists mislead our members and destroy our solidarity?

Comrades! Let us give these centrist disruptionists an example of the Communist spirit. Let us show them what discipline and solidarity mean.—Down with disruption! Down with centrism in our Party! Hail to Communism! Hail to discipline and solidarity! Uphold the unity of the Federation and of the Party!

SUBJECT: [illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible] the second half of 1921 and [illegible] the first half of 1922. [illegible] Third World Congress the [illegible] Communist Party with its [illegible] occupied the central [illegible] discussion. The International was compelled to issue new [illegible] and to declare that the task [illegible] European Communists did not [illegible] capturing power to-day or [illegible] but in winning the majority of the working class and in [illegible] the political preliminaries [illegible] seizure of power. The German section is making very good [illegible] this lesson.

[illegible] France we are politically in a [illegible] more backward position than Germany. I am speaking of the Communist Party itself. This is [illegible] by the French Communist [illegible]—altho in a smaller scale—re[illegible] the March errors of the German Party.

The International [illegible] in general a [illegible] beautiful thing and the instruction of one party thru another is [illegible] an invaluable thing. But we [illegible] say that each section of the working class possesses the tendency [illegible] each error upon its own back. [illegible] International can only help in [illegible] direction that fewer scars re[illegible] on these backs, but history [illegible] proceed without some scars.

[illegible] saw this recently in France at [illegible] port of Havre, where the C. G. T. U., the federation of the revolutionary trade unions which is in close connection with the Communist Party, called the working class to the general strike after the shooting of three insurgent workers. [illegible] strike.

If in Germany (in March), a quarter, a fifth or a sixth of the working class responded to the call for a general strike, in France a still smaller fragment of the French proletariat participated in the general strike.

And if we read the reports of this affair in the French papers and how it was arranged we are compelled to perceive how young and inexperienced the Communist parties of Western Europe are.

At the Fourth Congress, the French section will appear as an inwardly disunited party just as the German Communist party appeared at the Third Congress. At that time the Communist International played an important rôle in restoring the unity of the Party, and contributed very much to the capacity of its leadership. I believe that the French Communist Party is in the same stage as the German party was in the early part of last year.

The situation in Italy is still more acute. In September, 1920, the Communist wing separated from the old Socialist Party, about a third of the old Socialist Party. The old Socialist Party, i. e. the Centre and the Right continued to exist.

Under the attacks of the bourgeoisie who placed the executive power in the hands of the Fascisti, the reformists marched more and more to the right and sought to enter the government. This led to a breach with the so-called Right wing of the Socialist Party, the Serrati group.

The Serrati-Party decided at its [illegible] Communist International. [illegible] Fourth Congress: [illegible] Party and the Serrati-Party, which after a long detour wishes again to enter the Communist International. The majority of this party are without doubt striving after real revolutionary work.

A word with regard to England. The Communist Party there is still a successful agitation and propaganda organization and not a party which is able to assemble the masses behind it. But in England the circumstances are becoming continually more favorable for us, not only within the limits of the Communist Party, but with the whole working class.

Lloyd George's Gift to the Soviet Government

To-day we received a telegram announcing the resignation of Lloyd George. His was the only government that was older than our own (laughter). It is evident that of all governments we are the most firmly established. That is a charming present from Lloyd George to our anniversary in order not to grieve us (laughter).

In France the policy of the Bloc National with Poincaré at the head, resembles the policy of Lloyd George and differs in nothing from it, altho the German journalist Harden said to me to-day that the policy of Lloyd George and the policy of Poincaré differed as the heavens from the earth, and that while Lloyd George enjoyed a great popularity in Russia, Poincaré was [illegible] wider perspectives for our Communist sections.

But, comrades, all these underlying facts of which I speak arise from the one fact that we in Europe are still in the period of preparing the inner organization of the Communist parties, in the period of struggle for influence over the working masses.

This means that we, the Soviet Republic, must give to the Communist Parties of Europe one, two or three years for work of preparation, and this preparatory work is much harder than with us, because there, the enemy is much more clever and rational; in all European countries we see the formation of counter-revolutionary Fascisti bands, which was not the case with us. Fascism has ceased to be a purely Italian phenomenon. It is spreading in all countries.

In Germany it is the Orgesch and those bands which only change their sign boards. In France, Fascism appears under the sign of Royalism. In France there is a Royalist Party headed by Leon Daudet, the son of the writer Alphonse Daudet. This [illegible]

Parallel with this runs the long drawn-out process of our Socialist organization, of our Socialist construction, and for this reason we must turn from temporary method of existence to a more permanent mode of life and from haphazard work to systematic, methodical work.

We must change from our absolute generality—in which I am in entire agreement with Comrade Bucharin—to specialization, to perfecting our knowledge in all spheres, and we must strongly combat that type which arose during these five years, that is, the type that looks on at things from the outside and knows everything better than anyone else.

I lived a year in Vienna as an emigrant and there I have heard the word which I found in no other language: "Kiebitz".

Keep this word in your mind, you need it. This word means a man who, when he sees two men playing chess, cannot resist sitting beside them; he always knows what is the best move; but when he begins to play himself, he loses after the first move. And we see this sort of thing [illegible] the ranks of our own party from the young generation.

The Education of Our Youth Is a Vital Question for the Party

It is difficult to imagine the new generation, which has grown up within the frame of the consolidated Soviet Power, anywhere else than in the frame of the Soviets. The new generation seeks our leadership, groups itself about the various societies and has an appetite for culture. The party can mould this generation as it will.

This is not a piece of rhetoric. I assert that the question of the education of the young is a vital question for our Party.

At the Fourth Congress of the Communist International where we shall again consider the international situation, we will reassert that we stand firmly upon our feet, and we were able to do so first, because we have learned to manage and manœuvre the Soviet apparatus, and secondly, because we learned and are [illegible] Soviet Russia.

The rise of the proletarian power in Germany—and history apparently will unravel the threads from Russia over Germany to the West—faces us with tasks which extend far beyond the limits of our own interior reconstruction.

For the solution of these tasks it is necessary to rejuvenate our Party, to create a mighty reserve of youth. And when we shall repeat to the Communist Parties: "Before you European Communists seize power you must go to the masses, you must learn to correct your faults, you must learn to influence the masses!" then we must say to our own Party: "Before us we have a young Party which we must retain in our hands for the maintenance of our Soviet citadel, until the proletarian revolution extends to Europe and then thruout the whole world."

Concerning Communism

For five years the question of Communism has been before the entire world as the one vital problem of the age. Communism is by far the greatest force that emerged from the throes of the World War, and it is destined to be the most enduring force, because its mission upon the stage of history is to clear away the wreckage of capitalism and establish a higher form of social organization that will enable mankind to definitely abandon exploitation of man by man and write FINIS to the history of human slavery.

As we look about us, we view the capitalist world in its death throes. The statesmen of the gigantic imperialist governments of the world try desperately to overcome the destructive forces created by the very system which they defend. All of them appear immeasurably small in the face of the gigantic tasks they have unconsciously imposed upon themselves; the attempt to stem the tide of history.

But history, a creation of mankind that controls mankind, moves forward entirely oblivious of the fate [illegible] virtues of that capitalist fiction [illegible] by the pedagogical sycophants who interpret events according to the prejudices of the dominant class in society. The failure of the statesmen of today to bring order into the capitalist world is not due to the shortcomings of their statesmanship, but to the fact that the society they seek to defend has fulfilled its mission in the progress of mankind and its continued existence is a distinct detriment to society.

It was the task of capitalism to create a higher form of social organization than the system that preceded it. Its rise to power was achieved thru a whole series of revolutions, beginning in the middle of the Fourteenth century and culminating in its triumph during the great French Revolution at the close of the Eighteenth century. Its mission was the centralization of the means of production and the socialization of labor, a step in advance in human progress that transcends the achievement of all previous systems of society.

But the heyday of capitalism is passed and today it can only prolong its existence thru devastating the human race. From a constructive force it has become a destructive force, leaving in its path nothing but misery, oppression, slavery, famine, pestilence and every form of human degradation.

Whenever any stage of society reaches its period of decline, when it becomes a fetter upon production, the class that suffers thru its continued existence creates a movement of revolt. Under the feudal system it was the rising capitalist class that was revolutionary; today the revolutionary class is the working class. And just as capitalism superseded feudalism, so Communism, the revolutionary movement of the modern working class, will overthrow capitalism and clear the way for the human race to advance to further conquests of nature.

While there are points of similarity between the Revolution of this Century and revolutions of past centuries, inasmuch as they all brought a new class to power, the Communist revolution is different from all previous revolutions, because there is no class below the working class for it to exploit after its victory, therefore the triumph of Communism means at the same time the end of all class struggles and the complete subjugation of all social forces to the control of man.

Altho other revolutions marked distinct steps in advance, the working class revolution will be the most far-reaching movement of them all, for it means liberty in the fullest sense of the word for all mankind. Its beneficial effects upon society cannot possibly be estimated, but we do know that it will destroy every barrier that makes one human being dependent upon another, for the simple reason that everyone, within the confines of society, will have equal opportunity with every other person.

The only people who could not gain thru the establishment of Communism is the capitalist class. Instead of being able to live in idleness off the wealth created by the working class, they would be compelled to become useful members of society and participate in social labor enough to produce their own sustenance. There are many reasons for the capitalist class opposition to a system of society that would take from them their parasitic life of ease, but there is no valid reason why any member of the working class should be opposed to Communism and the Proletarian revolution.

A remarkable instance of revolutionary devotion to the working class was given recently by a worker just before he was put to death by the White Terror in Jugoslavia. Alije Aliagic was sentenced to die, and his last thought before his execution was of the starving orphans in Soviet Russia. He called an attorney and made arrangements that his clothes and other worldly belongings should be sold and the proceeds donated toward a Children's Home in Russia.

On to Political Conference

The Pittsburgh progressives intend to give William H. Johnston their answer to his effort to defeat the move for a real labor party when he changed the meeting place from Chicago to Cleveland. The word has gone out thru Western Pennsylvania. Take it up in your local union and even if you have to pay your own expenses arrange to go as a delegate from your union to Cleveland to the Conference for Progressive Political Action, there to help launch a Labor Party. There is no reason why a hundred delegates should not go from the Pittsburgh District. For further information get in touch with this headquarters. Get on the band wagon and join the historic throng who take the great constructive step towards independent political action for the workers in the U. S. BE SURE TO GET CREDENTIALS FROM YOUR LOCAL UNION.

Adam's "Popularity" Grows

An "old friend" of "Comrade" Adams not connected with the Workers Party but who "found him out" in the Socialist Party ordered a hundred copies of the WORKER as soon as he read the story of Adam's treachery in McKeesport and plans to make a personal distribution among mutual acquaintances. Thus the "chickens come home to roost" even after many years. Also other reports are now reaching us that Adams has been going around among members of the Workers Party and the T. U. E. L. making flattering remarks about the W. P. and Foster to fool the "reds" and then when he finds a sympathizer he whispers his poison "in confidence as a friend."

C. L. U. Recognizes Soviet Russia

Awake you cynics! Pittsburgh's famous C. L. U. has "recognized" Soviet Russia. This hot bed of reaction at its last meeting actually did it. On motion of Jane W. Tait of the Office Workers Union and seconded by Rostrom of the Sheet Metal Workers the C. L. U. went on record as favoring recognition of the Soviet Government. However, when Delegate Tait advocated instructing the Executive Committee to arrange a mass meeting the camel's back was broken. A member of the Executive Committee actually stated publicly on the floor that he was in favor of recognizing Soviet Russia—BUT, evidently the young lady who made the motion never had any experience in arranging mass meetings under the auspices of the august body or she would not make such a motion and he for one refused to sponsor a fizzle.

Workers Party Election Returns

Despite the terrible handicaps under which the Workers Party launched its ticket in Pennsylvania this year the names of eight comrades were printed on the ballot in three legislative districts and one state senatorial.

While the official compilation of votes has not yet been completed, some splendid surprises have already developed. In one precinct of the Third Ward Pittsburgh, Workers Party polled four votes, Democrats 2 and S. P. 2. At Raccoon, a mining town in Washington County, every vote in the town, 26, were cast for Comrades Ray and Strong, the legislative candidates.

Concerning Upton Sinclair

A letter from Sarah F. J. Linn, of Birmingham, Ala., and a reply:

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 8, 1922.

To the Editor of the Worker:

Dear Comrade:—Will you please allow me to enter a friendly protest against some of the bitterness in the article by Comrade Wicks against Upton Sinclair. The splendid protest and exposure of the futility of Sinclair's proposed effort to undermine the strongholds of capitalist power is greatly weakened by the contemptuous quarrelling with Sinclair's personality.

Upton Sinclair is hated most cordially by our own enemies. His books, The Jungle, King Coal, The Money Changers, The Brass Check have been like pillars of fire to enlighten thousands of minds that would otherwise be still completely in the dark regarding the plague-spots of capitalism. I mention only the books that I have been able to get and read. There are others that I am sure have done equally good work for us.

The capitalist press sneeringly accuses him of publicity-seeking. Isn't it a little awkward for us to carry on an attack started by them? Doesn't every one who hopes to do any good work for humanity require publicity? How can any of us agitators and propagandists afford to sneer at "publicity seeking"?

A great number of our former comrades are today confined and misled by the traitors who have taken charge of the old Socialist Party. Sinclair is among them, with Debs, and who knows how many more? I believe Sinclair is honestly striving to serve the cause of working class emancipation; but the War, the confused babel of testimony regarding Russia, and worst of all, the influence of smiling traitors who flatter them as they do Debs also, have so confused his judgment that he is now totally unfitted for further leadership. Nevertheless we ought surely to be level-headed enough to remember kindly the good work he has done in the past and rather grieve than rail at him for having fallen by the wayside. Indeed he may yet come to his senses and stand with us shoulder to shoulder in the front lines.

Your comrade,
Sarah F. J. Linn.

Wicks Replies As Follows:

While I welcome the criticism of Comrade Linn I cannot agree with her conclusion regarding Upton Sinclair. Because the capitalist press of the nation perceive that he is and has always been a publicity-seeker, it by no means follows that we should declare that he is not guilty of the charge. His reputation was established in the days of muckraking by his publication of his first work "The Jungle". He mucked the packers just as Lincoln Steffens exposed rotten city administrations thruout the nation and Charles Edward Russell held the railroads, their watered stock and interlocking directorates up to public scorn. The reason he is better known than the other gladiators of that period of frenzied journalism, is because he made a greater nuisance of himself by eternally shrieking about the nation-wide conspiracy to silence him, when as a matter of fact no one cared anything about him. His books would never induce anyone to become a revolutionist but might cause them to seek the camp of the petty bourgeois reformists and indulge in futile and foolish talk about manipulating the money system in order to achieve the emancipation of the workers without a revolution.

One of his recent books "The Brass Check", while it exposes certain practices of capitalist newspapers, is far more valuable for the light it sheds upon Upton. It is one long tale of woe about this saintly and gullible scribbler who is constantly being deceived by the villains of the capitalist press. A chapter or more is devoted to Arthur Brisbane and the Hearst publications, yet at this time that same avaricious combination of yellow journalism is booming Sinclair's latest novel, "They Call Me Carpenter" as one of the great works of the age. By the method of reasoning used by Comrade Linn in defense of Upton when he is attacked by the capitalist press, he should now be roundly condemned because the press praises him as a genius.

Even granting that his work was ever of value to the revolutionary movement, which we deny, his defection is not of recent date. During the World War he was a howling jingo and denounced as pro-German the pacifist program of the Socialist Party. Now that the War is over he again asserts his admirable courage by aligning himself with that organ of reaction.

If we class the leaders of the Socialist Party as traitors, let us not forget that Sinclair is precisely such a leader and belongs in the same category with Hillquit and Berger as enemies of the working class.

As to Eugene V. Debs, I hold no brief for him. He has served the cause well for many years, but so did Breshkovskaya (the Grandmother of the Russian Revolution) in her time, but she is now the enemy of the working class. Neither Debs or Sinclair is misled, but have deliberately chosen to align themselves with the forces of reaction and against the vanguard of the working class. As revolutionists we must warn the working class against the pitfalls in their path whether they are dug by a Debs, a Berger or a Sinclair.

Furthermore, I personally dislike the objection to my calling Upton by his right names: a self-seeker, a careerist, a fakir and charlatan. A much better man than Upton can ever hope to become was not spared the merciless denunciation of Trotsky. That man was Karl Kautsky. The names Lenin called the German pedant must have been exceedingly offensive to his former supporters who still suffered from the bourgeois delusion of being polite to ones enemies and to confine debates to impersonal things and shield the infamy of the individual.

My object was not only to ridicule Upton's brain contortion, but to hold him up to personal contumely as an enemy of the working class.

As for hoping that he will stand shoulder to shoulder with us, I sincerely hope the time will never come that we abandon our principles to the extent that we become one of his numerous havens. I deny that he has fallen by the wayside. He never was anything but a nuisance in the movement and the Socialist Party has sufficiently degenerated to furnish him a comportable berth for the present. I am sure that if Comrade Linn had followed his record so closely as we have she would not bother about us calling his names.

The opening of the British parliament, as we predicted, showed that the labor politicians, MacDonald, Clynes, Thomas and Co., will be content to seek sops from the conservative government, while the new members, as yet untouched by the soporific powers of parliamentarism, will give real cause for the fear of Lord Birkenhead, dreading the increase of labor representation in the Commons, with consequences no one knew where they might stop.

It is time for American labor to create the same fear in congress at Washington. This can only be done by sending a few hundred congressmen to the nation's capital, supported by an uncompromising labor militancy arrayed in a class Labor Party demanding an end of the profiteers and their social system of robbery and plunder. It is time to raise labor's slogan, "Forward to 1924!" with all forces united for effective action politically as well as industrially.

An Era of Greater Trusts

Great mergers of industrial corporations are being promised in rapid succession. We are told that the consolidation of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Midvale Steel and Ordnance Company, giving it an output second only to that of the United States Steel Corporation, was consummated within a month. It was only a few months ago that Charles M. Schwab's "Bethlehem" took over the Lackawanna Steel Company.

It is rather significant that President Eugene G. Grace, of the Midvale, announces that "no opposition" to the consolidation is expected from the Attorney General's office," meaning, of course Mr. Daugherty, at Washington.

The combination of the Bethlehem and the Midvale would indicate that attempts at "trust busting" are ended at least in so far as the Harding administration is concerned, that the country is entering upon an era of the formation of new trusts.

That the "Big Five" packers in Chicago did not give up hope when they were prevented from combining some years ago is seen by the recent visit of Mr. J. Ogden Armour to Washington, to discuss the taking over by Armour and Co., of some of the other meat trust tentacles.

Claiming innocence of any attempt at amalgamation, the great woolen and cotton interests have formed an alliance under the direction of the Consolidated Textile Company, with William M. Wood as director-general and chairman of the board. Wood will be remembered as the head of the Woolen Trust that has waged terrific wars against the workers in New England, notably at Lawrence, Mass.

It is not to be doubted that trustitis will rapidly spread to other industries, thus developing the power of the exploiters not only to better control and increase prices, but to build a greater united front of entrenched greed against the growing demands of the workers, weakened in the pressing of those demands thru division into numerous, petty craft unions. May the era of new trusts inaugurate an epoch of great industrial unions of the workers.

Cuno, Bonar Law, Mussolini

New governments in the capitalist nations of Germany, Italy and Great Britain made their entree upon the shifting stage of world events during the past week. They confront various prospects of "getting the hook" and being jerked into oblivion.

Chancellor Dr. Wilhelm Cuno, the German capitalist, selected by Germany's "Socialist" President Ebert, was first denounced by the German United Socialists as the "overseer of Stinnes," and then embraced by them. The Communists alone fought and will continue to fight the "nonpartisan" Cuno outfit to the last. Cuno promises efforts to float a huge loan in the United States. He evidently is not aware of the fact that Wall Street has never developed a reputation for charitable giving.

The Mussolini Dictatorship in Italy is also having its money troubles. The Communists and Socialists stood against giving the Fascisti government complete power in all matters pertaining to bureaucratic and financial reforms until Dec. 31, 1923. The workers, no doubt, have no objection to Mussolini battling with capitalist finances, but they do oppose military rule for more than a year. Even the "Socialist," Modigliani, whom Mussolini refused to take into his cabinet, gave his feeble addition to the united labor protest, complaining about the haste in closing the discussion.

Bonar Law has gotten the British parliament under way in support of his government without a hitch, altho opposed by a united Labor and Communist opposition. Blood already bespatters its early days with the sending of more Rand strikers in South Africa to the gallows, while a firing squad pours bullets into the living flesh of Erskine Childers, called the "brains" back of the Irish civil war against British tyranny.

During the celebrations of the 5th Anniversary of the Russian Revolution in the Soviet Republic, it was often said in jest that it was kind of the Lloyd George Government, in England, to retire at the time it did, thus enabling Soviet Rule in Russia to truly claim to be the oldest government in Europe. No one today dares contradict that Russian Soviet Rule rests on a firm foundation. But everyone admits that the whirling top governments of Cuno, Bonar Law and Mussolini may any day lose their momentum and topple over. The social revolution has become a stable factor in the world. Capitalism is shakier than ever.

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

We are told by Lawrence Hills, correspondent of the New York Herald at the so-called Lausanne "Peace Conference," that "The greatest struggle here is over oil." This bears out the contention of THE WORKER that the war between the Turks and the Greeks is more an economic struggle of British against Standard Oil dominated French interests.

Thus we find the New York World declaring that, "In the interests of open diplomacy it would be a most excellent thing if the state department would make clear just what are its relations to the ambitions of the Standard Oil Co. in the Near East."

It should not be very difficult for The World, with its vast system for gathering information, to find out just what is Harding's oil policy. It will find that Harding's policy is the Standard Oil Trust's policy.

The British at Lausanne are pushing for oil concessions in the Mosul District, not troubling about national boundaries, in fact agreeing that Mosul be detached from the present British mandate Irak (Mesopotamia) and turned over to Turkey. But the Turkish government would derive little or no benefit in cash out of the British proposition, so it is cool toward these overtures.

It seems that the Standard Oil Trust is more in favor with the present Turkish government, since it is back of concessions granted by the old Turkish government to Rear Admiral Colby M. Chester, United States Navy (retired) in 1910, by the provisions of which the present Angora government would participate 50 per cent in the profits of the exploitation of the Mosul oil district.

Thus while Richard Washburn Child, U. S. Ambassador to Rome, acts as American observer at Lausanne, he is also the direct spokesmen of the Standard Oil Trust seeking new fields of exploitation.

The anxiety and eagerness with which Standard Oil eggs on the Harding Administration to activity in its behalf can well be judged by the fact that oil consumption in the United States exceeds the supply, in spite of the fact that this country is the world's greatest producer of petroleum.

Statistics for the month of October, issued by the United States Geological Survey, show that during this month domestic production totalled 47,255,000 barrels, while imports amounted to 1,524,355 barrels, a grand total of 48,779,355 barrels of this liquid wealth. The estimated consumption of oil during October was 52,269,000 barrels, showing that the demand during the month exceeded the supply by 3,498,645 barrels. The statistics show that altho production is increasing, nevertheless consumption is more than keeping pace with it, hence the world scramble for oil.

While the United States is the world's greatest petroleum producer, having aggregated 5,902,051,000 barrels, or 62.1 per cent, during the 65-year period, 1857-1921; we find that Russia came second supplying 1,933,171,000 barrels, or 20.3 per cent, while Mexico came third with 7.7 per cent of the world's total production of 9,511,997,000 barrels.

The Standard Oil Co. of California, in its current Bulletin, has an article headed "A World Game," that tells of the Standard Oil Trust's world quest for petroleum, giving us the gratuitous information that it is "well worth the cost."

The bulletin says that where California previously had to go beyond the state for her supply of oil, she now has an overproduction that is being sent in big oil tankers to all points of the compass. It then proceeds:

> "Altho California's supply now exceeds local demand, this may be no more than a momentary phase, as such things go, and the quest for new oil goes on without cessation. This company, for example, is searching in the far places of the world for new oilfields—in the Philippines, Alaska, Ecuador, Colombia and the Argentine, as well as in Montana and Texas. It is indeed a world game, and costly, BUT WELL WORTH THE COST."

Since most of the Russian oil fields are around the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea, the Soviet Republic becomes doubly interested in its outlet to the world thru the Dardanelles, the control of which rivals oil for attention by the "peace conference."

The mass of voters in the United States, in casting their ballots for Harding in 1920, are supposed to have decided against Wilson's League of Nations, against "entangling alliances" with European capitalism. But while the Government at Washington holds aloof from actual participation at Genoa, the Hague and now at Lausanne, American economic imperialism is busy everywhere. Ambassador Child becomes the office boy of Standard Oil in Washington's latest version of "dollar diplomacy." If Standard Oil cannot get what it wants in the Near East, it will easily find the basis for new wars to enable American workers to fight for what it wants.

Thus, while Wilson's oil diplomacy merely took us over the Rio Grande into Mexico, we now confront the fact that Harding's oil diplomacy has carried us into the midst of European imperialist intrigues.

Workers of America! Do you want to fight new wars for Standard Oil? Or will you seize power in this country, and join with workers' governments in other nations to end economic rivalries and wars for all time. It is for you to decide.

The Federated Press reports that thousands of men are being sought by New York City employment agencies to work in the hard coal mines of Pennsylvania—but the men must not be Americans. The agencies are advertising for Russians, Poles, Lithuanians, Magyars and Scandinavians. The mine owners probably figure it is cheaper to have the friends of the miners far away when these frequent explosions take place killing many. It will then be more difficult to collect a price for the blood on the coal.

The Standard Oil Co. of Kansas, not to be outdone by the other tentacles of the Standard Oil Octopus, has declared an extra cash dividend of $3 per share in addition to the quarterly dividend. Other tentacles are planning to do the same. If we are not mistaken it was in Kansas that oil workers were sent to prison for seeking to better the conditions of labor in the oil industry.

The Communist International now in session at Moscow is taking steps to combat the Fascisti wave that is rising in Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Hungary, Rumania and other countries as well as in the United States. Since the capitalist governments everywhere are winking an eye at the growth of the Fascisti, it behooves the workers of all lands to join in the anti-Fascisti front to protect their interests.

Profiteers are no recognizers of persons. An effort is being made to exploit the 200 demi-wives of the fugitive ex-Sultan Mohammed VI, of Turkey, by touring them thru Europe and America. A New York beauty purveyor is also bidding for their services against the Parisian impresario. Perhaps the wives will divide their forces and seek to exploit the exploiters.

When Debs in his Chicago speech sought to support his statement that the ruling class, in fear, are enacting laws to suppress free speech and free press, he cited Illinois, Michigan and California, where Communists are going to trial or to prison. Perhaps Debs, when he finds time, will tell us why no "Socialists" are going to prison in these days of capitalist tyranny.

The Russian monarchist emigres have decided to move their headquarters from Berlin to Paris, feeling that the Bolshevists are getting too strong in the German capital. It looks as if they were the camp followers of the westward retreat of capitalism.

[illegible] universal republic is just as sure [illegible] in his declaration that he means that the [illegible] will be established by the "dictatorship [illegible] in the form of Soviet Rule. And this includes the United States. Otherwise his remarks have no meaning.

If we are correct, how uncomfortable the Hillquits, Bergers, Stedmans, and Branstetters, et al, must feel with this heretic in their ranks, "poisoning the minds of the few remaining party members and sympathizers with Communist ideas."

Hillquit has always opposed "Sovietism," probably not as bitterly, but more cleverly and just as effectively as his Schlesingers, and Ervins and Cahans. Berger has fought the idea of Soviet rule, putting the Russian Bolsheviks in the same category with the members of what he terms the "Wall Street Soviet." The party secretary, Branstetter, was guilty of an intellectual atrocity that sought to show the American form of government more democratic than Russian Soviet Rule. In various court cases Stedman has warned capitalist judges of the danger of Soviet rule.

These must be sleepless nights indeed for "Socialist" Party leaders. Perhaps they will not be as anxious, as they thought, to send Debs on the road to preach Soviet doctrines. Or are they confident that their red-raiding, heresy-hunting powers will in time drill Debs into the counter-revolutionary goose step. If Debs wants to remain in good standing in the "Socialist" Party, we warn him not to be as careless as his remarks show him to have been in his Chicago speech.

World Strike Frightens Gompers

Samuel Gompers, on behalf of the American Federation of Labor, has notified the International Federation of Trade Unions (Amsterdam) that it cannot participate in the international labor anti-war conference called for The Hague, Dec. 10.

It is planned to discuss at the Hague the question of a world strike of labor to prevent war, and even such a discussion has Gompers scared stiff.

Gompers knows that the Amsterdamers, headed by the Englishman, the Right Hon. J. H. Thomas, M. P., who betrayed the Triple Alliance in his own country, are not in earnest about their call for a general strike. Such a strike was voted by the Second (Socialist) International at its congress, in Copenhagen, Denmark, 1910, and at Basle, Switzerland, 1912.

Nothing came of this action, however, because the yellow leaders of the Second (Socialist) International and the Amsterdam Trade Union International oppose every effort to create the kind of a world labor movement necessary to conduct an international strike. This was seen by their war against the Communists in the recent world congresses of the Transport Workers and the Miners, especially at the latter congress where the German, French and British coal miners even refused to dig scab coal to break the strike of the American coal miners.

The conference at The Hague, Dec. 10, will be a pacifist gesture on the part of traitor leaders who feel they must make some sort of militant pretence to keep the organized workers enslaved to their domination. Gompers will have nothing to do with this conference because he is a nationalist jingo, who has not even been forced to make this gesture by the slumbering workers in the ranks of American organized labor.

In the meantime preparations are going forward for the gathering of the Second Congress of the Red International of Labor Unions at Moscow, which struggles for the realization of effective solidarity and action among the world's workers, and in which American labor will be well represented.

The Red International is organized for action; the Amsterdam International is organized for speeches and resolutions, while the American Federation of Labor is organized along the line of narrow nationalism inspired by a chauvinism that makes it a stranger to international working class unity. The workers of this country have a great deal to say as to how long that condition is to continue. Let them speak.

Miss Rockefeller and Elk Basin

Out in Elk Basin, Wyoming, there is a working-class family that can this week view itself in a picture in the Literary Digest. It shows father and son in overalls, mother and three daughters in calico, and we are told that this is "A typical Elk Basin Family in front of its tar-paper shack."

In New York City the other morning, Miss Abby Rockefeller called early for her copy of "The Times," and read on Page 21, a full column report headed "Miss Rockefeller Makes Her Debut."

Languishing lazily in the midst of the fragrance of freshly cut flowers and inhaling the tantalizing scents of rich perfumes, Miss Rockefeller was not troubled by the noisome fumes of the faraway Elk Basin Oil Field, where the slaves of Standard Oil toil under the lash of necessity, "twelve hours a day and seven days a week, with no overtime pay," in order that "the richest society girl in America" might make of her coming out a brilliant occasion.

Abby is a granddaughter of John D. Rockefeller, Sr., the original "John D." and of the late United States Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, spokesman for entrenched special privilege while he was in the senate.

Abby is the daughter of the sanctimonious John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who leads a Bible Class in a New York church on Sundays, while the Oil Trust serfs out over the nation, and the world, toil the seven-day week to make him and his richer and richer.

The nameless Elk Basin, Wyoming, family had its picture taken because John D., Jr., recently had a twitch of conscience, something of which the first "John D." was never guilty, and issued a press statement opposing the seven-day week. Now that the chorus of applause from the kept press has died down, the conditions remain the same for the workers, the Oil Trust divides a few hundred million dollars more in stock dividends, while a nation of deluded working-class dubbs really console themselves into believing they have had something handed down to them from on high.

After issuing his statement "John D., Jr." had to repair to the Battle Creek Sanitarium, in Michigan, to rest up, and he just got home to New York City in time to head the receiving line at his daughter's formal introduction to society, and to have his poor nerves soothed by the violin of Mischa Elman, and the piano of Josef Bonime, the artists who performed in the musicale arranged for the occasion. It's a best bet that the Elk Basin, Wyoming, family never even heard Elman on a phonograph record.

But the ears of "John D. Jr.," and there is also a "John D. III," will again hear the disconcerting voice of discontent ascending from the slave pits in the oil fields.

The Lord of Standard Oil will then issue more sermons from the Mount of 26 Wall Street, and if the workers do not take their chloroform peacefully they will get the militia and the federal troops as they did in Colorado, and elsewhere.

But labor will in time come of age, even as the daughters of the rich. Its brain will grow to manhood, and it will stand on its own feet, and they will not be feet of clay. In that day the "John D's." will not have to go to sanitariums to recuperate. They will be put to performing health-producing labor. But no worker in all the land will be robbed of all the joys of living by the 12-hour day and the 7-day week.

There is a time coming when all labor will have its own "coming out," when it will come out of enslaving capitalism, and go forward into emancipating Communism. And in that time all the sanctimony of "John D., Jr." will avail him and his class nothing.

All Eyes on Cleveland!

Workers! Watch for Treason at Labor's Political Conference!

This is being written as delegates from all parts of the land are speeding towards Cleveland, Ohio, to attend the sessions of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, Dec. 11. All indications show that an effort at betrayal of labor's interests is afoot. An attempt will be made to deliver the Conference into the hands of Sam Gompers and his reactionary "reward and punish" political policy. Every ounce of strength must be rallied against this move. Workers! Turn the eyes of all labor on Cleveland during the next few days. Watch for treason at this Labor Conference. Those who would lead you into the camps of the Wall Street political parties are your enemies. Show them that you are on the job. Labor Militants at Cleveland, Ohio, Next Week Must Battle Hard to Counteract the Chloroform of La Follette's Conference

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

The chloroform has been prepared for the Cleveland gathering, Dec. 11, of the Conference for Progressive Political Action.

The job was beautifully finished at the Senator Robert M. La Follette-personally-conducted meeting of the so-called "People's Legislative Service," at Washington, D. C., during the week-end of the Thanksgiving holidays.

The only question that remains is whether the delegates at Cleveland, Ohio, next week will take the chloroform, go to sleep and allow the present magnificent opportunity for the formation of a Labor Party, independent of and opposed to all the capitalist political parties, to pass them by without taking advantage of it.

There was enough hot air poured into the anti-Labor Party steam roller at La Follette's Thanksgiving Party in the ballroom of Washington's rather sumptuous City Club to give it power to flatten out almost any opposition, but this should only test and not break the courage of the militants at Cleveland.

It couldn't have been an accident, a mere coincidence, that La Follette's gathering came just one week before labor's conference. It was more than an accident that the great powers in labor's conference were in attendance at the Wisconsin senator's conclave, urging a "Go slow!" and "Stick in the old parties!" program.

I looked them over, as they sat in at this boomlet for "Bob" La Follette for president in 1924. There was William H. Johnston, of the Machinists, chairman of the Cleveland Conference. Frederick C. Howe, its secretary, was head of La Follette's resolutions committee. Others on this resolutions committee, where Johnston was also to be found, were Andrew Furuseth, of the Seamen's Union; George L. Berry, of the Pressmen's Union; Miss Ethel Smith, of the Women's Trade Union League, and D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. Yes, the railroad brotherhoods were there in full, W. R. Cage, for the Railroad Signalmen; T. C. Cashen, for the Switchmen's Union; J. J. Dermody, for the Railroad Telegraphers; F. H. Floyzdal, of the Maintenance of Way Employes; J. J. Forrester, for the Railway and Steamship Clerks; J. G. Luhrsen, of the Train Dispatchers, Warren S. Stone, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; with a host of other more or less prominent labor officials, including Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

There were about 100 "progres-

Workers Party Picks Four Delegates to the Cleveland Conference

The delegates selected to represent the Workers Party at the Cleveland gathering, Dec. 11, of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, are William F. Dunne, Caleb Harrison, Ludwig Lore and C. E. Ruthenberg, with J. Louis Engdahl as alternate.

The selections were made by the party's central executive committee and credentials forwarded to Frederick C. Howe, secretary of the conference, at Washington.

Communist International Gladly Receives Fraternal Delegates of the Workers Party

Rebellion of Part of Jewish Bureau Is Severely Denounced in Cablegram from Zinoviev; Unity Demanded for Work Among Masses

CABLEGRAM.

Moscow, Soviet Russia.

C. E. Ruthenberg, Secretary, Workers Party,
799 Broadway, New York City.

Congress gladly received fraternal delegates Workers Party, destined carry communist ideas broad working masses. Answering cablegram.—About rebellion part Jewish executive, we give opinion unreservedly as we owe it to party sympathizing with Comintern, and in agreement with representatives of all tendencies of Workers Party: We decisively condemn frivolous breach of discipline against Central Committee of Workers Party perpetrated by group which did not even attempt inform its representatives in Moscow about object of conflict and did not await decision of court of last resort as was their right as well as their duty. Situation the more serious because work of Jewish Federation among masses is of utmost importance. Split would paralyze even present accomplishments in this work. We request all Jewish branches and members carry out decisions of Central Committee Workers Party to re-establish unity, otherwise Central Committee would have to carry out energetically immediate disciplinary measures against leaders of revolt.—ZINOVIEV.

Small Pardon in Illinois Hits at Reaction

The pardon granted by Governor Small of Illinois to the 16 men convicted under the Illinois Criminal Syndicalism Law has given a decided impetus to the work that is being carried on for the defense of the twenty now on trial in Berrien County, Michigan, under a similar Michigan State law.

Assistant Attorney General C. L. Smith, of Michigan, who has charge of the prosecution of the Bridgeman cases, states that the pardon in Il[illegible] Michigan cases which will be pushed to the limit.

But despite his determination his hopes of jailing these men will be irretrievably shattered. This is very clearly indicated by the tremendous increase in the support which the Labor Defense Council is receiving from all parts of the country.

Ever since the raids in which William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg and the 18 others were taken, it has appeared that the machinery of both the state of Michigan and the federal government was well greased to give the defendants a swift ride to prison.

In spite of the widespread sentiment of the American labor movement against the railroading of these militants to jail, it seemed certain that these men would soon be added to the long list of those imprisoned for their activity in the labor movement.

However with the pardoning of the 16 men in Illinois, an entirely new situation has manifested itself.

The Michigan case, of national importance, will be conducted by Frank P. Walsh, the noted labor attorney. If this case is won, the entire labor movement will benefit. If it is lost the entire labor movement will suffer. Money for legal fees and bonds for bail are badly needed. Send all contributions to the Labor Defense Council, Room 434, 80 E. 11th St., New York City, N. Y.

Disagreement in California

(By The Federated Press)

OAKLAND, Cal.—Disagreement of the jury has ended the first trial of the five members of the former Communist Labor party who were arrested in the California red raid of 1919 and charged with criminal syndicalism.

No unlawful acts of any kind were proved against them, their offense having been membership in the shortlived party. The jury voted seven to five for acquittal. A second trial will begin Feb. 13.

"Impeach Daugherty!" Trial Starts Tuesday; Must Face Crimes Against Labor; Illegally Aided in Attack on Communists in Michigan

The criminal career of Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, who goes to trial next Tuesday before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives at Washington, has been prominent in the public prints the past week, and the result has been that this low-grade politician has been pretty thoroly discredited thruout the nation.

Daugherty has been charged with fourteen specific crimes, involving malfeasance and misfeasance in office, and if precedents established in such cases, especially in relation to malfeasance in office are any guide to-day, this small-town ward-heeler and "fixer" for rich criminals will be kicked out of the Harding cabinet. Of course someone equally vile would probably be substituted, as the creatures who can be obtained to do the dirty work of the capitalist government of the United States are of a uniformly low degree.

The most interesting part of the proceedings against Daugherty is the manner in which he twists and turns in an effort to extricate himself from the net of criminality woven by himself. In answer to his critics he performed all sorts of grotesque brain-contortions. He declared that the profiteers were persecuting him and using the radicals to accomplish their [illegible] between the radicals and profiteers came about is left to the imagination.

The Appointment of Bill Burns

One of the charges against Daugherty is that he knowingly caused to be placed at the head of the Department of Justice one William J. Burns, a notorious blackleg, grafter, jury briber and anti-labor gunman, a creature who was denounced by a former attorney-general of the United States as having debauched and corrupted juries by stuffing the jury box with men who were known to be in favor of convicting defendants on Burns' framed-up evidence.

The appointment of Burns is acting as a boomerang to the Administration. It will be recalled that the small-town publisher, Harding, who was nominated for president by Elbert H. Gary, declared that Burns was one of his personal friends.

It is further charged that Burns and Daugherty used the detectives attached to the Department of Justice to hound men who were after Daugherty's scalp in the United States Senate and Congress. While most senators do not object to hounding radicals, they consider it a perversion of the office of chief investigator for the government to hound senators.

Anti-Labor Activities

In addition to charges of favoritism on behalf of the House of Morgan and firms associated with it, Daugherty is denounced for prostituting his office to obtain the infamous injunction against the striking shopmen from his pet, Judge Wilkerson, whom he helped elevate to the Federal Bench.

Further anti-labor activities are charged because of the illegal use of government agents in the so-called Red Raids in Michigan. There is no [illegible] of dollars was spent in having the state of Michigan frame-up charges against members of organized labor who were holding a conference near Bridgeman, Mich.

The political crook, Daugherty, and his unspeakable associate, Bill Burns, are to be asked to explain their part in the Communist raids at Bridgeman and their appeal for Michigan mounted thugs to assist in arresting a group of people meeting peacefully in a secluded section of the country.

Stealing Land for "John D."

Other charges deal with land steals by the Standard Oil Company and the whitewashing of the corporation by the combined trickery of Daugherty and Burns. Daugherty is also charged with using his influence to obtain a pardon for a wealthy degenerate named George Myers of Ohio, who was convicted of white slavery. Evidently, Myers is one of the Harding campaign contributors and therefore helped pay Harry Daugherty's salary while he managed Harding's campaign.

Next Tuesday the case of Daugherty is to come up in Washington before the senate and the public at least will get the benefit of one of the periodic explosions that reveal the capitalist government as a venal thing devoted entirely to the interests of serving the master class and keeping the working class in subjection.

Workers! Watch for Treason at Labor's Political Conference!

This is being written as delegates from all parts of the land are speeding towards Cleveland, Ohio, to attend the sessions of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, Dec. 11. All indications show that an effort [illegible] betrayal of labor's interests is afoot. An attempt will be made to deliver [illegible] Conference into the hands of Sam Gompers and his reactionary "reward and punish" political policy. Every ounce of strength must be rallied against this move. Workers! Turn the eyes of all labor on Cleveland during the next few days. Watch for treason at this Labor Conference. Those who would lead you into the camps of the Wall Street political parties are your enemies. Show them that you are on the job. Wire your demand for an independent party of labor opposing all capitalist parties. Send the demand of your labor union, your shop, your factory, your mill, your mine. Labor Militants at Cleveland, Ohio, Next Week Must Battle Hard to Counteract the Chloroform of La Follette's Conference

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

The chloroform has been prepared for the Cleveland gathering, Dec. 11, of the Conference for Progressive Political Action.

The job was beautifully finished at the Senator Robert M. La Follette-personally-conducted meeting of the so-called "People's Legislative Service," at Washington, D. C., during the week-end [illegible] holidays.

[illegible] that remains is whether the delegates at [illegible] will take the chloroform, go to sleep [illegible]nificent opportunity for the formation [illegible] of and opposed to all the capitalist [illegible] by without taking advantage of it. [illegible] poured into the anti-Labor Party [illegible]hanksgiving Party in the ball[illegible] City Club, to give [illegible] opposition, but this should only [illegible] the militants at Cleveland.

[illegible]cident, a mere coincidence, that [illegible] just one week before labor's conference [illegible] than an accident that the great powers in labor's conference were in attendance at the Wisconsin senator's conclave, urging a "Go slow!" and "Stick in the old parties!" program.

I looked them over, as they sat in at this boomlet for "Bob" La Follette for president in 1924. There was William H. Johnston, of the Machinists, chairman of the Cleveland Conference. Frederick C. Howe, its secretary, was head of La Follette's resolutions committee. Others on this resolutions committee, where Johnston was also to be found, were Andrew Furuseth, of the Seamen's Union; George L. Berry, of the Pressmen's Union; Miss Ethel Smith, of the Women's Trade Union League, and D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. Yes, the railroad brotherhoods were there in full. W. R. Cage, for the Railroad Signalmen; T. C. Cashen, for the Switchmen's Union; J. J. Dermody, for the Railroad Telegraphers; F. H. Floyzdal, of the Maintenance of Way Employes; J. J. Forrester, for the Railway and Steamship Clerks; J. G. Luhrsen, of the Train Dispatchers, Warren S. Stone, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; with a host of other more or less prominent labor officials, including Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

There were about 100 "progres-

Communist International Gladly Receives Fraternal Delegates of the Workers Party

Rebellion of Part of Jewish Bureau Is Severely Denounced in Cablegram from Zinoviev; Unity Demanded for Work Among Masses

CABLEGRAM

Moscow, Soviet Russia.

C. E. Ruthenberg, Secretary, Workers Party,
799 Broadway, New York City.

Congress gladly received fraternal delegates Workers Party, destined carry communist ideas broad working masses.—Answering cablegram.—About rebellion part Jewish executive, we give opinion unreservedly as we owe it to party sympathizing with Comintern, and in agreement with representatives of all tendencies of Workers Party: We decisively condemn frivolous breach of discipline against Central Committee of Workers Party perpetrated by group which did not even attempt inform its representatives in Moscow about object of conflict and did not await decision of court of last resort as was their right as well as their duty. Situation the more serious because work of Jewish Federation among masses is of utmost importance. Split would paralyze even present accomplishments in this work. We request all Jewish branches and members carry out decisions of Central Committee Workers Party to re-establish unity, otherwise Central Committee would have to carry out energetically immediate disciplinary measures against leaders of revolt.—ZINOVIEV.

Small Pardon in Illinois Hits at Reaction

The pardon granted by Governor Small of Illinois to the 16 men convicted under the Illinois Criminal Syndicalism Law has given a decided impetus to the work that is being carried on for the defense of the twenty now on trial in Berrien County, Michigan, under a similar Michigan State law.

Assistant Attorney General C. L. Smith, of Michigan, who has charge of the prosecution of the Bridgeman cases, states that the pardon in Il[illegible] Michigan cases, which will be pushed to the limit.

But despite his determination his hopes of jailing these men will be irretrievably shattered. This is very clearly indicated by the tremendous increase in the support which the Labor Defense Council is receiving from all parts of the country.

Ever since the raids in which William Z. Foster, C. E. Ruthenberg and the 18 others were taken, it has appeared that the machinery of both the state of Michigan and the federal government was well greased to give the defendants a swift ride to prison.

In spite of the widespread sentiment of the American labor movement against the railroading of these militants to jail, it seemed certain that these men would soon be added to the long list of those imprisoned for their activity in the labor movement.

However with the pardoning of the 16 men in Illinois, an entirely new situation has manifested itself.

The Michigan case, of national importance, will be conducted by Frank P. Walsh, the noted labor attorney. If this case is won, the entire labor movement will benefit. If it is lost the entire labor movement will suffer. Money for legal fees and bonds for bail are badly needed. Send all contributions to the Labor Defense Council, Room 434, 80 E. 11th St., New York City, N. Y.

Disagreement in California

(By The Federated Press)

OAKLAND, Cal.—Disagreement of the jury has ended the first trial of the five [illegible] of the former Communist Labor party who were arrested in the California red raid of 1919 and charged with criminal syndicalism.

No unlawful acts of any kind were proved against them, their offense having been membership in the shortlived party. The jury voted seven to five for acquittal. A second trial will begin Feb. 13.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va.—Two sentences of eleven years each and one of ten years were handed out to miners following conviction for alleged participation in the Logan county march of August and September, 1921. J. E. "Impeach Daugherty!" Trial Starts Tuesday; Must Face Crimes Against Labor; Illegally Aided in Attack on Communists in Michigan

The criminal career of Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, who goes to trial next Tuesday before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives at Washington, has been prominent in the public prints the past week, and the result has been that this low-grade politician has been pretty thoroly discredited thruout the nation.

Daugherty has been charged with fourteen specific crimes, involving malfeasance and misfeasance in office, and if precedents established in such cases, especially in relation to malfeasance in office are any guide to-day, this small-town ward-heeler and "fixer" for rich criminals will be kicked out of the Harding cabinet. Of course someone equally vile would probably be substituted, as the creatures who can be obtained to do the dirty work of the capitalist government of the United States are of a uniformly low degree.

The most interesting part of the proceedings against Daugherty is the manner in which he twists and turns in an effort to extricate himself from the net of criminality woven by himself. In answer to his critics he performed all sorts of grotesque brain-contortions. He declared that the profiteers were persecuting him and using the radicals to accomplish their [illegible] ity between the radicals and profiteers came about is left to the imagination.

The Appointment of Bill Burns

One of the charges against Daugherty is that he knowingly caused to be placed at the head of the Department of Justice one William J. Burns, a notorious blackleg, grafter, jury briber and anti-labor gunman, a creature who was denounced by a former attorney-general of the United States as having debauched and corrupted juries by stuffing the jury box with men who were known to be in favor of convicting defendants on Burns' framed-up evidence.

The appointment of Burns is acting as a boomerang to the Administration. It will be recalled that the small-town publisher, Harding, who was nominated for president by Elbert H. Gary, declared that Burns was one of his personal friends.

It is further charged that Burns and Daugherty used the detectives attached to the Department of Justice to hound men who were after Daugherty's scalp in the United States Senate and Congress. While most senators do not object to hounding radicals, they consider it a perversion of the office of chief investigator for the government to hound senators.

Anti-Labor Activities

In addition to charges of favoritism on behalf of the House of Morgan and firms associated with it, Daugherty is denounced for prostituting his office to obtain the infamous injunction against the striking shopmen from his pet, Judge Wilkerson, whom he helped elevate to the Federal Bench.

Further anti-labor activities are charged because of the illegal use of government agents in the so-called Red Raids in Michigan. There is no [illegible] of dollars was spent in having the state of Michigan frame-up charges against members of organized labor who were holding a conference near Bridgeman, Mich.

The political crook, Daugherty, and his unspeakable associate, Bill Burns, are to be asked to explain their part in the Communist raids at Bridgeman and their appeal for Michigan mounted thugs to assist in arresting a group of people meeting peacefully in a secluded section of the country.

Stealing Land for "John D."

Other charges deal with land steals by the Standard Oil Company and the whitewashing of the corporation by the combined trickery of Daugherty and Burns. Daugherty is also charged with using his influence to obtain a pardon for a wealthy degenerate named George Myers of Ohio, who was convicted of white slavery. Evidently Myers is one of the Harding campaign contributors and therefore helped pay Harry Daugherty's salary while he managed Harding's campaign.

Next Tuesday the case of Daugherty is to come up in Washington before the senate and the public at least will get the benefit of one of the periodic explosions that reveal the capitalist government as a venal thing devoted entirely to the interests of serving the master class and keeping the working class in subjection.

With such exhibitions as the case of Daugherty and his man Friday, "Detective" Bill Burns, before us it is impossible to understand how any intelligent worker can avoid being a revolutionist, determined to eliminate the [illegible] that passes for government and establish in its place a government of, for and by the working class.

[illegible]ABOR PARTY [illegible]ASS MEETING

FRIDAY, DEC[illegible]BER [illegible]
MANHATTAN LY[illegible]
Subject: "The Form[illegible] of the Labor [illegible]

By ISRAEL AMTER

"A MAN IS TOTALLY BLIND TO POLITICAL CONDITIONS IN THIS COUNTRY WHO DOES NOT UNDERSTAND THAT THERE IS PRACTICALLY A POLITICAL REVOLUTION ON."

[illegible] A REVOLT IS ON IN THE WORKING CLASS AND IN THE OLD CAPITALIST PARTIES. The Republican Party, with its more than usually reactionary leadership, has created [illegible] of irreconcilable rebels, [illegible] the party, its principles and tactics. La Follette, Borah, Johnson, France, Ladd, Norris, have been leading a fight against the administration not for personal reasons, but as representatives of a movement that is to be found in every State of the Union.

The election of a new group of progressives, Brookhart of Iowa, who is called a Bolshevik, against whom President Harding's father who, although a Republican, conducted a campaign in favor of the Democratic nominee; Howell, the "radical progressive" of Nebraska, Shipstead of Minnesota, and Dill of Washington, indicates a ferment within the capitalist parties. The election of Walton, nominee of the farmers and labor unions, as governor of Oklahoma, and of Wheeler in Montana, is a weather vane of political conditions in the United States. "There are deep but powerful undercurrents of political thought and resentment growing out of the war," as Senator Hitchcock, the defeated senator of Nebraska has stated. These resentments are manifesting themselves inside the old capitalist parties as well as in the ranks of the workers.

A new line-up is required. The standpatters in both capitalist parties are close together. "Wetness" and "dryness" penetrate both parties. For lack of other "issues," in some instances this was made THE "issue" of the campaign. For as Frank A. Munsey said before the Bankers' Convention, it is "their (the Republican and Democratic Party's) business to differ, to create differences, to work up issues, without which they would cease to exist as political parties." (Bold-face ours.) By artificially raising issues, by refusing to cooperate, because there is "not a sufficient margin of safety to justify them in taking chances," the two parties have been playing a political game.

It is growing clearer that the differences between the two capitalist parties are very slight. The Federalist Party, which in 1789 was for a highly centralized government found their opponents in the Republicans, who were for State rights. But it was the Democrats (the direct political offspring of the Republicans), who, in 1917, gave the United States the most centralized form of government that the country has known! During the last labor struggles, resentment was called forth against the Republican administration. Harding used troops against the coal miners, he threatened the "full force of the Government" against the railroad strikers. Wilson, the Democrat, used troops against the steel strikers in 1919, and threatened the miners and railroad workers with martial law in 1920. Harding has his bulldogs Daugherty and Burns. Wilson had his Palmer and Flynn.

If, as the New York American states, the "election cast no shadows on the spirit of optimism as to the business outlook," it is a clear indication that the "issues" raised by the two parties are deliberate creations with no basis in fact.

Meanwhile, the "deep but powerful undercurrents of political thought and resentment" are producing their effects. "While this political jockeying for the two capitalist parties has been going on," continued Mr. Munsey, "since the great old issues disappeared, a new issue has developed that now divides all America into two political camps. They are the radical camp and the conservative camp. Some day, and not a very distant day at that these two groups will evolve into organized political parties with names that signify what they stand for. . . . The salvation of our present situation would be a liberal conservative party, numerically strong enough to hold the balance of power against the radical forces. . . . I can see nothing so important to this nation as would be the welding together in a great solid unit of all our citizens who think alike as concerns constitutional government, who think alike as concerns property rights, who think alike as concerns the institutions of our Government. . . . The conservative people of the South naturally belong with and should line up with the conservative people of the North.

"Against this party would be formed a radical party which would reflect the changes that have taken place in our political life, changes that have been insidious, revolutionary. . . . The amassing of great fortunes, general prosperity, organized labor, the spirit of unrest, the spirit of Bolshevism, the demand for short working hours—these are the questions agitating the great masses of workers and farmers and finding their reflection in the radical wing of the two capitalist parties, the Non-Partisan League, the Farmer Labor Party and the demand for independent political action by the workers."

Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War under Wilson, and Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, agree that the "overwhelming majority of Republicans and Democrats are in substantial agreement on all fundamentals."

Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor under Taft, states: "Both parties show signs of disintegration. Issues are obscured; party lines are fading; . . . We have a tariff compromise, a "bonus fiasco, a ship-subsidy program with the position of both parties undefined. We have no party policy to govern our relations to Russia, to Mexico, to Haiti. Neither party takes a stand on constitutional guarantees, or the release of war prisoners."

In short, party lines are breaking down. A disintegration is taking place—and at the same time a coalesion. The conservatives of both parties are coming closer together, while the progressives and radicals are beginning to seek points of contact and of action.

The People's Legislative Service, an organization of the progressives, called a conference in Washington on December 1st and 2d. Meeting behind closed doors, a group of senators and congressmen, governors, labor leaders and men and women prominent in public life, decided that the time was not yet ripe for the formation of a third party. The disintegration of the two parties is not yet complete. Made up of Republicans and Democrats, the group decided to continue their work of "boring from within" until the year 1924, and then to take a decisive step.

This is the correct attitude for progressives and radicals. These petty-bourgeois reformers realize that mere opposition will not suffice. Unless they can build up a party on principle, they are bound to fail. All that they for the present will attempt to do, is to fight for reforms they plan to capture the Republican Party as the party within which their forces are strongest. Their immediate line of action is to block all reactionary legislation, to defeat the Harding administration and thus fall heir to the power of the Republican regime. In two years' time they expect to complete this work: either the Republican Party will succumb to their assaults or they will launch their own party.

The elections, with their steady dissolution of the capitalist parties, were of special significance to the working class. The American Federation of Labor has for sixteen years followed a policy of endorsing certain candidates and discountenancing others. This has been the policy since 1906. The results, however, up to 1920 were so woeful that the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. issued a statement in February 1920, to the effect that labor is "scorned by Congress, ridiculed and misrepresented by many members."

Nevertheless, advocating a continuation of this non-partisan policy in 1922 the A. F. of L. endorsed a large number of candidates belonging to both capitalist parties and to the Farmer-Labor Party and these candidates were elected. Samuel Gompers asserted that organized labor was responsible for the election of 24 senators and 156 representatives. According to the same report, several gubernatorial candidates owed their election to the efforts of the A. F. of L., among them being the Governor of New York.

The 1922 elections were a sweeping reaction to the conservatism and stand-pattism of Harding, just as there was a swing in 1920 from the betrayal of Wilson and his failure to keep any of his "promises." This reaction would have taken place whether the A. F. of L. advocated its particular policy or not. It was a revolt against conditions, a revolt that did not need organization. Senator Walsh, Democratic Leader of Massachusetts, does not give credit to the Democratic Party for [illegible] the [illegible] Democrats and Farmer-Laborites.

On December 11 the Conference for Progressive Political Action will take place in Cleveland. This is to be a conference of workers and farmers to determine future political action by the genuine producers in the country. A number of labor organizations pledged to the formation of a Labor Party will be represented at this conference. The United Mine Workers of America, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the International Typographical Union, several State Federations of Labor and central labor bodies and the Non-Partisan League are pledged to the formation of a Labor Party.

Several of the prominent leaders of the Railroad Brotherhoods and of the Railway Craft Division of the A. F. of L., who will be in Cleveland, also participated in the Washington Conference of the People's Legislative Service. Samuel Gompers was present—Gompers, the bitter enemy of independent action by the workers—also William H. Johnston and Warren S. Stone, two men supposedly committed to independent political action. These men, too, have abandoned the idea of independent action this year, blinded by the seeming victory of November 7. Two years more they will continue the baneful policy of rewarding and punishing till the last ditch is reached. Dazzled by the oratory of La Follette and his fiery advocacy of the "rights of the people," they will place at his disposal the votes of 1,500,000 workers and nominate him for president—if possible as candidate of the Republican Party, the party he has chosen to conquer.

This is wilful sabotage of the idea of independent political action by the WORKERS! It is an attempt to block an independent Labor Party. It means a line-up of petty-bourgeois forces and of labor leaders to keep the workers and small farmers from expressing themselves politically. It means a continuance of trafficking with workers' votes instead of building up a political power of the working class.

There will be a bitter fight at Cleveland. The advocates of a Labor Party to be founded at once against the Gomperses, the Johnstons and the Stones, the obstructers of workers' aspirations, the conscious and unconscious tools of the capitalists in preventing the workers from finding political expression! The workers may be hamstrung once more, but only after a valiant fight.

No matter how the conference turns out, Cleveland will make the question of a Labor Party the issue before the workers of this country, especially as far as organized labor is concerned. The progressive and radical workers will add the slogan of a Labor Party to that of amalgamation, and on these two issues the organized labor movement of this country will have to take sides. Trade union leaders will demonstrate by their stand whether they are for the workers or against them.

For the Workers Party the situation will not be changed. The Workers Party will continue its propaganda for a Labor Party with undiminished vigor. It will take these issues deep into the working class and prove to the workers that not the Communists but the reactionary leaders are the enemies of the labor movement. It will prove they are sabotaging the rise of the workers and keeping them in the train of the capitalist parties, in order to boom a petty-bourgeois reformer as presidential candidate.

Bazaar Volunteers Meet!

Russian Bazaar Volunteers' Meeting in Casino Hall, 85 East 4th St. Dec. 11, at 8 o'clock

The fifth evening of the big six-day Russian bazaar, Friday, Dec. 22, will be the occasion of a first-class concert arranged by the eminent composer and pianist, I. Arnstein. Mr. Arnstein himself will appear on the program, and a number of other interesting musical offerings will be made under his direction.

Longuet Challenged to Debate

Jean Longuet, French Socialist, who is touring the United States for the New York Call, Socialist daily, has been challenged to debate by the Workers Party on the question of the Communist International.

Since Longuet was so recently anxious to debate Georges Clemenceau, the former French premier now conducting a militarist propaganda tour of this country, but was refused, it is expected that he will take advantage of this opportunity to debate a representative of the Workers Party. The challenge issued by C. E. Ruthenberg, of the Workers Party, to the manager of Longuet's tour is as follows:

The Challenge to Longuet

I am advised by Wm. Z. Foster, the Secretary of the Trade Union Educational League that you have sent him a wire suggesting that he debate Jean Longuet on the subject "Resolved, that the Russian attitude toward International Socialism is conducive to Socialist Unity" but that Comrade Foster, owing to other engagements is unable to accept your proposal.

I am authorized by the Administrative Council of the Workers Party to submit to you the challenge of our organization for a debate between Jean Longuet and a representative of our Party on the subject "Resolved that the workers of every country should support and follow the leadership of the Communist International."

If you are prepared to make arrangements for such a debate I will be glad to have you call or send a representative to see me to arrange the details.

[illegible] U.M.W.of A.

These lines are the last [illegible] read before the great election day among the miners of District Five (Pittsburgh), U.M.W.of A., Dec. 12th and every consecutive indication is both from direct reports and the frantic efforts of the whole payroll of the district of both factions that the Progressive Ticket is going to sweep the district like a prairie fire and defeat the corrupt machine by a vote of three to one.

All the efforts of the militants are now concentrated on preventing the crooks and booze hounds from stealing the election as has been done so often before.

$100.00 REWARD!

Due to corrupt methods used in past elections in District Five and the indications of similar tactics in the present campaign and having come, thru my experience as secretary of the Pittsburgh Miners' Food Relief Conference to take a deep interest in the welfare of the miners, I HEREBY OFFER A REWARD OF $100.00 for any information leading to the conviction of any person guilty of bribing miners in the approaching election in District Five, U. M. W. of A. December 12, 1922, whether by the use of money, liquor or any other means.

(Signed) J. A. HAMILTON.

The secretary of the Pittsburgh Miners' Food Relief Conference thru the past few months having come into intimate contact with thousands of miners and having learned of the customary corruption in past elections has offered a reward of $100 for information that will result in the conviction of any one guilty of bribery in the approaching election.

However the miners must not rely on this as sufficient protection. Every single local must organize a strong arm committee with as many husky men as possible that will stand by and see that the votes are properly counted and take a copy of the vote in each local and mail it that night to Thomas Ray at McDonald, Pa., giving the number of the local union and the complete vote as tabulated by the secretary. THIS IS IMPERATIVE.

Feeny at Blythedale

Never in all the numerous fights in District Five have the conservatives ever before "trailed" the Progressives. This time the "gang" is following the Progressives around at their meetings with their biggest and ablest guns and a crew of booze hounds to act as rowdies.

Sunday, Dec. 3, there was a widely advertised meeting of the Progressives at Blythedale near McKeesport. This camp was picked as one of the strongholds of the "gang." Yet the whole Brownsville office felt it necessary to come fifty miles to the attacks of the Progressives. For once the "gang" had to sit in the audience and listen to scathing criticisms of their conduct and wait until their denouncers were thru before they could be heard.

John O'Leary, International Board Member whom Alexander Howat denounces as one of the most reactionary officials in the U. M. W. of A.; his coke field colleague William Feeny, a rank defender of the Lewis machine and the starvation of the Fayette County fields thru the Cleveland agreement; William Hines, renegade Socialist, "Peggy" Delbarre, former "red", all this force turned out in full to the Blythedale meeting. Their arguments were simply personal attacks and half hearted attempts to justify the Cleveland Agreement, the Hillman Contract and the desertion of the Fayette miners by the International.

In one instance in particular they got a drubbing altho O'Leary and Feeny are both considered orators and the peers of any debaters in the whole international organization.

Michael J. Brajdich, a Croatian and the vice-presidential candidate on the Progressive ticket made a speech in his native tongue. The "gang" thought they had a mark and began their attack. Brajdich replied in English and gave the personal history of his critics showing their unsavory record in the labor movement to the intense delight of the miners.

The meeting was a great triumph for the Progressives in a former stronghold of the machine.

Watch for Roorbacks

The miners may expect all sorts of personal attacks to be circulated against the candidates at the last minute both in printed circulars and by word of mouth. They should answer these attacks by a straight vote for the Progressive ticket. Charges circulated at the last minute are not worthy of consideration.

The Ticket to Vote

Below is the correct ticket to vote. Take it with you on election day. If in doubt ask one of the Progressives about it. Be sure your vote is counted the way you vote it:

President, Thomas Myerscough, L. U. [illegible], Lawrence.

Vice-President, Michael W. Brajdich, L. U. 137, Wynne.

[illegible] DUTY [illegible] WORK TO YOU IS TO WATCH THE ELECTION IN YOUR LOCAL UNION AND REPORT THE EXACT VOTE IMMEDIATELY TO THOMAS RAY, McDONALD.

William [illegible], Thomas Myerscough and Frank J. [illegible], Publicity Committee, Progressive Miners, Group of District Five, U. M. W. A.

Play Shows Actors Work Best Without Managers

By NANCY MARKOFF

Do workers work best for personal gain or for a cause which they believe in and of which they are a part? If you wish to form an opinion go to the Equity 48th Street Theatre and see the actors themselves producing a play without managers and under the direct control of their union, the Actor's Equity Association. Every member of the cast must be a member of the union in good standing. The following is an application blank issued by the union:

"Only members of Equity, members in good standing, will be assigned parts. We want the member who is most suited to the cast to work in this company, regardless of where he may be at the moment, and so you are asked to fill out this information blank and mail it to Equity Players' Casting Department, Forty-eighth St., New York City."

I was rather interested to learn from actual observation how this venture was working out. So I went to the 48th St. Theatre and saw "Hospitality," the play now being produced by the Equity players.

Most of the actors were familiar to me. I have seen them starred in other plays. I have always regarded them good actors. But as I sat viewing their acting here, I felt that there was something more than perfection of role that permeated their acting.

I recalled to my mind the actors' struggle against their managers of a few years ago, which led to the formation of their union. The actors have felt the yoke of the managers' greed weigh heavier and heavier upon them. If the managers insist upon making life intolerable for them the actors decided the only way to force them to terms was by showing them that they and not the managers make the theatre what it is.

In order to give all an opportunity to see plays at a minimum cost they have reduced the seats in the 2nd balcony to fifty cents and for students there is a Tuesday matinee when these seats are 25 cents.

New York Window Cleaners in Stand for Labor Party

Resolutions in favor of a Labor Party have been adopted by the Window Cleaners' Protective Union, Local No. 8, New York City, as follows:

Whereas, the political policy of Mr. Gompers of "rewarding our friends and punishing our enemies," has resulted in the complete political helplessness of Labor, and is the power of Government remaining completely in the hands of the capitalist class, as is witnessed by continuous official outrages against the labor movement, outstanding among which are the recent knocking out of the Child Labor Act by the Supreme Court, the Daugherty Injunction against the striking shopmen, the complete terrorisation of the striking miners, railroad and textile workers and the use of troops against them; and

Whereas, the accumulating experience of Governmental activity as a strike-breaking agency, and as an instrument of the employers in the "open shop" drive, together with the recognition that Gompers' policy of "non-partisan" political action has hitched labor to the tail of the capitalist political kites, all are forcing the labor movement to the necessity of forming a Labor Party, and

Whereas, we recognize that only thru a strong party of its own, with a working-class program and the ideal of a working-class republic, can the labor movement combat the forces of capitalism effectively, therefore be it

Resolved, that this organization endorses the formation of a Labor Party, to include trade unions and working-class political parties, thereby uniting all the political forces of the labor movement into one solid front against the capitalist class, and be it further

Resolved, that our officials stand instructed to assist in every way possible in bringing such a party into existence, and be it further

Resolved, that this organization elect delegates to attend the Conference for Progressive Political Action, which will take place in Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 11th, 1922.

THE WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible] Conference for Progressive Political Action to be held in Cleveland coming Monday, is to be another [illegible] of foul trickery such as the [illegible] at Chicago last February, when William H. Johnston and his [illegible] behind closed doors, organized the first conference. The charges that Johnston is playing the game of Gompers and sabotaging the desire of the rank and file of labor for a labor party seem vindicated on the eve of the second conference.

That there is a spontaneous demand on the part of the rank and file of organized labor for the creation of an independent labor party is apparent to all who are in touch with the labor movement in this country. The mere mention of the desirability of a labor party evokes boundless enthusiasm in union meetings. And this is as it should be. The vicious assaults upon labor by the capitalist government at Washington has exposed both the Democrat and Republican Parties as the implacable enemies of the working class. On every hand there is irrefutable evidence that the objective condition is here for the creation of a labor party and that the subjective condition also exists among large numbers of organized workers.

The labor fakirs who comprise the Gompers regime feel the tremendous pressure of the rank and file for independent political action, thru the creation of a party of labor and controlled by labor, so they contrive, as ever, to thwart the will of the workers of America. Matthew Woll, the crown prince of the Gompers' dynasty eulogizes the traditional treachery of "reward your friends and punish your enemies," while William H. Johnston, another ornament of that dynasty, indulges in a stilted gesture calculated to turn into abortive channels the desire of the rank and file for decisive political action.

Crushing the Rank and File

When the announcement of the December conference was made, all the militant members of organized labor determined to take advantage of it for the purpose of creating a real party of labor in America. The largest and most powerful labor bodies were enlisted in support of the proposition. At the September convention of the International Typographical Union at Atlantic City, that organization went on record in favor of the organization of a labor party and voted to participate in the December conference. The militants appealed to their local unions to back up the International and to send delegates. Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, with a membership of over five thousand, endorsed the proposed conference and selected delegates to attend. Soon a communication came from William H. Johnston to the effect that local unions were not to be represented, and the further astounding information that the International Union was only entitled to three delegates, in spite of the fact that the organization has a membership of 80,000.

On the other hand we learn that the fake Socialist Party, represented on the executive committee by the shyster lawyer, Hillquit, is to have seven delegates. The Socialist Party political crooks and fakirs, who represent nothing but a gang of half-baked petty bourgeois morons, has more than twice as many representatives as the International Typographical Union, a legitimate labor organization of half a century's standing in this country.

Why Local Unions Are Barred

Johnston is frank, if nothing else. He says: "Consideration was given to the question of having representatives from local unions and it was the consensus of opinion that if local unions were invited to send delegates the gathering would be so large it would be unwieldy."

We see here revealed the true purpose of the committee of charlatans who determined the representation. The gathering may become too unwieldy! Too unwieldy for what? Are these gentlemen afraid of the voice of the rank and file?

That is precisely the reason representation is to be restricted so that the delegation can be handled like putty in the hands of the political labor fakirs who are playing the Gompers game.

There is not the slightest that the outcome of the confer will be a reaffirmation of the Go pers policy of treachery and betray al of labor and that the recent gen eral elections will be held to hav vindicated the monstrous perfidy o the Gompers clique.

William H. Johnston and his co laborators are being used by old ma Gompers for the purpose of prevent ing the organization of a real labo party.

It is now up to the rank and fi of labor to force the Internation Unions to call a conference for th organization of a genuine labor pa ty and to insist that representative from local unions, men and wome from the rank and file of labor, b there to ensure its successful launc ing. This must be accomplished spite of and against the trickery the traitors to labor in control of th Cleveland conference.

Also there is a task impose upo the members of the International A sociation of Machinists; that task to eliminate Johnston as a factor i the labor movement and send hi into the ranks of the capitalist clas where his flunkeyism can be properl appreciated.

[illegible] the acceptance by the [illegible] York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of [illegible] General Executive Board's plan [illegible] reorganization the right socialist [illegible] have resigned from office. [illegible] resignation as a unit is evident[illegible] desperate attempt to prevent the [illegible] of the reorganization plan [illegible] the demoralization their po[illegible] have caused makes imperative [illegible] the last act of the contemptible [illegible] carried on by this element [illegible] the object of stemming the ris[illegible] tide of Left Wing sentiment in [illegible] union.

With conscious sophistry, these bureaucrats have given "the demoralizing activities of the left wing" as the reason for their desertion of their posts. There is nothing surprising in this jesuitism of the petty bureaucrats but they fail in their attempt to place the responsibility upon the left wing group for the disorganization prevailing in the New York local.

These reactionaries who have just quit under fire have been in complete control of the N. Y. local. Their standpat policies, their utter inability to lead a militant organization such as the Amalgamated has resulted in the complete breakdown of the organization machinery entrusted to them. In the last election they were repudiated by the membership. Only by the use of terroristic tactics and the falsification of the returns were they able to secure a majority count.

They retained office in the face of the bitter opposition of the militant membership and the antagonism to their continuance in power has resulted in a decrease in the dues payments. This inevitable result of bureaucratic attempts to rule or ruin is laid at the door of the left wing in a last effort to befog the real issue in the fight. Discovering that their machine domination is repudiated by the membership and faced with a reorganization that will strengthen the union and weaken the influence of the reactionaries, they have now resigned in a body with the hope of paralyzing the administrative machinery of the organization.

It is wholly untrue that the Left Wing block has ever adopted the tactic of non-payment of dues or urged such an entirely negative and fruitless policy upon the membership. The Left Wing has been trying to break the power of the bureaucrats in order to strengthen the union. They are the backbone of the union and they have opposed and will oppose in the future all reactionary elements whose attempts to control always result in sapping the fighting strength of the organization.

It is for this reason that the Left Wing stands for a complete reorganization on the basis of the Shop Delegates System.

The Workers Party warns all comrades in the unions not to be provoked by the slanders of the right socialists into raising the slogan of non-payment of dues and thus appealing to those groups who are in the union only because they have to be. Keep up the fight for a structural change in the union machinery.

Keep up the fight against the treacherous and cowardly right-wingers.

Struggle to win over the union membership to amalgamation and the shop delegates system, to the need for a militant leadership in order to prevent defeat by the militant bosses.

Work at all times against the demoralizing and disorganizing tactics of the right wing.

The Workers Party feels sure that the General Executive Board of the Amalgamated will deal effectively with the deserters who have added an attempt at paralyzing the union to their other sins of omission and commission. All comrades should work unceasingly to clean up the mess left by this yellow gang.

Workers of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union!

Support the militant elements in your union.

Support the movements for amalgamation of the needle trades and the shop delegates system.

Do not be fooled by the yellow bureaucrats. By their resignation they have publicly acknowledged their incapacity for leadership and responsibility in your progressive union.

A Splendid Opportunity

as "a great piece of constructive statesmanship". Karl Radek has pointed out that this movement on the part of American labor may be the means at last of breaking down the boycott which the great capitalists of the world have been trying to starve out the new social order of Russia. Premier Lenin insisted on showing his approval of the new corporation by buying two shares of stock from Hillman.

The Russian-American Industrial Corporation has already raised about $300,000 of the first million dollars of capital which was guaranteed by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and sent out a blanket invitation to all labor organizations, individual members and sympathizers with labor to join in the purchase of stock. A drive for selling the first million in stock at $10 a share will now be started. The only restriction is that a dominant interest in the corporation must be retained in the hands of workers' organizations.

Because of the terrible shortage of clothing in Russia, where the Winter cold is expected to take a heavy toll of life and suffering the corporation has been assigned the first task of manufacturing clothing on a huge scale according to the latest American methods, and this made it especially appropriate that the Clothing Workers should take the lead in the scheme. However under the contract with the Soviet Government the corporation is expected to go into various other industries taking up textile manufactures very shortly. Therefore not only clothing workers but every trade and their labor organizations are equally welcome in the huge undertaking.

The fact that the Russian government was willing to permit this corporation of its friends to have certain import and export rights led to an interesting problem. It developed that enormous profits could be made by EXPORTING goods from Russia, the estimate being a 400 per cent profit. This was a great temptation for Hillman's financial advisor who wanted immediately to switch from the difficult task of supplying Russia with clothes to the more easy business of stripping Russia of her remaining goods to be sold in the foreign market. This financial advisor was Mr. Wm. O. Thompson, former president of the N. K. Fairbanks Co. and the American Cotton Oil Co.

Hillman steadfastly refused to change from the plan of manufacturing clothing for the Russian people, being of the opinion that the primary purpose of the workers in investing in this company is not to make enormous profits but to help the Russian people by building up their industries to a self-sustaining basis. It was an irreconcilable disagreement, Thompson insisting on looking at it purely from the viewpoint of a "business man" and Hillman insisting on looking at it as a member of the labor movement pointing out that the guaranteed eight per cent profit was sufficient to assure a prosperous business that would benefit the Russian people as well as the stockholders. Thereupon Thompson quit the project and gave an interview to the New York Tribune in which he withdrew his name from the enterprise. Altho Mr. Thompson has later cabled repudiating the spirit of the Tribune interview, which he says was distorted by "the reporter's frantic imagination", nevertheless it is an incident deserving careful analysis.

When Mr. Thompson reached Russia he was disturbed to see the way the Russian workers run their industries, and disturbed again over Hillman's unwillingness to take the highest profits in sight without regard to the Russian workers' interests. He decided that purchase of stock in the Russian-American Industrial Corporation would not be a good investment unless the Soviet Government gives up the attempt to socialize the industries—that is, unless it gives up the purpose of the revolution.

Mr. Thompson as quoted in the Tribune (tho he says his words were distorted) is very much confused. At first he is afraid that investors "stand a good chance to lose their money" but later he admits that if the project should fail the investors could get their money back but says that he fears they "would have to wait for it four years."

Confronted with the fact that the enormous wealth of Russia became security in guaranteeing the labor corporation's investment and 8 per cent return, he said: "Concerning the eight per cent profit guaranty given Mr. Hillman by the Soviet Government, there is no doubt that the Government can pay it but whether it will is the big question."

Mr. Thompson has lost his nerve. He has fallen for the old emigrees' theory. It's an adjustable theory, that the Bolshevik government is bound to fail but since it does not fail it can't be trusted anyway. Mr. Thompson's fears are not one particle different from the hopes of the grand-dukes, countesses and ex-capitalists from Russia who are now begging drinks around the cafes of Berlin and Paris while they wait for the Bolshevik government to fall "next week". I have personally had the amusing experience of listening to this theory from the lips of a cousin of the Czar in a Berlin hotel in 1919. It is merely a total inability to believe in the possibility for a new order of society to succeed.

Can the Soviet Government effectively guarantee an investment? This question can only mean a repetition of the old wheeze "Is the Soviet Government going to fall?" Our own opinion is that if there were any danger of the failure or downfall of the first effort in the world's history to socialize industry, such a danger should be the signal for every worker to redouble the effort to supply Russia with the needed machinery. But is there any danger?

Of course there is a chance that Russia may go down, just as there is a chance that all Europe may go down, or even that America may go down. But anyone who applies his intelligence to reading the news knows that among the governments of Continental Europe, Soviet Russia alone is fast extending and solidifying its power while every other government is rapidly going down a decline.

[illegible] go back to Central Europe and French [illegible] without a [illegible] a direction which [illegible] to a condition [illegible] cial organization can keep industry and life going except the Soviet form, with the expropriation of private industry by the people.

Soviet Russia on the Ascendancy

Political power and solidarity in a Nation are only a reflection of economic solutions. Russia has far from completed the solution of her economic problems, but she has proven that a Soviet form of organization can hold a Nation together and keep its industrial life going after it had been reduced to a condition of ruin so complete that no other social form can hold it together.

Russia had been defeated, broken into fragments and economically destroyed by the war. Its frontiers had shrunken into a little circle around Petrograd and Moscow besieged by the armies of a dozen Nations. Yet the social power that was generated by the Soviet social form was vital enough to push back these frontiers to the Arctic Ocean in the North, to the Black Sea and the Transcaucasia in the South, strong enough to wear down the Japanese military power and to stretch its rule across five thousand miles to the Pacific. Yes, while the French bankers squabble four years unsuccessfully to reach the left bank of the Rhine a hundred miles away, the Soviet Power advances five thousand miles to the left bank of the Pacific. Meanwhile the decaying political system of the West—representing a decaying economic system—lets the prizes of the World War in the Dardanelles slip from its fingers, into the hands of an ally of Soviet Russia, a pupil of Moscow.

The vitality of the Soviet Power rests upon an economic basis. No abstract notion without economic basis could have swept this mighty tide across two continents. This power of social organization which the Bolsheviks have found is a power without which Nations cannot hold together. And we repeat that it is based upon a special form of economic organization.

Bolsheviks as Organizers

Not only is this basically an economic force, but it is an organizing force. It has organized armies better than any professional army-organizers, and out of material that no other force could handle. It wrested by force out of the hands of Kolchak and Wrangel human herds which it re-organized into iron battalions. It has disorganized every army that has been sent against it, and when these have not been quickly withdrawn from contact with it it has captured and re-organized them with a stronger discipline.

In short the Bolsheviks of Russia have organized in a superior form everything that has come into their hands.

But the Bolsheviks have never come into possession of a complete industrial system. Old Russia had only a partial industrial system which was absolutely dependent upon imported machine equipment and supplies. It was a system which never could run under a blockade. And this fragment of an industrial system was practically destroyed by the War. France is now complaining that she cannot live without help. Clemenceau begs compassion of the world for "France's twenty thousand destroyed industries." All the industrial system that Russia had, was destroyed. Soviet Russia quite naturally asks that her friends lend help in importing and establishing a self-sustaining industrial system.

American capitalists generally, with the encouragement of the U. S. Government, refuse to supply this equipment and organization. Why? The only reason given is that Russia hasn't got this equipment and organization! We hold this is an excellent reason for capitalists that want to strangle Russia, but that it is a better reason for the workers to redouble their efforts thru the Russia-American Industrial Corporation to supply Russia with machines, materials and industrial skill. We can't expect Mr. Thompson to understand this. It is a philosophy which, generally speaking, is impossible to the class of which Mr. Thompson and Mr. Clemenceau are spokesmen. A cat will be a cat and a fish will be a fish, nobody can persuade a cat to love a cool river nor a fish to love a warm corner by the stove. One must as a general rule live in the Labor movement to understand this philosophy. We think Hillman understands it better than Thompson.

The Russian Soviet Government is better able to keep any promises it now makes than any other government in Europe. Very nearly admitting this, Mr. Thompson says that "whether it will is the big question".

And here the matter reaches the point of ridiculousness. A mighty government representing a new order is born into the world and has undisputed possession of one-sixth of the Earth's land surface. "The one remaining obstacle to its existence is the boycott of capitalists who will not supply it with industrial machinery. The Soviet Government appeals over the heads of the capitalists, asking the workers of the world to break the boycott by supplying industrial machinery as friend to friend in partnership. The Soviet Government gives its promise to the outside workers that every dollar will be guaranteed and likewise it guarantees to pay a minimum return of eight per cent on the investment. Leave aside all questions of honor; leave aside the fact that the sole support of the Soviet Government rests in the ~~respect and confidence~~ and friendship of the working class. "Business men" could not generally understand anything of that. But what kind of folly would it be if the Russians failed to keep such a promise?

But Mr. Thompson is afraid that if we supply industrial machinery to Russia the Soviet Government "can easily cripple the industry, should it so desire, by prohibiting the importation of sewing machine needles"—!!

For our part, we say to the American Labor movement and to all sympathizers and liberals—BUY STOCK IN THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CORPORATION! The first Workers' Republic asks for your help. As the mightiest power in Europe it guarantees the funds that you put into a partnership with it.

Lenin Congratulates "Technical Aid"

The Central Bureau of the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia (S. T. A. S. R.) has received the following message from Nikolai Lenin, Premier of Soviet Russia.

Dear Comrades:—Our newspapers have carried unusually favorable reports concerning the work of members of your society on Soviet agricultural estates in the district of Kirsanoff, state of Tambow; likewise in the Migayew district in the state of Odessa and the work of the group of miners in the Donets Basin.

In spite of the gigantic difficulties in their way, especially on account of the disaster wrought to the country during the period of civil war, you have attained successes which are extraordinary.

I hasten to express to you my deep gratitude with the request to have this published in the official organ of your society and, if possible, in the general press of the United States as well.

I am requesting the presidium of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee to have your communes exhibited as models and to lend them special and extraordinary assistance for the successful development of their work.

Once more, in the name of our republic, I express to you my sincere appreciation and request that you bear in mind that your aid for the cultivation of our land with tractor machinery is for us especially timely and important.

I take pleasure in congratulating you on your plans for the organization of 200 agricultural communes.

Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars, Lenin.

This message was the highest mark of distinction which the Society has so far received from Russia. It will imbue its members with a fervent desire to develop the work of the Society to the largest extent possible. It will inspire them for the most energetic pursuit of their task which is to organize the re-immigration of many thousands of workers united in agricultural communes.

International Mask Ball Finale of N. Y. FSR Bazaar

A big international masquerade ball will wind up the six-day bazaar on behalf of the starving Russian children the week before Christmas, the committee on arrangements has announced.

The bazaar is being run in connection with an exhibition of peasant art products at the Lyceum, 201 E. 86th St., Dec. 18 to 23 inclusive, under the auspices of Local New York, F. S. R.

The ball is only one of the features of the week, as there will be music and a special program every evening. Talent of the first calibre has already been engaged. All of it, however, is planned to reach the climax of entertainment in a last evening of music, dancing, costumes, during which the beautiful woodcraft articles made by Russian children and peasants will continue to be sold.

Appeal for Comrades Who Are Still in Jail by One Who Is Out

St. Joseph, Mich., Nov. 27, 1922.

Dear Comrades: Today after our arraignment in the Circuit Court and after the other comrades had left this little town, I had the unusual opportunity of spending more than a half hour with the seven comrades who are still in jail, with no official present to mar our visit.

Tallentire, Nordling, McMillin, Mihelic, Bechtol, Ericksen, and Zack who is still kept isolated from the others, I have seen them all. THEY ARE ALL THINNER AND PALER than when I saw them last, and while their spirits were apparently good, nine-tenths of their conversation with me consisted of the possibilities of their release.

They cannot be blamed for the fact that the interest in their release is their paramount interest. Tho they may honestly deny it, this interest is greater than even their interest in our movement. Tho they may fight desperately against this trait, they cannot subdue it. More than three months of the monotony of jail without fresh air and sunshine, except on the two occasions when taken to court, and without the forgetfulness of self and confinement which work in a penitentiary affords, is bound to have an effect.

A friend of mine, a pacifist who served a year in Leavenworth, once told me that the worst effect of being in jail is the great prominence which food, baths, and other comforts assume. They get to be out of all proportion to the rest of the things in life. Many maintain that prison leaves a permanent stamp upon the person. Optimists deny this but admit that it takes years to recover from this condition.

We cannot permit any comrades to be stamped with such a curse. We must be impressed with the immediate necessity for securing their release.

I was fortunate enough to be released within one week of my arrest. Today in the presence of the comrades still in jail a strange feeling of guilt pervaded my whole being, guilt that I am free and they are still confined. There is no reason for this guilty feeling and yet perhaps I have not done enough. At any rate this feeling gradually was transformed into a resolution to go out once more and work ceaselessly until the remaining comrades are out of jail.

Comrades, we must get them out and at once. A concerted effort must be made again. Here is what Detroit has done. The movement in Detroit is not of great magnitude. Yet we have raised ten thousand dollars, thru the party alone, besides $5000 loans from liberals. WE DID THIS BY HAVING EACH BRANCH ELECT A SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CANVASS THE MEMBERS FOR LOANS FOR THE BAIL FUND. The committee went to work and the comrades responded loyally. The loans ranged from $10.00 to several hundred dollars, many comrades turning over every cent of their savings.

Such action can be taken by other cities. I have no doubt that the comrades everywhere will respond. No member of the party who has some savings or personal credit has done his duty unless he has loaned at least half of it for bail purposes.

Comrades, forward to the task of releasing our comrades before the prison effects are permanently stamped upon their character.

Yours for an immediate response,
CYRIL LAMBKIN.

Lenin [illegible] Congress of the [illegible]

He requested the Session of the Enlarged Executive to confirm the telegram sent to Comrades Cachin [illegible] Frossard.

Clara Zetkin proposed in the name of the German Delegation that the telegram be at once confirmed [illegible] the demands in the telegram were so obvious a nature that no further debate was necessary. The sending of the telegram was agreed to by the session.

Comrade Eberlein: The Chair proposes to the Session of the Enlarged Executive that the voting in the plenary sessions of the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International be so arranged that the delegations will be divided into five groups. The first group with [illegible] votes, the second group with 30 votes, the third group 20, fourth group 10, and the fifth group 5.

The Communist Parties shall be divided as follows:

1. the Communist Parties of Germany, France, Italy, Russia, Czecho-Slovakia, the Youth International and the R. I. L. U.; altogether 7 delegations with 315 votes.

2nd group with 30 votes each:—the Communist Parties of England, the United States, Poland, the Ukraine, Japan, Norway, Jugoslavia, Bulgaria and Finland;—9 delegations, 270 votes.

3rd group with 20 votes each, the Communist Parties of Spain, Roumania, Sweden, Lettland, Switzerland, Austria, Holland, Belgium; 8 delegations with 160 votes.

4th group with 10 votes each:—the Communist Parties of Greece, China, India, Ireland, Aserbaidshan, Georgia, Lithuania, Esthonia, Denmark, Persia, Turkey, Australia and Argentina, together 14 delegations with 140 votes.

5th group with 5 votes each:—the Communist Parties of South Africa, Java, Canada, Chili, Uruguay, Brazil, Mexico and Armenia, together 9 delegations with 45 votes.

There are also delegations with advisory votes from the countries in which a consolidated Communist Party does not yet exist, for Khiva, Bukhara, Mongolia, Iceland, Corea, Fiume, Palestine and for those countries whose delegates have not yet arrived.

There are therefore 47 countries in all with voting rights invited to the Congress. We propose to assign to these 920 votes.

Comrade Zinoviev further announces that some other comrades were especially invited to the Congress. These are representatives of the Italian Socialist Party and 3 comrades representing the opposition expelled from the Communist Party in Czecho-Slovakia. The Executive had decided to lay the matter before the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International. These comrades will be permitted to take part in the Congress with advisory votes in all questions. Likewise the comrades from the Italian Socialist Party.

Upon the motion of Comrade Bukharin this proposal was unanimously accepted.

Comrade Eberlein acquainted the Enlarged Executive with the standing orders. The time for speakers delivering reports was fixed at one hour and a half hour for discussion. Speakers reporting on the same matter are granted the same length of time. Votes would be taken if demanded by five delegations with deciding votes. Voting would take place by the elected representative of each delegation giving the votes. The standing orders were unanimously accepted without further discussion. The Presidium is to consist of 13 members: Comrade Zinoviev as chairman, two other Russian comrades and one representative each from the parties of Germany, France, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, the Balkans, Japan, England, the United States, Scandinavia and Poland. Comrade Eberlein announces that special secretaries were appointed for the various delegations and the Communist International. The opening of the World Congress will take place on Sunday in Petrograd. The delegations will go to Petrograd on the 3rd of November where over 200 meetings will take place in which the delegates will speak. On the second day the opening session of the Congress will take place and on the third day a joint session of the delegates of the World Congress with the newly elected Petrograd Soviet.

After the agenda proposed by the Executive (with the addition of the Italian, Czecho-Slovakian and Norwegian questions) is confirmed, the first session of the Enlarged Executive will be adjourned.

Don't Throw This [illegible]
Pass It on to Your [illegible]

[illegible] would think that the labor [illegible] a mountain of alleged political [illegible], would bring forth [illegible] more than a mouse. But [illegible] so. These old party politicians, [illegible] in the words of Senator-elect [illegible] K. Wheeler, of Montana, [illegible] supposed to possess "intestinal stamina," gave us but a flyspeck [illegible] the broad pathway of human progress in the shape of the "report of the committee on the direct primary."

The report urged the universal primaries for all candidates, and the direct election of the president.

These election reform proposals brought on the battle of the conference. The issue was, shall the candidates of all the parties appear on the same primary ballot, or shall each party have a separate ballot. To advance the sacred principles of "nonpartisanship," it was urged that all candidates of all parties, in the primaries, must appear on the same ballot.

"Horrors, no!" exclaimed Edward Keating, former congressman from Colorado, but now registered as manager of "Labor," the railroad brotherhood's weekly published in Washington. He was chairman and reporter for the primaries' committee.

"That would be moving too fast to urge that", he argued. We must be sensible".

The proposition of the committee was that all voters in the primaries be given ballots for all parties. The voter then marks one ballot, only, and destroys the rest, and no one knows how he has voted, "as in Wisconsin".

Prisoners Get Hearing

"If we get that we are doing mighty well", declared Keating, turning to La Follette, acting as chairman.

"Yes, yes," chimed La Lollette. [illegible]

[illegible] Mrs. Abby Scott Baker, suffrage militant, a delegate, tried to get Howe's resolutions committee to report a resolution demanding amnesty for political prisoners.

"But that is not within the province of this committee", was the answer she had received.

Evidently nothing was within the province of this committee except to report a soft soap resolution applauding the work of La Follette's "People's Legislative Service" during the past two years. I understand that the committee even refused to entertain a resolution for the national ownership of the railroads.

But as the gavel was about to fall for adjournment, Mrs. Scott moved her amnesty resolution for adoption from the floor. La Follette managed to maintain his senatorial dignity and calm in the face of this insurrection, and the resolution was allowed to be adopted without discussion. It was like pulling a bad tooth.

While he was still beaming his satisfaction over the day's "brilliant" accomplishments, I tried to get La Follette's views on a Labor Party.

"When do you think we will have a real political party of the workers and farmers in this country?" I asked.

"That is something you can't get by the mere passage of a resolution", he replied. "Those things come, you don't know just how. They seem to be ordained", and he looked upwards, rather self-satisfied.

"God ordains them", I suggseted, by way of encouragement.

"Yes, yes. God ordains it", he replied, happy at the suggestion.

"You see", he continued, "we must make haste slowly. We cannot move too fast", and I remembered Keating and his antagonism to the one-ballot primary. "We must make haste slowly, but none the less surely. If we had brought up the issue of the Third Party here, the conference would have broken up immediately"

[illegible] second party or a third party.

Johnston Has An Aim

Johnston seemed to be horror-stricken at the idea of anyone considering an independent political party for labor at this time.

"Why", he said, "we won more in the last election thru the old parties than had ever been achieved thru a third party."

"Yes, I have studied the British Labor Party", he continued, as if launching forth on a set speech. "But conditions are different in England. There you have a united, cohesive working class. You can travel from one end of the country to the other in a day. Here conditions are different. This is a big country, with different conditions. The workers here speak so many different languages", and much more to the same effect.

It was not very long before that, that Senator-elect Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, former Nonpartisan League governor, had been arguing that the interests of the workers in the city and the farmers on the land were identical, that the fight of the west was the fight of the east.

I put my question to Frazier.

"Well", he said, "we will know more in six or eight months. It all depends on the developments".

"What developments do you mean?" I asked.

Frazier Hopes for Square Deal

"Well", he replied, "if the farmers do not get a square deal. If conditions do not improve for the workers and farmers".

I couldn't get a direct reply from Frazier as to whether there was not a big element in the Nonpartisan League clamoring for a party of the workers and farmers independent of the old parties.

Frazier had made probably the most direct speech of the conference. He pictured the farmers of [illegible]

[illegible] Congressman-elect J. H. Sinclair of North Dakota, spoke on credits, joining the previous speakers in declaring the Wall Street money power had the workers and farmers by the throats. Senator-elect Smith W. Brookhart, brought the same news from Iowa, considered one of the richest farming states in the nation.

Gompers, in the grip of old age, tottered his way up to the platform, when his turn came, and in a doddering speech, eulogized La Follette, and all the speakers preceding him, and then had his secretary read his address while he sat nearby smoking his inevitable cigar. He cut a pitiful figure.

George W. Norris, touted as a "radical" senator from Nebraska, in fact a protege of Senator Hiram W. Johnson, of California, who dodged voting on Newberry's expulsion because it might hurt his presidential aspirations among the business interests, solemnly annihilated the electoral college in his speech.

Congressman James J. Frear, of Wisconsin, banged away at stock dividends, charging that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, heavily interested in the Gulf Oil Co., cut the first melon in the form of a stock dividend, so he couldn't naturally object to Standard Oil and other great corporations doing the same.

Frear Sees Red

"That's why they put him there," interjected an elderly woman sitting in the front row, and evidently not an invited delegate.

"I've heard that statement before," replied Frear, heatedly, adding, "and I know the kind of people it comes from," in that tone of voice that says, "Ah, you're a red. You can't fool me."

[illegible] by the inevitable [illegible].

He turned to La Follette and didn't know if the senator from his own state would approve of this move, since LaFollette had a reputation as a trust buster, but "regulation" was the remedy.

The conference might then and there have turned into a debate on trust busting vs. trust regulating, but it didn't. It maintained its unity to the last.

Back in Wisconsin they have commissions to regulate everything, from boxing matches to railroads, and it is peculiar that the "interests" concerned, never the workers or the farmers, are in control of these commissions, as the railroad workers quickly learned about the Railroad Labor Board.

Gompers was the only labor official who uttered a word during the morning and afternoon sessions of the conferences. All the others sat quiet and silent.

Some Blue Ribbon Exhibits

There was a banquet in the evening, at which the winners in the recent elections, like blue ribbon exhibits, sat at the speakers' table again, not a single spokesmen for labor.

There was a strange contrast at this banquet board; Keating, the toastmaster; La Follette, Howe and other veterans of the Washington atmosphere being dolled out in evening dress, correct to the nth degree, while the westerners, in the words of Wheeler, were wearing "the only suit they had". Frazier, Brookhart, Shipstead, Wheeler, all wore the same clothes in which they had come to Washington and had worn thruout the day. Toastmaster Keating tried to joke this incongruity away, but [illegible]

[illegible] W. T. Rawleigh, of Freeport, Illinois, [illegible] and then donated $1,000. Then each of the railroad brotherhood chiefs, [illegible] of $1,000 each. [illegible] as if those labor officials were not sure of the election pledges of these republicans and democrats, that they had to place the seal of the almighty dollar upon them.

Thus the uprising of the workers and farmers at the polls last month is being harnessed to the purposes of a few politicians in the old parties. Senator-elect Shipstead, of Minnesota, elected on a Farmer-Labor Party ticket, the only speaker not elected as a republican or democrat, did not speak during the conference. He made a few remarks at the banquet.

He said that his election had been won at a great cost. He said it came as the result of an era of jobless, impoverished workers and bankrupt, landless farmers. And he alone was elected on a ticket independent of the capitalist political parties.

The workers and farmers of this country are entitled to a bigger return on their protest-provoking misery.

Johnston, and Stone, and Robertson, and Howe, and the rest, with the high-sounding words of the politicians, LaFollette, Norris, Blaine, Keating, Frear and others, sounding in their ears, will go to Cleveland next week to keep the workers and farmers from winning the reward they are entitled to—a Labor Party.

Perhaps, as Frazier infers, they will have to suffer some more before they sweep aside the old party politicians and the backward labor officials, and carry out a successful uprising in their own midst.

Thus the American Federation of [illegible]

[illegible] Congressman-elect Sinclair, of North Dakota, thinks that the tendencies showing the development of a party of the workers and farmers. He thinks the election of Shipstead in Minnesota is an [illegible] tion.

LaFollette Presents an O

If the delegates at Cleveland successfully combat the in[illegible] that would chloroform labor with happy memories of the last elec[illegible] then they may be able to make p[illegible] ress. The seeming magic invoke[illegible] LaFollette and his evening dres[illegible] rade of politicians is a threat to [illegible] bor's progress politically. LaFoll[illegible] & Co. constitute a stumbling [illegible] for labor. The workers and farm[illegible] cannot depend on them for aid [illegible] building a party of the robbed [illegible] exploited.

LaFollette and his following [illegible] merely tinkerers, tinkering away [illegible] an effort to keep the rotten and si[illegible] ing capitalist ship of state af[illegible] They tinker, and tinker, and ti[illegible] and will continue to tinker to [illegible] end.

If Frazier, Brookhart, Shipst[illegible] Wheeler and the others who [illegible] coming out of the west, beyond [illegible] Mississippi River, follow in th[illegible] footsteps, they will become equal[illegible] useless in the struggle for power [illegible] the workers and farmers.

The lesson of LaFollette's gath[illegible] ing is that the militants must [illegible] harder than ever at the Clevel[illegible] Conference for a real Labor Par[illegible] The break must be made with the o[illegible] parties. It must be a clean brea[illegible] The discontent growing out of th[illegible] misery and despair of the masses o[illegible] toilers, in the cities and on the lan[illegible] demands it. LaFollette's Conference couldn't see that. The Clevela[illegible] Conference must be compelled to se[illegible] and act.

Edgar Owens, Back from Prison, Urges Great Need of Support for Prisoners

Here is part of a letter sent to the secretary of the New York Division of the National Defense Committee by Edgar Owens immediately after his release from the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. It reads:

"The New York Division has surely done great work. I shall always be proud in the knowledge that I could be associated in the work with such a splendid bunch of comrades. Their work will go down in the history of our movement as something very much worth while. When dissension was rampant elsewhere everybody seemed able to unite in the defense work. And this was a mark of merit that deserves the highest commendation.

"Please tell the comrades for me of my warm regard for them. If I have to go to prison I would ask for nothing more than to have such a group on the outside, watching every move of the enemy, and ever ready to take advantage of any situation that might come up. I know now what prison relief really means. I have eaten prison food, and worn prison clothes and know now what it means to be able to draw on an account to secure those little variations from the regular prison fare and routine. I spent many months in defense work, but it took those 10 days inside to learn and fully appreciate what our defense work means for those on the inside."

This is one more proof of the value of the defense work. We must go on more actively than ever not only to meet our present needs but to build a staunch, active defense guard to meet any attacks of our enemy the Capitalist Class.

The New York Division of the National Defense Committee will maintain its reputation and will expand provided it can enlist all its friends in every one of its undertakings.

On Feb. 22-25 the Second Annual Bazaar will take place at the Lyceum, 86th St. and 3rd Ave. You are urged to begin preparing articles —embroidery articles, sewing things, painting, decorating, etc., in short, making anything at all that will sell at our bazaar.

If you cannot send articles send cash for the purchase of same. Send contributions to: National Defense Committee, New York Division, 80 East 11th Street, Nerma Berman, Secretary.

Famine Situation in the Ukraine

The need for relief in Soviet Ukraine is in many respects greater this year than last, the most recent reports indicate. An official statement issued by the Ukrainian consular office in Berlin expresses regrets that falsely optimistic forecasts should have been spread.

The New York Call Knifes Russia

By JOHN DI GREGORIO

We have often heard of the laudable initiative of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (the independent union of men's tailors) to collect a million dollars in America, thru a stock company known as the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, for the purpose of buying weaving and sewing machines and materials and to send them to Russia, there to be utilized jointly with the proper clothing organization in the operation of factories furnished by the Russian Government.

The yellow socialists, who hate the Soviet Government more than the capitalists themselves, have tried to discredit that initiative and to make it fail, just as they have tried to defame and destroy every other undertaking of assistance to Russia.

Their newspapers, like the FORWARD, THE N. Y. CALL, JUSTICE of the International Ladies Garment Workers (the women's tailors union affiliated with the A. F. of L.) and others, have left no means untried in order to attain their vile purpose.

True to form, a few days ago The N. Y. Call did something that reveals the vicious, jesuitic soul of the socialists of America. Saturday, November 25th, it reproduced, on its front page, an article taken from the arch-reactionary New York Tribune, in which a William O. Thompson heretofore financial adviser to the R. A. I. C., with a series of arguments that betrayed his preference for the capitalist system, was reported as warning his friends against the Russian venture of the Amalgamated not because he found fault with its fundamental plan, but because, after being in Russia a little while with President Hillman, had no faith "in the intentions and in the policies of the Russian Soviet Government".

Among other things Mr. Thompson is reported as saying that without any doubt the Soviet Government can pay the promised eight per cent dividend to the shareholders of the R. A. I. C., but whether it will pay it is a big question. In other words, he impugns the intentions of Russia, raises a big cloud of doubt and runs away from the subject.

And in this strain of eel-like argumentation of approving and knocking goes on for three long columns, leaving in the end a great confusion and distrust in the mind of the reader.

It is useless and beside the point to quarrel with Mr Thompson. He was engaged by the R. A. I. C. as an adviser in financial matters, and, as such, was taken by Mr. Hillman to Russia to make the final partnership arrangements with the Russian Government. It is no surprise that the Russian way of thinking at this time and the positive demonstration of the unselfish and therefore unbusiness-like intentions of Mr. Hillman must have disconcerted him and caused him to express his dissatisfaction on his return to Berlin.

That was natural. But why should the N. Y. Call without waiting for Hillman to reach the U. S. where he was due to arrive any day rush to pick up such insidious capitalist propaganda and publish it immediately, capped by a two-column heading, reading: "A. C. W. RUSSIAN VENTURE IS FAILURE", unless it be to emulate its reactionary confrere and do as much damage as possible before an explanation could be given?

The purpose is evident to do harm to Russia, to discredit those who are giving Russia a helping hand, to ruin the enterprise of the Amalgamated. In this attack one can see the hand of the Forward's evil genius, the man who will try to wreck any organization he can not control, as he wrecked, with the help of other dictatorial die-hards, the Socialist Party when the fraudulent socialists of the old guard could no longer control its membership. The unfortunate scribes of the N. Y. Call must do the bidding of Mr. Cahan, for the latter furnishes the sinews of war, and without his consent the N. Y. Call could not exist.

Likewise, Justice, being under the control of another of Cahan's creatures, Benjamin Schlesinger, the Socialist who constantly votes for Sam Gompers, has found opportunities to deride and antagonize the initiative of the Amalgamated.

The workers in this part of the country should know more about Mr. Cahan and his associates in mischief raising. It is they who in the last few months have created that feeling of enmity and bitterness among the members of the Amalgamated that has been almost fatal to that organization.

One wishes that it could be fully known how Mr. Cahan has been foiled in his attempts to influence the Amalgamated at the last Convention and before, how he has been rebuked and rebuffed for trying to have his antagonists expelled from that Union. Perhaps we would hear a true story along the lines of the spurious one told by the President of the International about the Red emissary whom he "threw out" of his office.

The N. Y. Call must have received a lot of protests about its "innocent" attack and most "inoffensive" publication and in order to show itself in lamb's clothes the next day, with jesuitic blandness, tried to excuse itself by affecting anger at the N. Y. Tribune. Among other things it had the effrontery to say "Moreover, it is rather peculiar that this attack in a hostile newspaper should be timed to appear just when Sidney Hillman was on the high seas and unable to give an explanation or reply. This may be a coincidence, but it looks like an unfair blow struck from behind."

Yes, bunch of yellow jesuits, it is an unfair, disloyal, and cold-blooded blow struck from behind, and your crocodile tears and affectations do not save you. You knew it was an unfair blow and you helped with glee make it reach vital organs!

Fortunately, however, the intelligent workers have understood that fully well. They will not be swayed by this base act of vindictiveness and will have more faith than ever in every enterprise intended to redeem Russia. They will continue to support the Russian-American Industrial Corporation to the limit of their ability. They do not care about returns in the form of dividends or otherwise; they are happy to give their savings for the purpose of furnishing the Russian brothers with the means necessary to cover their naked bodies, and to help the Soviet Government to better satisfy the needs of the Russian population, so that it might become stronger thereby.

Harding's Triumph! The Birth of a Budget!

By C. S. WARE

$50,000,000!
Saved by Harding's new Budget!
And yet the Department of Justice gets an increase!
More spending money for the Saviours of Democracy, Daugherty, Burns & Co.!

It is interesting to note that this $50,000,000 decrease in expenditures does not interfere with an increase of 26 per cent in the expenses of the Department of State—American Imperialism can safely rely upon its Government to meet its ever increasing demands—its petty cash account will not be cut—"our" foreign interests will not be neglected.

Another increase, calculated to mislead the unwary, is that of 30 per cent in the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture. VOTE THE REPUBLICAN TICKET—OH YE FARMERS—A Republican Secretary of Agriculture admits that your taxes have gone from 9.8 per cent in 1913 to 33 per cent last year, with your farm prices below pre-war level and all other commodities 50—100 per cent above—BACK TO NORMALCY, but all will be well.—The Department of Agriculture has had a budget increase of 30 per cent—what for? A Moratorium on mortgages shouldered by the Government—? Scarcely! The increase can easily be accounted for in the vast sum turned over by the Federal Reserve Banks at a maximum rate of 5½ per cent, to the Banks in their districts. These banks in turn grant loans to deserving farmers at interest rates ranging in many cases as high as 30 per cent. This "grant" to the farmers is merely another form of Bonus to the capitalists—charged—it is, true—in the political ledger—for votes from Farmers.

As for the decreases—there is the much heralded slash in the navy—a decrease in budget of .4 per cent and the terrific decrease in the War Department of 5 per cent. The greatest reduction in departmental budgets interestingly enough—is to be found in the budget of the DEPARTMENT OF LABOR. Consistent with the policy which has raised the Daugherty-Burns budget from 12½ millions in 1921 to 15½ millions in 1922, to 18½ millions in 1923, the economical Harding administration has CUT THE BUDGET OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR 17 PER CENT. And WHY NOT? With the Child Labor Laws unconstitutional there is no longer any need to safeguard working conditions for children—and with a Department of Justice having at hand the military and judiciary powers of the country to COERCE labor, why should a department be supported whose function is remedial as against the Government policy of repression.

But while this Harding budget is still receiving loud applause and the administration receiving bouquets for its economy and its saving of "our" money may we ask who profited by the repeal of the Excess Profits and Surtax Acts? And how about that Fordney-McCumber Tariff which is going to cost every American home $100.— and what about that other prize capitalist economist—Mr. Mellon—guardian of the Treasury—and the $1,500,000,000 untaxed stock dividends thru which the Standard Oil alone will get away with about $900,000,000 free from taxation. Where are all the millions of dollars Mr. Daugherty was going to fine the trusts—The cases are quashed—Where are the millions he was going to collect from the war fraud plunderers—perhaps Mr. Daugherty knows—. MR. HARDING HAS SAVED $50,000,000! HOW MUCH HAVE MR. MELLON AND MR. DAUGHERTY COST?

Meanwhile watch for the SPECIAL APPROPRIATIONS. Last Spring Mr. Daugherty picked an extra plum of $500,000 Watch for the Pork Barrel bills—those same old rivers and harbors and public buildings again—. Watch for Army and Navy special hand outs—petted Pershings pleading for preparedness and Denby wants a navy second to none. In the words of a headline from our learned contemporary THE NEW YORK TIMES "NO HARDING VACATION YET" we echo—no—not yet.

Administrative Council Outlines Negotiations with Jewish Bureau, States Present Position

In response to a resolution of the German Bureau of the Workers Party asking that the Party Central Executive Committee make further efforts to settle the controversy in the Jewish Federation, the Administrative Council has sent the following letter to the German Bureau, outlining the negotiations which took place and the present attitude of the Administrative Council as follows:

Louis F. Wolf, Executive Secretary, German Federation, 15 Spruce St., New York City.

Dear Comrade Wolf:—The Administrative Council of the Party directs me to make the following reply to your letter of November 27th in which you express your regret at the threatened split in the Jewish Federation and recommend the reopening of negotiations between the C. E. C. and the Bureau of the Jewish Federation offering your good offices in achieving this end:

After the publication of the manifesto of the Bureau of the Jewish Federation attacking the C. E. C. of the Party and refusing to submit to the discipline of the C. E. C., the Administrative Council of the Party immediately drafted a reply which was adopted by the Administrative Council on November 16th After the adoption of this manifesto, thru the good offices of Comrade Lore, a meeting was arranged between the Executive Secretary of the Party and Comrades Olgin, Wishnak, and London representing the Jewish Federation Bureau in an effort to arrange a settlement of the controversy.

At the opening of this meeting at which Comrade Lore was present, Comrade Lore stated to the representatives of the Jewish Bureau that the fundamental condition to any settlement of the controversy was the acceptance of the decision of the C. E. C. that the even division of representation in the Jewish Bureau be restored, that is, that the Jewish Bureau submit to the discipline of the C. E. C.

It was with the understanding that the representatives of the Jewish Bureau accepted this fundamental condition that the negotiations continued.

During the discussion at the meeting in question, which was held on Friday, Nov. 17th, the Executive Secretary of the Party outlined the conditions which he believed could be agreed upon as a basis of settlement of the controversy. After considerable discussion it was agreed that these conditions would be put in definite form and submitted to the representatives of the Jewish Bureau at another meeting on November 18th. Comrades Wishnak and London appeared as the representatives of the Jewish Bureau. The Executive Secretary of the Party submitted to the representatives of the Bureau the following proposals for settlement of the controversy:

1. That the Administrative Council would endorse the convention called for December 16th thus making it the regular convention of the Jewish Section of the Party.

2. That elections of delegates to this council would be thru district conventions, as provided by the Party constitution, or, if the Jewish Bureau preferred, thru branches with the understanding that branches having less than an average of ten members as shown by dues payments for the months of July, August, September and October would not be entitled to voting delegates but to fraternal delegates. Branches having from ten to twenty-five members would be entitled to one delegate and an additional delegate for each additional twenty-five members or major fraction thereof.

3. That the discussion of the question of an open Communist Party be continued in order to insure equal opportunity of both sides to present its views. A committee consisting of Olgin, Bittleman and Ruthenberg be created which would have control of the discussion so far as the amount of space allowed and the order of appearance of articles was concerned but not as to the contents of the articles.

4. That the 50-50 division of representation of the Bureau of the Federation be restored at once.

5. That there be transferred to the Party a 50 per cent ownership of the "Freiheit".

6. That in case either side desired to send speakers to appear before the branches to present its viewpoint that this should be granted by the other side with the understanding that the opposite side also have the same privilege.

In view of the fact that the manifesto of the Administrative Council was being withheld from publication while these negotiations were pending it had been made a condition of the continuance of the negotiations that the representatives of the Bureau must accept or reject the terms proposed at the meeting on Saturday, November 18th. These terms were presented to Comrades Wishnak and London at this meeting and were accepted by them subject to the ratification of the Jewish Bureau. It was the understanding that the Bureau would meet on Monday, November 20th, and act upon these terms.

On Tuesday, Nov. 21st, Comrades Wishnak and London called at the office of the Party and informed the National Secretary that the Bureau had accepted the terms above outlined with the exception of the provision as to the 50 per cent division of the strength of the Bureau. From the statement made to the Executive Secretary it appeared that there was no question as to the other points proposed in the agreement but only as to the restoration of the 50 per cent division of representation on the Bureau.

The Executive Secretary informed the representatives of the Bureau that this point could not be conceded. Comrade London thereupon appealed to the Executive Secretary to make further efforts to have a concession made on this point. The conference was dissolved without any definite decision.

On Wednesday, Nov. 22, the Executive Secretary called Comrades Olgin, Wishnak, London and Salzman to his office and informed them that upon further consideration and in order to avoid any further controversy the condition as to the 50-50 representation on the Bureau had been withdrawn and that in its place a Convention Committee of five from each group was to be created, (this being the alternative proposal of the Jewish Bureau) and the Bureau to continue to function. This concession on the part of the Executive Secretary removed the only point still subject to controversy as stated by the representatives of the Bureau at the previous conference, but immediately upon this point being [illegible] to the matter of election. The conference dissolved with the understanding that the Bureau of the Federation would meet that evening and give its answer the next day, the four representatives to meet the Executive Secretary at his office on the next day.

On Thursday, the day following, the Executive Secretary received a letter signed by Olgin, Wishnak and London stating that the Bureau of the Federation rejected the proposed method of election of delegates and rejected the condition that the 50 per cent ownership of the "Freiheit" be transferred to the Party.

It was only after these extended negotiations with the representatives of the Jewish Bureau in which the representatives of the C. E. C. of the Party made every possible concession in order to avoid a conflict that the decision of the Administrative Council made a week before it was carried into effect thru the publication of the manifesto which has been adopted on November 18th. We feel certain that the Comrades of the German Bureau will see, from the above statement that the Administrative Council and its representatives in negotiations did not wish to precipitate the present controversy but made every possible concession, even concessions which involved acceptance of violation of Party discipline before taking final action to enforce its decision.

In spite of the fact that the history of the previous negotiations with the Bureau of the Jewish Federation as outlined above show even bad faith on the part of the representatives of the Bureau the Administration Council stands ready at the present time to entertain any definite proposals for the settlement of the controversy, and if the German Bureau can obtain such proposals they will receive earnest consideration from the Administrative Council.

The Administrative Council agrees with the Executive Committee of the German Bureau that any action within the Party at this time threatening the unity of the Party is a crime against the revolutionary movement in this country. It is quite certain that the history of the negotiations as outlined above prove that the Administrative Council of the Party has not been guilty of such action and that if there is a controversy which may bring about a split in the Jewish Federation the Bureau of that Federation must thereupon shoulder the responsibility for this condition.

With fraternal greetings,

C. E. Ruthenberg,

Executive Secretary.

Among the Magazines

"Soviet Russia" Changes Form

"Soviet Russia," official organ of the Friends of Soviet Russia, will begin the new year with a change in form and substance, but not in spirit and policy. It is being greatly enlarged and with the January issue it will contain unpublished pictures of Russian life, which will give a graphic history of Russia in pictorial form.

The change is made in order to develop a greater and more popular circulation than the magazine has hitherto been able to get. Besides the pictorial review, it will print articles, official documents, a Book Review department and what is called, in American journals, "Human Interest" stories.

Now more than ever, with the barrage of lies about Russia still being maintained, it is necessary for every worker to be fully acquainted with developments in the first proletarian republic in the world. The magazine sells for 20 cents and may be obtained on news stands or from the National Office, Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 W. 13th St., New York City.

"Young Worker" Out!

The December issue of the Young Worker, official organ of the Young Workers' League, is now on sale and contains, as usual, excellent articles, all written by members of the League.

One article in particular by Oliver Carlson is well-worth reading. Its sixteen pages are packed with material of importance to any young worker. It can be obtained for 10 cents from any member of the League or from the "The Young Worker", 2517 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Glassberg in Brownsville

Benjamin Glassberg, educational director of the Workers Party, will lecture coming Sunday, Dec. 10th, on the subject: "Social Forces and Political Parties in the United States." The lecture takes place at our headquarters, 1844 Pitkin Ave. Bring all your friends with you.

New York C. C. C. Meeting

The regular City Central Committee meeting will be held Saturday, Dec. 9, at John Reed Hall, 208 E. 12th St., 3 p. m. The last meeting of the C. C. C. was a whopping success. So all come and make this one better.

[illegible]

[illegible] Gompers. In addition to praising Sammy, Schlesinger imitates him which in some circles is considered the highest form of worship.

In four pages of billingsgate appearing in the "Labor Age", Schlesinger airs his infantile opinions about the British labor movement and the opinion British labor leaders have of the American movement.

"Due to the attitude of British Labor with regard to our American labor movement, there exists a notion in the minds of some people here that the English workers treat the American labor movement lightly or with contempt and that they regard Gompers as a reactionary. * * * Gompers, it seems to me, is appreciated even more in England than in America."

Schlesinger further adds that Gompers "is being spoken of there as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, labor leader in the world."

Evidently Interviewed Leaders Only

Evidently Schlesinger obtained his information exclusively from the yellow leaders of the Tom Shaw and Phil Snowden type, social patriots and hirelings of the same Allied Imperialism at whose shrine Gompers offers oblations and incantations and from whence he derives his inspiration as a leader of American labor!

The vast majority of British labor at least has sense enough to support a labor party, deficient as it is, instead of permitting itself to be delivered into the shambles of capitalism thru a policy of rewarding friends and punishing enemies in the camp of the old parties. Those class conscious members of British labor also remember the trips made to England by Gompers, at the behest of the United States government under Woodrow Wilson, to plead the holy cause of the House of Morgan in the late World war. They have not forgotten the grovelling of this old buzzard, this hireling of Wall Street, this ornament of the Civic Federation, who sold out the American labor movement in a World crisis and delivered it bag and baggage into the bloody clutches of the war lords of American Imperialism. Furthermore, British Labor will not ignore the fact that even now Gompers is trying to play a tin whistle on the Clemenceau Band wagon, which is exclusively a Morgan attraction in this country today.

Concerning Soviet Russia

Being a part of the Gompers dynasty the report of Schlesinger would be incomplete unless it contained the customary measure of mendacity concerning Soviet Russia.

"They speak now in Europe in working class circles of Communism and Bolshevism with a bitter smile on their lips." Then we learn who "they" are that thus speak. They are "the most prominent leaders of the English labor movement," those same leaders stigmatized as enemies of the working class by the Communists of the world, particularly the Hendersons, Shaws and Snowdens. We are told by Schlesinger that during the sessions of the British Trade Union Congress Tom Shaw, in speaking on a resolution demanding withdrawal of Japanese troops from Siberia blandly asked:

"If it is not right for Japan to keep its soldiers in Siberia, why is it right for the Soviet Government to keep an army of occupation in Georgia?"

The slimy Schlesinger then adds: "You should have heard the applause that came from the 700 delegates in reply to this question, to appreciate what the English workers think of the present day Russian regime."

Neither Schlesinger, nor Tom Shaw, nor Henderson, nor J. Ramsey McDonald, nor the two Snowdens, blacklegs and adventurers all, had the common proletarian honesty to inform the assembled delegates that the Red Army of Soviet Russia entered Georgia to defend the working class from the massacre of the White Terror of Allied Imperialism, while the Japanese troops in Siberia were there for the purpose of crushing the aspirations of the working class. They did not mention the fact that under three years of Menshevik rule in Georgia the White Guard armies, financed by the Allies, made a slaughter-house of the nation and that every effort of the workers to rise was crushed in new rivers of blood drawn from their battered and bleeding bodies. No, not one word of truth concerning these atrocities, these monstrous crimes against the working class! Not one word of the unrestrained joy with which the entrance of the Red Army was hailed by all except the Menshevik hirelings of Allied Imperialism.

Tom Shaw and Mrs. Snowden

Tom Shaw will be remembered as the creature who presided at the Berlin conference of the Three Internationals last Spring when the effort was made on the part of the Communist International to create a united front against the sledge hammer blows capitalism everywhere was delivering against the working class.

That conference was sabotaged by Shaw and the heroes of the Second International, who, instead of solidifying the ranks of the workers, spent their time defending the interests of capitalist imperialism in Georgia and denouncing the Russian government for the presence of the Red Army in that territory.

The reports on Georgia were obtained from the wife of Philip Snowden, a petty-bourgeois hag who visited that land as a press agent of British Imperialism and who wrote certain observations, as false as they were silly, against the Soviet government, but who was taken seriously by the British labor fakirs. After every resource of the capitalist press of Britain had been exhausted in an effort to destroy Soviet power in Georgia the laborites were called upon to carry on the poison propaganda that their regular prostitutes shrank from in abhorrence.

Mr. Philip Snowden, the kept man of Mrs. Snowden, also has opinions upon Russia. Philip thinks that Russia "should be admitted into the family of civilized nations" and that the Bolsheviki will thereby lose their power. Just what motive lies beneath this cerebration of Snowden is not clear at this time. It is interesting to note his classification of civilized nations. Belgium with its Congo, Britain with its seething millons under the Iron Heel, France with its Colonial infamies, the United States with Haiti and Santo Domingo, are civilized nations, all. And Phil Snowden and J. Ramsey MacDonald and Tom Shaw and Sam Gompers and all the other men servants and maid servants of capitalism could assist in the civilizing process. The husband of Mrs. Snowden, reechoes her slogans: "Let us enter Russia and conduct an impartial investigation so we can exchange views and bring the present situation there to an end."

Such drivel is the basest hypocrisy. Neither Mrs. Snowden, her husband, nor any of the other political labor adventurers have any intention of [illegible] them into accepting the yoke of capitalist slavery.

British Labor Has Not Spoken

British labor has not yet spoken regarding its attitude toward Soviet Russia, but when it does speak it will not be thru the medium of the gallant leaders Schlesinger consorted with, but thru its true representatives, those militants who are upholding the banner of the Proletarian Revolution in the Communist Party of Great Britain, which became a factor in British politics at the last election.

As to Schlesinger, his record in his own organization is too contemptible to require much comment. He displays his great love for proletarian democracy by using his personal political machine that controls the International Ladies' Garment Workers to expel regularly elected delegates from his own packed conventions in order to maintain control of the organization.

Since Gompers did a little press agent stunt for Schlesinger, at the Cleveland convention, it was no more than proper that the yellow socialist, Schlesinger, should return the favor by boosting Gompers' European stock.

The time is not far distant when the class conscious workers of both England and the United States will rise and eliminate the parasites that thrive upon the betrayal of the labor movement and join hands with the valiant fighters of Soviet Russia in an indomitable International of Labor that will write finis to the history of the age-long struggle of labor against its enemies within and without the labor movement.

Now that Schlesinger is back on the job fighting the working class, it is up to the working class in his own organization to put him on the toboggan and head him toward the oblivion he so justly deserves.

THE WORKER,

799 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

Disloyalty and Treason

Judging by the [illegible] statements he issues from time to time, Ben W. Hooper, chairman, must feel the [illegible] grip of death closing upon his United States Railroad Labor Board.

Hooper admits that part of his job is reading a large number of labor papers, and he confesses that nothing is [illegible] by these papers that might stir up distrust and hostility among the people.

This champion of 23-cents-an-hour wages does not realize that he has helped spread discontent among underpaid common labor on the railroads by his own criminal wage edicts, supposed to be the best judgment of an "impartial chairman." He weeps as follows:

> "The pernicious doctrine that the courts are dominated by the rich and powerful is fed to an element of people who, by reason of [illegible] and highly sensitized class-consciousness, are peculiarly susceptible to its [illegible] influence.
> "When a man becomes thoroly saturated with this distrust of the courts he is no longer a good American citizen. His mind is [illegible] with dark suspicions and he nurses a [illegible] against his government. He is converted into a fit instrument of disloyalty and treason."

It is Hooper and his crew, with their Daugherty injunctions, who really convince the workers that the rich own the courts. The worker comes to realize that the government isn't his government, but that it is the instrument of the mine owners, the railroad owners, and the property of the owners of other indutries, to oppose and suppress his struggle for happiness for himself and his family.

The workers may be disloyal to that government, they may be traitors to it. But then they are loyal and true to themselves and to those they love.

Jack Jones Loses His Temper

We predicted recently that among the 142 labor members of the British parliament, some would not be worried by the dignity of that capitalist institution.

Jack Jones, from the working class London East Side, the other day, so successfully tweeked the nose of "order" in the House of Commons, that he was ordered by the chairman to leave.

"Oh, you dirty dogs!" Jack Jones is said to have exclaimed when the King's members urged a salary of $500 a week to be paid by the British government to the ex-Sultan of Turkey, recently escaped on a British warship from Constantinople to Malta.

Jones had in mind the measly pittances granted the millions of British jobless, and added:

"Give the Sultan 18 bob a week, with a shilling for each of his wives!" and the august parliamentarians of all parties were in an uproar of laughter.

Jones came back to his seat in the House of Commons the next day and made an apology that should be memorized by all future labor members-elect. It was, according to the cables, as follows:

> "In the course of yesterday's proceedings I lost my temper—the only thing I had to lose (Laughter). During that time I used certain language which I believe is considered unparliamentary. It is dockers' English. As I happen to represent a constituency on the east side of London, mostly inhabited by casual laborers, I thought I was using the kind of language they would have expressed under the circumstances."

It is refreshing to hear a workers' representative, in a parliament, insisting on speaking the language of those who elected them. If all the elected members of the British Labor Party will do that in Bonar Law's parliament they may accomplish something for the British workers. But we fear that parliamentary dignity sits as heavily upon the brows of the MacDonalds and Thomases as it does upon the stern visage of the royal chairman of the House of Commons.

British labor, in the last election, put new blood with the old into parliament. It will do better next time by displacing all its reactionaries with eager militants, anxious for the final struggle against king and parliament.

La Follette for President

It is reported that some one foolishly said once upon a time, "I would rather be right than be president." That sounds good on paper or in a speech, but it could better read, "I will do anything to become president."

That applies with equal emphasis to Robert Marion La Follette, U. S. senator from Wisconsin, just as much as it does to Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho; to Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, or any other "progressive" or reactionary aspirant for presidential honors in 1924.

These three are Republicans, but, like the "progressive" governor, Hunt, Democrat, of Arizona, they join in the general slogan, "Work thru my party!" meaning either the Republican or Democratic party.

There was an uprising among the voters at the November elections. The workers and farmers, suffering from unemployment or plundered by the bankers and grain speculators, forced into gigantic strikes or faced with manipulated prices, revolted as best they could. They struck blindly thru the old parties.

One cannot blame La Follette for trying to ride that protest with his presidential aspirations. Or Borah, or Johnson, either. The crime is on the heads of those labor spokesmen who fight the efforts of the workers to build a political machine of their own.

It reminds us of Scheidemann, Legien and Co., in the days of the overthrow of the kaiser, selling the possibilities of a Soviet Revolution for the promise of a universal eight-hour day and other slight concessions from capitalism. So now these chosen of the workers and the farmers are selling the possibilities of a real Labor Party for doubtful support on behalf of some labor legislation, with $3,000 checks as a bonus thrown in by the railroad brotherhoods. It will be remembered that the brotherhoods remained at work when the shopmen went on strike last summer. They sought special favors from the railroads then; they will want special favors from the politicians now; favors that will militate against the interests of the less favored, less skilled, not so well organized railroad workers.

These labor spokesmen have shown that they are willing, even to permit La Follette to nurse his presidential aspirations, if he will occasionally place his "People's Legislative Service," with its varied assortment of senators and congressmen, at their disposal.

These "labor officials" seem to have forgotten about "Teddy" Roosevelt and his "Bull Moosers" who went on a rampage in 1912, two years after the revolt against Taft-Republican rule in the congressional elections of 1910. Roosevelt ten years ago wanted to capture the republican party, even as La Follette is now framing his plans for 1924. And these labor heads are now trailing in La Follette's wake, never learning thru past experience.

If the workers and farmers are content to see the [illegible] born of their agony thus sold over the bargain counter, they will remain silent. If they really wish to redress their wrongs, they will make progress by building a political power of their own, a Labor Party of the exploited in industry and on the land.

The Cleveland Conference will show whether the workers and farmers want to be led into the political shambles of a La Follette, an American edition of Great Britain's Lloyd George, or whether they are ready to emerge from the present chaos and make the clear, uncompromising, class voice of the exploited heard in the halls of congress at Washington. Against the alluring cry of the leaders, "La Follette for President!" let the masses of labor raise the slogan, "All power to the workers thru the workers," and make progress now thru organizing a Labor Party.

Clipping Wings at Lausanne

We had been told for several days by the kept press of an irreparable break between Soviet Russia and Angora Turkey at the Lausanne "Peace Conference." This little house of cards, built up by capitalism's clever journalists, is now wrecked at one blow by Lord Curzon, foreign minister for the British, who laments that the Turks are really hiding behind the Russians' skirts.

No doubt the propaganda writers feel that if Turkey could only be separated from Soviet Russia, they could conduct a more peaceful struggle for the oil fields of the Near East.

Great Britain, the "strongest naval power," doesn't like the position of Soviet Russia on "The Straits." Tchitcherin defined this position by declaring that there shall be freedom of commerce, but the Dardanelles and Bosphorus must be closed to all warships, except those of Turkey, and the Turks shall have the right to fortify the shores of the straits as she pleases.

Of course the British consider this a black outrage against her warships that have roamed the waters of the world and pillaged and ravaged as they pleased. The fleets of the capitalist Allies would be barred from attacking the red republic along its whole southern front. There would be no more attacks on Red Odessa, or other Russian ports on the Black Sea, no more than a Russian Red Fleet would sail down Lake Michigan and attack Chicago.

When the Turks smashed the Greek armies in Anatolia, British imperialism suffered a setback. And of course her statesmen now object to "the strongest naval power" having its wings clipped a little more at Lausanne. But the clipping will go on because increased masses of workers everywhere will rally to the support of the Russian program to bring peace and happiness to the peoples of the world.

The imperialist diplomats are learning a little bit more of the rather difficult and unpleasant lessons the Russian delegates tried to teach them at Genoa and The Hague.

Another Outpost Held

Labor holds fast to another outpost in the struggle against its capitalist enemies, as a result of the decision forced from the U. S. Supreme Court granting a writ of error in the case of Ben Gitlow, sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for alleged violation of New York State's (1902) criminal anarchy statute.

One of the first results of this victory will be Gitlow's release on bail from the Sing Sing Prison for the second time since he began serving his sentence.

Gitlow was first released with Ruthenberg, Ferguson, Winitzky and Larkin last spring. He immediately gave his best efforts toward building the Workers Party, then only a few months old, toward strengthening the Communist movement in this country. This work was cut short by his return to prison.

Gitlow serves the movement in prison or at liberty. But his great gifts as speaker, organizer and writer demand that he be active in our cause "on the outside." All comrades will hail with joy Gitlow's return to activity in our ranks.

The struggle will be waged with increased intensity to have the infamous criminal anarchy law declared unconstitutional, in its attempts to curtail freedom of discussion, by the highest court in the land, so that Gitlow will not be compelled to return to capitalism's bastille, so that the prison gates may be forced open for others still held because of their loyalty to labor, for crimes they have committed only against the exploiters and parasites.

Since the so-called criminal syndicalist laws of 35 states are based upon the New York "anarchy" statute, a victory in the Supreme Court in the Gitlow case means a smashing blow against this anti-labor legislation in every big industrial center in the country. We are holding a valuable outpost in the Gitlow case. We must continue to hold it and make new advances in the courts of our oppressors. Harding Seeing It Thru

The Harding administration has put thru the ship subsidy bill to stuff $1,000,000,000 into the pockets of the big shipping interests during the next ten years. Four democrats joined the republicans in this successful raid on the national treasury. This big business victory has been achieved after decades of scheming by the best brains to be found among our great financial and political freebooters.

Capitalism's kept press will not refer to this bit of burglary as threatening "communistic ruin." It will merely result, they will claim, in providing a "living profit" for the shipping trust.

It is only when an occasional altruist urges the expenditure of a few dollars for free breakfasts for starving school children that the nation's holy institutions suddenly become endangered.

Never has Congress ever considered subsidizing the hunger-line wages of millions of America's workers. The billion dollars to the shipping trust will not increase by one cent the wages of those who take ships down to the sea.

Federal aid and the paternalism of a capitalist government are only extended to the railroad and shipping profiteers. A precedent has been established, in the passage of the ship subsidy bill, for the subsidizing of other pet industries that manage to buy up a sufficient number of members of the senate and house of representatives.

We are assured that the senate, in the case of the ship subsidy, will uphold the vote of the house of representatives. We have no doubt about it. The money power owns the congress now in session and will make it dance to any tune it chooses to play. The same will be true, probably to a slightly lesser extent, but just as true of the next congress. This condition will not be changed materially until the workers speak thru an embattled Labor Party, ready to offer war on all fronts to capitalism and all its coterie of robbers and plunderers.

The delegates to the Conference for Progressive Political Action, to be held at Cleveland, Dec. 11, who oppose the organization of the Labor Party will be guilty of the greatest crime ever committed against the working class of this country.

Harding is seeing it thru for capitalism. Labor must begin a real drive to get thru with capitalism!

The Workers Party the Vanguard

It is [illegible] that the Workers Party is leading the lone fight for independent political action on the part of the workers and farmers. Neither the Socialist Party nor the Farmer-Labor Party [illegible] expression of the exploited masses, has made any appreciable effort to arouse interest in this problem.

The press of the Socialist Party has remained practically silent on this issue, from which we infer that the party is willing to accept any crumbs that may come its way from the Cleveland Conference table.

We appreciate, however, a belated editorial expression of The New Majority, official organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor, espousing the cause of independent political action, and denouncing the Conference for Progressive Political Action for sending its agents into Minnesota, before the recent election in an effort to persuade the workers and farmers of that state to operate thru the Democratic party, rather than thru their Farmer-Labor Party. It declares:

> "Everyone has known that the conference was indifferent to independent political action by labor and the farmers, but in this case it went out [illegible] to put the kibosh on independent political action, by trying to persuade the Minnesota farmers and city workers from leaving old-party tactics.
> "The election demonstrated that the people are ready to move politically, if only unfaltering leadership is offered. It is time to act and act like men. It is time to quit pussyfooting. It is the day for development of the workers' own party, independent political action, and to have done with truckling to the crooked Republican and Democratic parties is the only program that will interest the workers.
> "If the National Conference for Political Action is to be only a rival to the A. F. of L. nonpartisan political policy it will die out, as all dual organizations should. If the conference wants to accomplish something it will have to come out with a clear-cut program for independent political action for city and country workers thru a party of their own."

This declaration of the official organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor is an invitation to watch for traitors at the Cleveland Conference. He commits treason who raises his voice for further worker and farmer activity within either or both of the Wall Street parties, the capitalist Democratic and Republican parties. Keep your eyes on Cleveland!

A Lesson in Class Justice

They are trying to write finis on the murder mystery growing out of the killing of the Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor R. Mills, at New Brunswick, N. J.

This double murder tore aside the thin veil of bourgeois respectability that hides the under-cover lives of those who parade as paragons of virtue in church, in business, in politics, as "law and order" upholders of the present social system.

After months of investigation, during which the finger of suspicion pointed steadily in several directions, we find no arrests, no one in prison, with the single exception of the half-wit, Raymond Schneider, charged with perjury in that he is alleged to have falsely accused Clifford Hayes of the murder. No such charges have been brought against Mrs. Jane Gibson, "the pig woman," accuser of Mrs. Hall.

How different everything would have been, had this been a labor case, involving a struggle between a big corporation and its slaves. Then Mrs. Hall, the wife of the murdered rector who died with his pretty choir singer, would have been another Mrs. Rena Mooney, on trial for murder. Then Mrs. Hall's brothers, repeatedly charged with the crime, would have been just another Tom Mooney, another Warren K. Billings.

Clifford Hayes was not a labor agitator fighting for the rights of the workers. So they started a public tag day to secure funds for his defense the minute he was arrested, but the plans had hardly been completed before he was released. How different from the cases of Sacco and Vanzetti, in Massachusetts; of Ford and Suhr, in California, and many others elsewhere, victims of the frame-up that needs not the truth, but manufactures lies to convict.

Instead of spending months and years in prison and going to trial charged with murder as Rena Mooney was forced to do in California, Mrs. Hall is planning a trip to Europe. It pays for the individual, of course, to be respectable, to have money, to stand in with the community, to control its officials, its press. But that never advanced the interests of the masses of those who suffer. Trying to do that is a crime, the crime for which hundreds of forward-looking workers are paying the penalty today. The Hall-Mills murder mystery should furnish the workers an excellent lesson in class justice, the justice meted out to those who uphold the system, the justice invoked against those who struggle for something better.

A Family Quarrel Over Oil

We have often marvelled at the expert marksmanship of Samuel Untermeyer, millionaire lawyer, as a hunter for publicity. Not since the days of "Teddy" Roosevelt has anyone knocked down so many newspaper columns of space.

Untermeyer's present performance as attorney for the heirs of the late Sultan Abdul Hamid, of Turkey, in their fight for control of a billion dollars' worth of oil lands in Mesopotamia, is indeed entertaining.

We had been worrying about the 150 Circassian beauties of the late Sultan's harem, about the twenty princes and princesses of the royal blood, not to mention hundred eunuchs and other human decorations of the Sultandom that was. But we have ceased to worry. Untermeyer is on the job. This modern David has even taken up cudgels against the 20th Century Goliath, the Standard Oil Trust, for the honor of and in financial support of the harem ladies.

Incidentally we are let a little further on the inside of the relations between the Standard Oil Trust and the Harding administration at Washington, in promoting the interests of John D. Rockefeller in the Near East. The oil trust says it is "unpatriotic" to charge, as Untermeyer and Morgenthau have done, that the Harding-Hughes open door policy in the Near East means backing Standard Oil. It is claimed by "26 Broadway," New York City, Standard Oil headquarters, that the open door is maintained with the understanding that all the "citizens of the United States have equal opportunity to engage in commercial pursuits to develop the natural resources of the mandated territories."

Of course the Standard Oil Trust doesn't expect the 110,000,000 citizens of the United States to go into the oil business in Mesopotamia. But "John D." and his gang want the millions of this country to believe that "equal opportunity" exists. If the millions do believe that, they make much better wage slaves at home.

We can only hope that the workers and peasants of the Near East countries will tie the can to both the claims of Untermeyer's sultanic progeny, and to the Harding-Standard Oil [illegible]. We feel they are beginning to realize that these natural resources belong to them, that they will take them and exploit them for their own benefit.

Of course, if the Near East workers and peasants should take over Standard Oil properties, General "Black Jack" Pershing might be sent across the Atlantic again at the head of an army, even as he went into Mexico. Then it would be time for American workers to speak. That time may come sooner than most of us expect. Get ready!

No Labor Party Yet!

Workers Party Barred, Old Partyites Rule at Cleveland; Railroad Amalgamation Progress at Chicago

Launch New Drive for the Labor Party

The Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action has met and adjourned. The fight is now to acquaint the workers with the developments at the gathering in the Ohio metropolis.

This campaign will be started under the slogan of "Know Your Enemies" at a mass meeting to be held Saturday night, Dec. 16, 8 P. M., at the Park Palace, 6 West 111th St. near 5th Ave.

The delegates of the Workers Party will make their report on the Cleveland Conference at this mass meeting. Among these will be C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the party, William F. Dunne, whose story of the conference appears in this issue; and Ludwig Lore, editor of the Volkszeitung. J. Louis Engdahl will act as chairman.

The struggle for a Labor Party has just begun. The line has been drawn as between whose in favor and those opposed to it, among the officialdom of labor.

In the ranks of labor itself there is a unanimity in favor of the Labor Party. This was shown at the large number of mass meetings held under the auspices of the Workers Party in all sections of the country during the few days immediately preceding the Cleveland Conference.

An excellent spirit was shown at all these gatherings. The New York meeting was held Friday night at the Manhattan Lyceum with C. E. Ruthenberg, William F. Dunne, J. Louis Engdahl, C. S. Ware and N. T. Herbst as speakers.

The delegates spoke at a big mass meeting held in Cleveland Sunday afternoon. Reports of big gatherings also come from Chicago.

Engdahl addressed the enthusiastic Boston meeting Sunday afternoon at Paine Memorial Hall. Last Thursday night he spoke for the Auto Workers' Union on the Labor Party and unanimous resolutions were adopted in favor of independent political action and forwarded to Cleveland and to the International officials of the union.

Start the new drive Saturday night at the Park Palace. Come out to this mass meeting. Bring other workers with you.

Refuse Seats to Communists, Independent Political Action Defeated by Vote of 62 to 52

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE
(Special to THE WORKER.)

CLEVELAND.—Recommending that the delegates of the Workers Party be not seated on the ground that the principles of their organization were not in conformity with the declaration of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, the Credential Committee of the Conference, aided by William H. Johnston, chairman, succeeded in side-tracking this issue without its coming to a vote.

As soon as Edward Keating, reporting for the Credential Committee, had finished his last sentence, Johnston said: "Is there objection? There being none, the report is adopted."

Robert D. Cramer, of the Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly, was on his feet moving that the delegates be seated as the words left Johnston's lips.

It was promptly ruled out of order by the chairman who heaved a sigh of relief, in company with the rest of the right-wing elements who are here to prevent anything in the nature of independent working-class political action.

The delegates from local unions, over whom a controversy arose, were seated after all who were suspected of membership in the Workers Party had been carefully weeded out.

Pending the report of the Resolution Committee the reports of minor committees were heard. There was much discussion on the report of the Committee on Organization.

Debate arose over a recommendation of the committee empowering the

Lenin Recalls Days when United States and Japan Agreed to Support Koltchak

NOTE:—This week we publish the speech of Nikolai Lenin before the fourth session of the All-Russian Executive Committee, on the eve of the assembling of the Fourth Congress of the Communist International. The news of the Fourth C. I. Congress is now beginning to arrive and as much of this will be published each week as space permits. It will be found this week on Page Four. Lenin's speech is as follows:

By NIKOLAI LENIN

Comrades! Permit me to utter a few words of greeting. Above all, our first greetings must naturally be for the Red Army, which has again just shown its heroism, and has cleared, by the occupation of Vladivostok, the whole region of the Far Eastern Republic allied to the Soviet Republic.

I am confident of speaking in the names of all when I say that we greet this fresh deed of heroism on the part of the Red Army most joyfully, the more so because it has brought us a decided step nearer to the end of the war. It has thrown the last forces of the White Guards into the sea. (Applause).

I believe that the Red Army has freed us for a long time from any possible repetition of the White Guard attacks on Soviet Russia, or on the republics which are, directly or indirectly, allied to us.

At the same time I must not forget to mention, if I do not wish to be guilty of unseemly boasting, that here not only the heroism and power of

Local New York Plans Celebration for Delegates to Workers Party Convention

Plans are being rapidly completed for the Second Annual Convention of the Workers Party, Dec. 24-26, at the New York Labor Temple in East 84th St.

One of the big events of the gathering will be the reception, concert and banquet to be given the delegates at the close of the convention, Tuesday night, Dec. 26, at the Yorkville Casino.

What a year to look back upon for the revolutionary working class of this country! A year of concrete results, of marked achievements, of progress. The events of this year will long be remembered by all the militant workers of the United States. It will round out the first year of the existence of the Workers Party.

No history of the labor movement of this country can be written with-

Our Labor Program vs. "Progressive" Program

Next week THE WORKER will publish the program forced upon the Cleveland Conference by the reactionary labor elements doing the dirty work of the Gompers-LaFollette outfit, and with it the Labor Program offered to the Conference by the delegates of the Workers Party. The workers must be given an opportunity to compare these two documents. Order a bundle of this issue for general distribution. Address: The Worker, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Jury Selected, First Trial of Herrin Coal Miners Has Started

By McALLISTER COLEMAN
Federated Press Staff Correspondent

MARION, Ill.—The jury for the first of the Herrin trials has been finally selected after a month of examination of talesmen. One coal miner and 11 farmers will decide the fate of the five union miners charged with the murder of Howard Hoffman, a nonunion worker killed in the Herrin cemetery last June. The jurors are [illegible], Henry [illegible], Samuel Watkins, W. H. Davison, James Weaver, Hiram H. McMillan, George Craig, E. S. Webb, Charley McInturf, Nathan Pendland, Avery Grear and George Cox, who is the lone miner. The average age of the jury is 44 years.

Judge Dewitt T. Hartwell said that the case would be conducted in perfect order "if he had to have ten times as many bailiffs as he has now." He stated that he would permit no expressions from the spectators of sympathy for or antagonism to the defendants. He then adjourned court until Wednesday, Dec. 15, when both sides will make their opening statements and the taking of evidence will begin.

Jap Fascisti Launch New Drive Against Red Ideas

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER.
Federated Press Staff Correspondent

TOKIO.—The Association for the Prevention of the Red Doctrine has formally launched another anti-red campaign in Japan. Great quantities of handbills, inviting the general public to join in the drive, were distributed.

This campaign is deemed necessary because of the alleged spread of "dangerous thought" among the troops just withdrawn from Siberia. There have been numerous comments in the Japanese newspapers recently about the spread of bolshevism thruout the Siberian army of occupation.

The inspector-general of military education has a different view of the matter. "Some of the men are doubtless partly converted to bolshevist ideas," he says. "They were originally white radishes, but have been somewhat reddened on the surface by living in Russia for a time. Give them a bath at home and the original color will return immediately."

336 Rail Delegates in All Branches of Industry Advance in Spite of Reactionary Threats

By THOMAS J. O'FLAHERTY
(Special to THE WORKER)

CHICAGO.—The conference of the International Committee for the Amalgamation of the Sixteen Standard Railroad Organizations closed here with the election of a National Committee to carry on the work for amalgamation and the re-election of G. H. Kennedy, chairman; Roy H. Woods, vice-chairman, and O. H. Wangerin, secretary-treasurer.

The three officers are from St. Paul, Minn. There were 336 delegates from every branch of the railroad industry in the United States and Canada at the conference and 75 fraternal delegates.

Members of the Big Four Brotherhoods were there in spite of the hostility of their Grand Chiefs.

The machinists' shopmen and maintenance-of-way men were there strong. Most of the delegates were veterans in the trade union movement.

The speeches were good and sounded the note of the class struggle. It was a conference of the most militant fighters in the American trade union movement, men who came direct from their jobs.

G. H. Kennedy opened the proceedings Saturday, Dec. 9. In a short talk he explained the purpose of the conference to join all the Railroad Brotherhoods into one departmentalized industrial organization. He warned against dual unionism and secession, and declared this was the most progressive body of railroad workers that ever met in the United States.

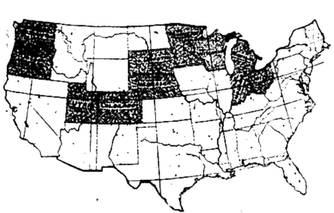
The Growing Whirlwind

Eleven state federations of labor have declared for amalgamation of all craft unions according to industries.

These states spread from the Pacific Coast in the West, to Ohio in the East, a distance of 2,500 miles. They include a population of 23,000,000, or more than 21 per cent of the nation's total. They spread over an area of 758,000 square miles, or more than 25 per cent of all the country. This triumphal uprising of the spirit of solidarity among the workers is shown on the map below, the amalgamation states being shaded:



This was achieved during the amalgamation drive of the Trade Union Educational League, from June to October, this year. The urge for industrial unionism as against craft unionsm, is manifesting itself, not only thru the state federations, but wherever labor gathers to discuss the struggle against its exploiters.

It will continue to grow because labor must develop and strengthen its fighting machine, to wage successful combat against the giant forces of oppression opposed to it.

"Amalgamation or annihilation!" is the slogan of the Trade Union Educational League. Labor is declaring for amalgamation. It will thus save itself from annihilation.

Five Still in St. Joseph, Mich., Jail

Elmer McMillen, of St. Louis, and John Mihelic, of Kansas City, two of the defendants in the Michigan Criminal Syndicalism case have been released on bail from the Berrien County Jail. Five of the twenty defendants are still held in the jail at St. Joseph, Michigan, under bail of $10,000.00 each. They are: Norman Tallentire, San Francisco; Joseph Zack, New York; Seth Nordling, Portland, Ore.; and Eugene Bechtold and Charles Erickson of Chicago. These men have now been in jail for more than ten weeks, the excessive bail demanded by the court having made it extremely difficult to secure the necessary bonds.

In spite of the fact that $82,500.00 has been deposited in cash and Liberty Bonds and $65,000 has been scheduled in Michigan property to secure the release of the fifteen defendants now released on bail, the court has denied all efforts made toward securing a reduction in the [illegible] demands so that the five now held might be released.

Evidence of the extremely bad conditions under which the five remaining defendants still confined, are held, is given by Elmer McMillen.

McMillen was arrested on August 22nd, was in perfect physical condition. Suffering from the conditions in the Berrien County Jail, due to inadequate quarters, to filth and bad ventilation, McMillen contracted a pernicious skin disease which has covered practically his entire body with scab like looking patches. Since his release he has been examined by skin specialists and his disease pronounced as psoriasis which is incurable.

McMillen reports that Tallentire is now showing indications of contracting the same disease and states that if he is not released shortly to enable him to secure medical treatment, he will very possibly become incurable also.

The Labor Defense Council is exerting every possible effort to secure the funds necessary for the release of the remaining defendants, cash, Liberty Bonds or other negotiable securities are solicited by the Labor Defense Council as loans to be repaid in full as soon as the case is disposed of. All those who can help in this matter are urged to communicate with the National Office of the Labor Defense Council at 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, or New York Office, Room 434, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

Workers Party Delegates Show Politicians Dictated Against Labor's Interests at Cleveland Conference

Statement of Workers Party

Cleveland, O., Dec. 12, 1922.

The Action of the Conference in barring the Workers Party and the Young Workers League was dictated by the group in this Convention [illegible] to use the new movement on the part of labor and the [illegible] to advance their own political [illegible] at the sacrifice of [illegible] of labor. [illegible] known to these leaders that the Workers Party and the Young Workers League would strengthen that faction in the Conference which demands the organization of the Labor Party which would make a clear cut fight in the interest of the industrial workers and farmers.

The policy of rewarding the friends of labor and punishing its enemies—that is, working thru the old party primaries—means easier advancement to public office for the leaders of the conference than thru a labor party; and these leaders want office not a party to fight for the workers and farmers.

The move of railroading this decision thru the Convention without giving an opportunity to the delegates to express their view as was done by President Johnston shows how desperate these leaders are to keep the Workers Party and the Young Workers League, which stand for the Labor Party, out of the Conference.

The charge against the Workers Party of antagonism to the Constitution and the flag comes with ill grace from a group which itself has declared for numerous amendments to the Constitution, and even for a Constitutional Convention to revise that document completely and whose avowed idol, Senator La Follette, has been attacked as un-American and opposed to that Constitution.

The action of the Socialist leaders who aided and abetted the exclusion of the Workers Party on such grounds after years of similar attack on the Socialist Party shows how low that organization has fallen and how it is willing to prostitute itself in order to gain favor.

The Workers Party stands for the up-building of a mass political organization of the workers and the working farmers in the form of a Labor Party. The organization of a Labor Party has the endorsement of a large proportion of the rank and file of the trade unionists and farm organizations whose representatives sit in this Convention. All the preparations seem to have been made to betray the desires of the members of these unions and farm organizations. Such betrayal however will not be for long. These members will have their way. Daugherty injunctions, Railroad Labor Boards, wage [illegible] in strikes and exploitation of the farmers are driving them to organize for independent political action. In spite of the Johnstons, Keatings and other misleaders, they will yet organize the Labor Party and in that Party, the Workers Party will find its place.

SIGNED: William F. Dunne, Caleb Harrison, Ludwig Lore and C. E. Ruthenberg, for the Workers Party; Harry Gannes, for the Young Workers League.

[illegible] State Federations and [illegible] bodies protested that the [illegible] levied upon them were [illegible] inasmuch as the expense [illegible]ponsibility for carrying on the [illegible] was largely shared by [illegible] in their respective localities.

[illegible] attitude of the Right Wing on [illegible] matter of working from within [illegible] old-line parties was challenged [illegible] this point by Edward Nockels, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor, representing the Farmer-Labor Party of Illinois.

He told the organization committee and the conference that the Chicago Federation of Labor would assess its membership for the support of a Labor Party, but that it would contribute not one cent to the support of an organization which fooled with the internal politics of the Democrat and Republican Parties.

The Nomination Committee recommended and received at the end of the conference, the endorsement of the following as members of the National Committee:

Warren S. Stone, of the Locomo- [illegible] J. G. Brown, of the Farmer-Labor Party, George H. Griffith of the Non-Partisan League, "All-Ja" Daily, South Dakota; H. F. Samuels, Idaho, John F. Beer, of the Nonpartisan League; Dorman, of the Nonpartisan League, Benjamin Schlesinger, of International Ladies Garment Workers; James H. Maurer, President of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, D. B. Robertson, of the Locomotive Firemen; Frederick C. Howe, Alice Lorraine Daly, Basil Manly, J. B. Laughlin, and Benjamin C. Marsh.

While waiting for the Resolution Committee to report the convention was addressed by a delegate from Oklahoma, B. B. Laughlin, president of the Oklahoma Farm Labor Union, who was introduced as "A Dirt Farmer."

He announced that being "A Dirt Farmer" he felt rather out of place in such a gathering and I could not blame him. There were very few farmers or wage earners at this conference.

But there is a great plenty of politicians, high salaried labor leaders and any number of persons who have an ax to grind, and who see in this [illegible] ly increasing and that all the farms were mortgaged at a rate of interest that absorbed every cent of surplus income.

One was forced to wonder why he hoped for relief from a conference that demonstrates beyond doubt, its real intention to strangle any militant political movement of the farmers and workers.

Burton K. Wheeler, Senator-elect from Montana, also addressed the Conference. He told of the activity of the spies of the corporations and detectives, of the Burns and other agencies in the labor movement of Montana, and warned the delegates present that most of the danger of disruption was from the activities of these individuals inside their organizations.

It is quite evident from his remarks that he is not going to get along well with the Burns-Daugherty Department of Justice in Washington, D. C.

Another indication of the sentiment for a Labor Party among the rank and file of the delegates came when Chairman Johnston, indulging [illegible] in this conference the fact that a party of workers and farmers had elected a United States [illegible] against the combined [illegible] of the reactionary forces of Minnesota.

The resolutions committee, having at last been dug out of its hiding place, Keating as chairman, prefacing the report with an elaborate explanation of how and why it was what it was proceeded to read a program, into which had been combined the thirteen resolutions submitted, that left the delegates who are here for something real gasping for breath.

The program as Keating stated was designed to meet with the approval of the least progressive of the doubtful progressives from the ranks of the Republican and Democratic parties whom this conference claims credit for electing.

The planks consist of demands for things so overgrown with respectability that not the slightest ground for the accusation of radicalism upon the part of the conference can be found.

This, to the right-wing elements [illegible] proposed [illegible] the cost of farm commodities and raise the price for the farmer.

Congress is also asked to end the [illegible] of the Supreme Court. The inheritance taxes are to be raised, the maternity law is to be passed and a bonus is to be paid the world war veterans out of the sums raised by a tax on excess profits.

This last provision caused much discussion in the program and resolution committee because it was said to show a "Socialistic tendency" and it was with fear and trembling that the committee made this recommendation from the platform.

It was at this point that Robert M. Buck, of Chicago, editor of the New Majority, official organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor, disturbed the harmony of the conference by making a minority report in the form of a motion that the committee be instructed to read the thirteen resolutions they had voted to withhold from the conference and announce their action on them. The [illegible]

In the debate that ensued Norman Thomas, of The Nation, mentioned the astounding fact that nothing had been said in the program about child labor, the burning question of coal, the restoration of our stolen civil liberties or amnesty for political prisoners.

Morris Hillquit, taking up the role of harmonizer that he had played thruout the conference, came forward with the proposal that these matters and the program be referred to the incoming National Executive with instructions to incorporate them in that document.

In a speech, by far the most definite yet made by him here, he plainly showed his disgust with the elements he is associated with in this conference.

He asked the pointed question as to what kind of a conference, supposedly political, could convene, adopt a program and adjourn without dealing with fundamental questions such as these.

The committee had no reply to [illegible] But the Farmer-Labor[illegible] and their sympathizers [illegible] long in bringing the issue. The program was adopted [illegible] of the conference [illegible] in the evening and the "Labor [illegible] was voted down, 64 to 52.

The program committee [illegible] it had a two to one [illegible] against independent politi[illegible] and so far as any real result[illegible] labor movement of this co[illegible] concerned the conference [illegible] to do what many expected [illegible]

Ruthenberg Raises Demand for Seating the Four Delegates of the Workers Party

(The First Day's Proceedings)

Speaking with a dramatic intensity that brought a new note into the routine discussions of the conference, red-haired Robly D. Cramer, editor of the Minneapolis Labor Review, representing the Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly here threw a bomb shell into the ranks of officialdom that is trying to strangle a Labor Party movement, when he rose and defended the Workers Party in answer to a wild and irresponsible attack made upon it by Edwin Keating of the National Committee for the Conference for Progressive Political Action.

The credential committee had finished its report without mentioning the Workers Party. C. H. Ruthenberg rose from the floor and asked why no disposition had been made of credentials of the Workers Party delegates.

J. G. Brown, president of the Farmer Labor Party of Illinois and secretary of the credential committee, replied that no credentials had been received from the Workers Party. While Ruthenberg was informing him that credentials had been filed with the committee for four delegates, Keating, with a wild look in his eyes, dashed to the front of the platform and announced, seemingly on his own volition, that "The matter might as well be settled here. He said: "Let us decide it now. If this party has the brazen effrontery to present credentials to this convention this committee should not receive the credentials because this convention does not want representatives of the so called Workers Party."

"Dennis Batt, representing the Detroit Federation of Labor then rose and raising a point of information, inquired on what grounds Keating based his statement concerning the wishes of the convention. Keating, apparently believing that the conference and the well filled gallery would burst into wild applause at his utterances, replied that the Workers Party was an un-American organization. This patriotic utterance brought forth boohs, catcalls and hisses in place of the expected applause. With somewhat lessened confidence Keating went on and charged that the activities of the Workers Party were disruptive; that they worked in the interest of the employers and that it had no place in a gathering that he graced with his presence. These remarks were made in a dead silence. The assemblage being more or less amazed at the display of ignorance on the part of one of the high salaried employees of the Progressive Political movement.

Workers Party Defended

It was then that Cramer arose and said:

"In view of the attack that has been made on the Workers Party, it will only be justice to tell this convention that in the city of Minneapolis the Workers Party has not been a disruptive force. It has worked in concert with the political ambitions of labor in the last campaign and its work in the labor movement has been that of education for harmony and not for disruption.

"If this is to be a conference for progressive political action representing the trade unionist of Minneapolis, I certainly hope that it will not take the same attitude in regard to the Workers Party that the department of justice and William J. Burns are taking.

"There is only one question to be decided here. That is: is this a Workers Party, made up of workers—working men and working women—working people. I don't think there can be any question about that. The very fact of the persecution that this organization has suffered at the hands of the very department that has tied up the finances of the railway organizations marks it a working class organization. The very persecution by the department of justice and William J. Burns should be sufficient credential for them to sit here. That should not be overlooked."

He was frequently interrupted by applause from all quarters of the house showing conclusively that the delegates thoroly disapproved of the language of the department of justice, and other red-baiters, used by Keating. The matter of seating the Workers Party delegates was referred back to the credentials committee.

After adjournment, the Workers Party and the delegates of the Young Workers League appeared before the credentials committee and discovered that the missing credentials had mysteriously appeared. Short statements on the position of the Workers Party were made to the credentials committee by the delegation and the matter will come before the conference tomorrow.

Oppose Local Union Delegates

Another controversy arose in the afternoon session over the seating of delegates from Local unions. The majority report of the credential committee recommended that delegates from local unions be not seated. The minority report was submitted by delegates Brown and Brocks and was adopted by the convention on motion of Max Hayes, representing the Typographical Union. This matter was also referred back to the credentials committee and as the majority report was defeated by a two to one vote, it is probable that these delegates will be seated.

The convention was opened by William H. Johnston, international president of the Machinists Union. He read a speech which showed a labored attempt to avoid a mention of anything that would offend the respectable elements to which the right wing of the conference makes its appeal. It was filled with such phrases as "predatory interests," "privileged groups," "corporate rule," "welfare of the people," "public interest," and had as its high note a demand for "exact and equal justice for all," whatever that means. It was a frank appeal for the support of middle class and lower middle class elements. There was absolutely no indication in the entire speech of any understanding of the tremendous changes that are taking place in the industrial and political life of the nation.

Forget Class Struggle

As a proof that no sign of the class struggle is to be allowed to creep into the campaigns of the right wing of this conference, it lacks nothing. Johnston aroused no enthusiasm except when he claimed credit for the conference for the defeat of all reactionaries and the success of all liberals and progressives in the recent election.

It is openly announced by the right wing group that all attempts to establish a Labor Party at this time will be strangled. They are definitely committed to the "reward and punish" policy despite their seeming differences with the Gompers machine.

More than that, the attitude of the Socialist party delegation here seems to indicate that most of these differences have been adjusted and that no real fight for a Labor Party will be made by them. On the other hand the delegates representing the Farmer-Labor Party declare that this issue will be fought out here and that they are going to use all their influence to swing the conference for independent political action based on a party organized in the unions and organizations of the farmers.

Paper Organizations Recognized

There are many organizations seated here that exist only on paper, such as Single Tax Leagues, Jewish Poale Zion, the League for Industrial Democracy and various legislative committees and other bodies which merely furnish votes against the clear cut working class political action.

The fact that representatives of these paper organizations are seated, while the Workers Party with a dues-paying membership of 20,000 is denied admission, shows that the right wing element with whom the Socialist Party delegates are aligned are not interested in strengthening the political movement of the workers. One hundred and forty-three delegates have been seated. More are expected tomorrow and the bulk of the representation, the roster shows is from railway organizations.

Cleveland "S. P." Mass Meeting Turns Out to Be Big Fizzle

On the eve of the Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action, the Socialist Party, which is playing the Johnston-Gompers game, tried to impress the delegates from the labor unions with their wide influence among the masses, so they held a "mass meeting" with all the shining lights of the Party present. The principal speakers were Hillquit, Berger, Maurer and others.

The masses responded to the number of about 250, and half a hundred of those were Workers Party members that came out to witness the fizzle.

Evidently the deplorable showing of this discredited and decrepit party had no effect upon those in charge of the Conference, for seven representatives of the Socialist Party were seated, while International Unions representing tens and hundreds of thousands were only entitled to three delegates.

No wonder the "S. P." is trying to become the tail end of any sort of organization as an excuse to hide from the contempt of the working class of the nation.

Threats Are Ignored by Rail Rebels

After the reports of the rules committee, the conference moved with precision. The steam roller methods were not in evidence.

The chairman, Kennedy, was decidedly successful in keeping everybody in good humor and allowed plenty of leeway for discussion.

He remarked that the boys had a good deal on their chests that they wanted to get off. The secretary, O. H. Wangerin reported on the work accomplished and made recommendations all of which were adopted.

All locals represented were called on to contribute $2 per month to the national committee, large locals to give as much more as possible.

George Lawson, fraternal delegate from the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, addressed the conference during the afternoon session of the first day.

He urged the necessity of the delegates informing themselves thoroly about the amalgamation proposition so that they could stand up against opposition.

Denounce Reactionary Officials

Resolutions were adopted denouncing the Grand Lodge officers for issuing false statements about the amalgamation movement.

Stone, of the Engineers, and Johnston, of the Machinists, warned the members against the conference, telling them that their policy was one of disruption. Both officials were invited to come to the conference and learn the truth. They did not come but Stone sent a letter declining invitation saying he thoroly understood why they wished legitimate unions to be represented at the conference and wished it clearly understood he would have nothing to do with it. Mr. Johnston did not even reply to the communication.

No Dual Unionism

A resolution was passed denouncing dual unionism which leaves reactionaries in the saddle and give the workers nothing but glittering phrases. Members were urged to stay in their unions.

Resolutions were passed condemning the unfairness of the Brotherhood official organ for not allowing its use to the members for discussion of their problems.

The Amalgamation Advocate was endorsed as the official organ of the National Committee. Local Unions were urged to affiliate with Central Bodies and State Federations.

Another resolution "Lets fight—not talk" embodied a plan to tour speakers and arrange mass meetings.

The Minnesota plan for amalgamation was endorsed. It provides for departmentalized industrial unions.

A resolution was passed urging the International Unions to bring about a united industrial front, one union for each industry.

Dennis Batt, editor of the Detroit Labor News spoke.

He urged more constructive activity and less railing at officials. The crafts system had outlived its usefulness he declared. The time was ripe for industrial unionism thru amalgamation.

W. R. Donovan, of the Pullman porters, spoke on the Negro question, warning the delegates that unless they took the Negro workers into consideration they would find them used against them in strikes. He was elected to the national committee.

W. Bailey, of Buffalo, a veteran in the trade union movement and a delegate also addressed the conference from the platform.

Foster Addresses Conference

William Z. Foster, a delegate from the railway carmen, spoke on the dangers and pitfals confronting the movement in his usual convincing manner.

He told how the steel workers were let down by the International Union officials and defeated the splendid organizing campaign among the slaves in this industry. His speech was loudly applauded.

A telegram was received from the Mexican railway workers sending greetings. The conference adjourned leaving the calling of the next conference to the decision of the committee.

The conference is a vindication of the policy of the Trade Union Educational League. It is a challenge to the employing class and to the reactionary officials of the trade unions. And it is by all means the greatest piece of work that has ever been done for the revolutionizing of the American labor movement.

Under "Revolver Democracy"

America's kept press is registering another triumph for "democracy and civilization" this week in reporting the Fascisti victory in the municipal elections at Milan, Italy.

"Milan Overthrows Regime of Radicals," proclaims the American Fascisti organ, the New York Times.

To be sure, on the side of the military dictatorship of Mussolini stood the entire power of the armed state, in addition to the militarized Fascisti, parading the streets and threatening and even murdering the workers with revolvers, bombs and clubs.

Against this rule of "blood and iron" the workers pitted their courage to stand by their class. Their headquarters ruined by the Fascisti pillagers, their organizations prevented from meeting by the black terror, their newspapers crippled, the Communist movement declared illegal and its press outlawed, the workers displayed a wonderful power of resistance.

When the Communists were victorious at the last municipal elections, in 1921, the workers cast 73,000 votes. Even The Times admits that in the elections this week the workers of Milan cast a total of 65,000 votes against the 85,500 ballots received by the Mussolini "Constitutional bloc," which includes 10,000 Catholic votes not cast in 1921, since the Catholic Party abstained from voting last year.

If the Italian workers can thus hold their own in the first struggles with the Fascisti "revolver democracy," then we can easily and safely predict the early doom of Mussolini rule.

Salutsky—a Communist?

By C. E. RUTHENBERG

J. B. Salutsky sat on the Conference for Progressive Political Action as a delegate from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

J. B. Salutsky is a member of the Workers Party and a member of the Central Executive Committee of that party.

On Monday afternoon, after C. E. Ruthenberg had demanded a report from the credentials committee on the credentials of the Workers Party Edward Keating, editor of "Labor" made a vicious attack on the Workers Party, charging that it was being financed by the employers.

Salutsky remained silent.

R. D. Cramer, of the Minneapolis Trade and Labor Assembly, not a member of the Workers Party, rose to his feet to defend the Workers Party, telling of its part in the Minneapolis labor movement.

Salutsky remained silent.

On Tuesday morning Ludwig Lore and C. E. Ruthenberg went to Salutsky and in the name of the C[illegible] Executive Committee of the W[illegible] Party demanded that he [illegible] favor of the Workers Party [illegible] floor of the convention.

On Tuesday morning the cre[illegible] committee of the Conference [illegible]ed against seating of the W[illegible] Party delegates because "the [illegible]ciples of this organization are [illegible] harmony with those of this co[illegible]ence."

The chairman asked whether [illegible] was any objection to the accep[illegible] of the report.

Salutsky remained silent.

R. D. Cramer, of Minneapolis, [illegible] and moved that the report be [illegible] concurred in.

All that was necessary to [illegible]itate a contest on the issue of [illegible]tance of the Workers Party [illegible] quite possibly would have res[illegible] a favorable vote was a strong [illegible]ing to Cramer's motion—a second [illegible] the motion.

Salutsky remained silent.

[illegible] we have attained a point [illegible] such agreements have become [illegible]possibility, and where Japan's [illegible] power has not prevented her [illegible] actually fulfilling this engagement, [illegible] it is thanks to our diplomacy. [illegible] the near future our diplomacy [illegible] again be confronted by a task [illegible] enormous importance, a task in[illegible] important interests for us. [illegible] thinking of the conference on [illegible] Near East convened by England [illegible] Lausanne Nov. 13.

I am fully convinced that our diplomacy will be able to maintain its authority equally well on this occasion, and will efficiently defend the interests of all allied republics and of the R. S. F. S. R.

In any case we shall make it our endeavor to reveal to the masses what are the real obstacles, and in what degree these run counter not only to the justifiable desires and endeavours of our state, but of all states interested in the question of the Straits.

With regard to foreign politics I limit myself to these brief remarks, and pass on to the discussion of your activity.

I believe that we have attained most important successes, altho at a [illegible] laws, which you have already accepted: the Labor Code.

It is a tremendous victory for the Soviet power that precisely now, when all governments are arming against the working class, that we can present ourselves with such a code of laws, establishing the fundamentals of labor legislation, as for instance, the eight hour day.

We must reckon with the fact of the states in which a mad capitalist competition is raging, where there are millions and tens of millions of unemployed, where the capitalists are organizing mighty capitalist federations and preparing to attack the working class, our land is the most backward of all, our productive powers are the least developed, and we have the least idea how to work.

This is perhaps an unpleasant truth, but it has to be admitted. But I believe that precisely because we do not seek to veil such facts with fine phrases and official explanations, but admit them candidly, we need not fear to mount the tribune and declare that we have expended more energy than any other state on the removal of these deficiencies, and that we are doing our utmost to overtake the other states with a speed which they do not in the least imagine.

But naturally the speed is not fantastic, we require some years of stubborn work to attain this aim. Nothing can be done in a day. We have had five years of experience, [illegible] the future also.

Nobody amongst us believes in a fantastic speed of change, but we can believe in a possible speed, a speed surpassing the tempo of any other historical period of evolution; and when the movement is led by a really revolutionary party, such a speed is an unqualified possibility.

I now come to the problem of the ground law. As you are aware, our first laws immediately after the revolution contained regulations respecting land which, tho not quite technically perfect, nor perhaps juridically so, none the less contained all essentials, all that was of unqualified necessity for the peasant, and ensured his alliance with the working class.

And even if the law which you have now accepted proves to require improvement in this or that regard, we shall be able to carry out these corrections without any special difficulty, just as you have accepted improvements in the code of criminal law at this session.

The land, the living question for the majority, of the population, the peasantry, is for us a fundamental question. In this respect we are far advanced that the Russian peasant knows that not only do we set no brake on proposals towards the alteration of old laws, but we accept these most favorably.

You have also dealt with such questions as the civil code of laws and the general regulations for litigation. In the policy which you [illegible] interests of the broad [illegible] of the population, are the most important.

Here it has also been our endeavor to draw a line of limitation between the justifiable satisfaction of the needs of every citizen living under the new economic policy, and the abuses of the new economic policy, which are law in all other countries, but whose legalization we decline.

It remains for the future to show in how far the corrections which you have just made with this intention, and which you approve, will succeed in their object.

In any case, we do not bind our hands in any way. Should daily experience show that there are abuses upon which we had not calculated, we shall take immediate steps for their removal.

In this respect, as you are aware, such rapidity of legislation is unfortunately unknown in other states. We shall see if the near future will not force these powers to try and keep up with Russia in this respect.

We must also accord some attention to the equally important question of the provincial Soviet congresses and government executive committees. All former systems, legislatures, and constitutions left this question unanswered. It was thought that in the provinces everything would take its old course. We, on the other hand, are convinced that if our revolution has been able to attain many successes, this is solely because we had the power in the provinces in our hands, and because [illegible]

When the [illegible] 1917 was [illegible] success that in the [illegible] 1918 we believed the war [illegible], though in reality it was just beginning in its worst form, that of civil war (in reality the peace concluded at that time with Germany that did not collapse until the autumn, in every way gratified those elements among the Allies who resented our peace with Germany)—when as I say, the revolution was able to carry out its work with such rapidity, this was due to the fact that we have always counted upon the peasant population, and have opened new vistas of activity to them; we always expected from the provinces that enthusiasm, which imparted perseverance and speed to our revolution.

I am aware that at that time the provinces went thru troublous times. We were much occupied by the relations of the provinces to the centre, and I will not assert that we were always able to carry out our task in the most ideal manner. The general level of our culture could not permit us to even dream of an ideal solution. But we have the right to assert that we have carried out our task with greater uprightness, truth, and perseverance, than any other state.

I must soon conclude. I shall only touch upon one more question, one of the greatest interest to me, and which should be of interest to you also, tho it is not contained either in the agenda or in the inquiries. This is the question of our [illegible] — as you see yet a comparatively new question.

In 1918 we had a census taken of the state apparatus in Moscow. The result showed that there were 231,000 state and Soviet employees in Moscow (including the central state employees and the Moscow municipal employees). Recently, in October, 1922, we undertook a [illegible], convinced that our distended apparatus had shrunk. The resultant figure was 243,000. This is the result of all our reductions.

This example shows the need of further studies and comparisons. At that time, in the year 1918, as we undertook the census in the first heat of reform, we were not yet in a position to reduce the figures to anything sensible. The civil war left us no leisure whatever for this. We hope that it will now be done.

We are fully convinced that our state apparatus, which suffers from many defects, which is considerably more than twice as large as it need be, which often works against and not for us—we need not be afraid to utter this truth from the tribune of the highest legislative body of our republic—will be improved. Its improvement will require much work and capability.

A start has already been made in the serious consideration of the nature of these improvements, but at present it is only a start, a few articles, some local investigations.

If we all go away from here with fixed resolve to devote much more attention to these questions than we have done, if we are firmly resolved to speed [illegible] battle, if we really get to [illegible] apparatus and work for [illegible] improvement, it will be a [illegible] step forward, and afford [illegible] for our success.

We must have the courage to admit that our apparatus is [illegible] The best workers under[illegible] most difficult tasks alike in [illegible] and bourgeois admi[illegible] spheres, and as a rule they [illegible] their work wrongly.

But all the same they have [illegible]stood how to correct themselves [illegible] how to work. The present rela[illegible] between these—perhaps only a [illegible] brave individuals—and the hun[illegible] who only sit and sabotage or [illegible] sabotage, and lose themselves [illegible] their red tape, these relations [illegible] suffocating our living cause in a [illegible]byrinth of red tape.

We must get thoroly to the bo[illegible]tom of this matter, as we have [illegible] yet succeeded in doing. C.I. Executive Report Given by Zinoviev

By Radio to Imprekorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to "The Worker"

Moscow, Nov. 10.—Morning Session. The session is opened by Kolarov. A number of commissions are appointed, for the French, Italian, Czecho-Slovakian, American, Jugoslavian, Spanish and Negro questions.

Zinoviev then begins his speech, in which he reports on the work of the Executive during the past year, and draws broad outlines for the future tactics of the Comintern.

The Third Congress was followed by a sharp offensive on the part of capitalism along the whole line. The workers suffered many defeats. Russia too had to undergo a terrible time of famine, a fact utilized by the Mensheviki slandering the Soviet Government.

The Comintern has been accused of being a tool in the hands of Soviet Russia. The Second International is however the tool employed by the bourgeoisie against Soviet Russia. Clynes of the English Labor Party and of the General Labor Union, is with Urqhart, and fights on the other side of the barricade.

The working class has taken up a defensive attitude. Therefore our tactics are: go to the masses. Hence the slogan of the united front.

Difficulties in France

Our first great international campaign for the united front did not pass off without great disturbances on the part of the various sections. The greater the masses that leave other parties to join ours, the more difficult is the process of clarification.

Our tactics encountered difficulties in France, in part also in Italy. There is still a lack of proletarian discipline. If this is the case in the preparatory actions, how will it be when days of real fighting come?

Last year the German party lived thru a severe crisis, but has come thru it well, thanks to the aid of the Comintern. Today the German party is one of the firmest and politically clearest sections.

The German and Czecho-Slovakian parties have carried out the tactics of the united front best. They have perhaps not always shown the face of the Party openly enough, but they have maintained the freedom of communist agitation and criticism.

The courses taken by the last railway strike and the shop steward movement in Germany are exemplary for the united front tactics. The German party emerges from this movement with renewed strength.

Altho the number of members has not increased to any great extent, it nevertheless possesses more members today than the Bolsheviki when they seized power. Rapid revolutionary development is the case in Germany. Hence the importance of having a good party there in that country.

French Labor on Defensive

In France the Communist Party is passing thru severe birth pangs. The French proletariat is at present on the defensive. The French party does not yet understand how to lead the workers unitedly to battle. In France the struggle must be better prepared. The French party is still of the opinion that economic struggles are no part of party work.

The 21 points are now being con[illegible] anew. Despite this, the French press is still very far from carrying out even the first of these 21 conditions.

There are three tendencies in the French party: right, left, and centre. There are still reformist elements remaining in the centre. These must disappear. The left has made many mistakes, but it is the only fraction which has really fought for the tactics of the Comintern. Our sympathy is with this fraction.

There are good working elements in the centre and in the Renoult group. We are willing to meet these half way. The negotiations with all the tendencies justify the confident hope that the French party will retain its unity. We must however criticize its faults with all severity.

Italian S. P. Aided Fascisti

The events in the Italian labor movement, constitute an educational example for the whole International. The conflict between the Italian Socialist Party and the Comintern did not arise out of the question of immediate seizure of power; all that was required of the Italian Socialists was to exclude the agents of the bourgeoisie from their ranks, and thus to set their hands free for carrying out revolutionary actions.

The guilt of having cleared the path for Fascism lies at the door of the Italian Socialist Party. Our tactics at Leghorn have proved correct. The workers belonging to the Italian Socialist Party will have to learn that when reformism is granted an inch, it takes a mile.

Save Honor of Italian Labor

The Comintern has also had differences with the Communist Party of Italy. The Italian communists have saved the honor of the proletariat. Remains of anti-parliamentarism still exist in the party. The united front tactics have not been quite thoroly carried out. The slogan of a workers' government came too late. Candid criticism has to be exercised here, too. The Communist Party of Italy is one of the best fighting troops of the International.

The United Communist Party in Czecho-Slovakia came into existence after the Third Congress, various fractions combining.

The party has committed great sins of omission in trade union questions, and that at a time when it already had the support of the majority of organized labor. The united front tactics have been carried out in an exemplary manner. Successful result: the disintegration of the National Socialist fraction.

The Czech party had differences with the Executive regarding the expulsion of the so-called left. The attitude of the Executive does not signify that it considers the left to be in the right or that it intends to support the left politically.

The Executive is, however, of the opinion that expulsion is too severe a punishment for the breach of discipline committed by these comrades. We condemn the breach of discipline committed by these comrades. We condemn the breach of discipline which is not to be compared with that of Levi. For the Czech opposition does not consist of traitors. It must however maintain discipline.

Expulsion from the party is only permitted as a last resort. In our opinion it was resorted to too soon in this case. If the opposition cannot maintain discipline, there is of course no room for it in our ranks.

The Party in Norway

In Norway the Trade Unions form the basis of the party. No individual membership exists here.

The name of the central organ is still the Social Democrat. Articles against us may be found in this paper. Vestiges of syndicalism are still to be found among many communist workmen. Time must be left for evolution, that the social democratic residues be finally swept away.

In Poland the party is illegal, but at the same time a mass party. Here there have also been differences between the party and the Executive, on the subject of the agrarian and nationality question. The Comintern is in favor of the neutralization of the peasantry. The Polish party is not yet sufficiently elastic.

In Roumania the party holds faithfully to the International, despite much persecution. In Jugoslavia the party is also exposed to great difficulties thru persecution. The labor movement however shows signs of revival.

In England development is slow. England is not a country of great political organizations. The lack of revolutionary experience in England is a cause of great difficulty to our party there.

In Austria the party is making progress.

In Hungary the party movement is suffering greatly thru fraction quarrels. The Fourth Congress must put an end to these. This is of special importance, as the labor movement is increasing its influence in Hungary.

In Japan a communist party has been formed.

In India we have success to record.

For Centralized World Power

We have also groups in Egypt, Persia, China. This is of the greatest importance for our fight against world imperialism.

The Profintern also reports good results, and these will be even better in the near future. The Amsterdam fraction contemplates a split. We must use our influence towards creating unity in the trade union movement. We must however take measures against the expulsions. When the Amsterdam fraction causes split, we must issue the slogan of unity.

The Cooperative movement, also shows favorable progress.

The Communist Youth movement requires new methods if it is to make greater advance.

This is the report of our activity. We have made many mistakes, and await severe criticism. But then united action! We must become a centralized world organization!

Lenin Sends Hearty Greeting to Communist International in Session at Petrograd

COMRADE LENIN'S LETTER TO THE CONGRESS

1. To Comrade Zinoviev, Petrograd, for the IV. World Congress of the Communist International.
2. To the Petrograd Soviets, the delegates of the Workers, Peasants and Red Soldiers.

I exceedingly regret that I cannot be present at the first session of the Congress and that I can only greet you by letter. In spite of the enormous difficulties in the way of the various Communist Parties, the Communist International is growing and is becoming ever stronger. The chief task consists, as hitherto, in winning the majority of the workers. And we will fulfill this task in spite of everything.

The fusion of the 2nd and 2½ Internationals has brought great advantage for the revolutionary movement of the proletariat. Fewer illusions and less deception,—and this is always favorable for the working class.

To the Petrograd workers and their newly elected Soviets who are now receiving the IV. Congress of the Communist International in their city I send my best wishes and warmest greetings. The Petrograd proletariat will also be one of the first on the economic front.

We have heard with joy of the commencement of the economic rebirth of Petrograd.

In reply to your invitation to come to Petrograd, let me say that I hope to come to you in the very near future.

The Soviet Power is celebrating its fifth anniversary in Russia. It stands firmer now than ever before. The civil war is ended. The first economic successes are already in sight. Soviet Russia is highly proud of being able to help the workers of the whole world in their hard struggle for the overthrow of capitalism. The victory will be ours!

Long live the Communist International!

November 4th, 1922.

Vladimir Ulyanov Lenin.

A number of brilliant artists will appear on the opening night of the Russian Handicraft Exhibition and Bazaar arranged by Local New York of the Friends of Soviet Russia for Dec. 18-23, at the Lyceum, 201 E. 86th St.

The bazaar is being run in connection with an exhibition of peasant art products to be sold for the benefit of the destitute orphans in Russia, the entire proceeds of the bazaar to be used in maintaining hundreds of orphans.

The concert on Monday, Dec. 18, has been arranged by Vera Smirnova, the famous Russian singer, who will herself appear in striking costumes, singing Russian and gipsy folksongs. With her will appear a prominent accordion player and an 11 year old boy dancer whose names will be announced later. On the same evening will also appear Irving Korenman, a pianist, a graduate of the Conservatory of Music in Kharkov, who has played in the principal cities in Russia. All of these artists have donated their services for the benefit of the Russian orphans.

A similar program of entertainment has been prepared for every evening except Saturday, Dec. 23, when there will be an International Masque Ball.

Red Moscow Receives 4th C.I. Congress

By Radio to Imprekorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to "The Worker"

MOSCOW, Nov. 7.—At 9 o'clock on a beautiful autumn morning, the delegates to the Fourth Congress of the Communist International arrived in Moscow, coming from Petrograd.

The city is richly flagged, the houses festively decorated.

The streets are filled with soldiers of the Red Army, columns of armed proletarians, and processions of demonstrating workers.

At 11 o'clock there was an army review in the Red Square, where Comrade Trotzky addressed a speech to the army, the workers, and the participators in the Congress. He said:

"On this anniversary of the Soviet Republic it is with Germany alone that the republic holds normal relations. All the other great powers have not yet recognized the Soviet government 'de jure.'

"But the working class of all other countries recognizes and fraternally supports the Soviet power. The bourgeois powers are holding back their recognition, for they still hope that even in Russia capitalism will return.

Await World Revolution

"But they wait in vain. Soviet Russia will hold out, and patiently await the development of the world revolution. The Russian workers, the army, and the peasantry, are united, and work in common for the realization of Socialism.

"Soviet Russia's readiness for peace is proved by the disarmament conference held with the neighboring states. Russia wants peace; it is prepared to reduce its Red Army to one half, indeed to a tenth. Lloyd George declared that he would look quietly on and see who would be taken on board the vessel named the 'League of Nations.'

"He has looked quietly on until he himself has gone overboard and fallen into the water. Soviet Russia, on the other hand, still stands firmly. The proof is thus established, that the Soviet power is no mere episode, but an historical fact."

Comrade Trotzky then greeted the Fourth World Congress in the name of the Soviet Republic, the Red Army, and the Red Fleet.

Play the International

The conclusion of Trotzky's speech was the signal for a tremendous storm of applause. The International was then played by eleven bands, and the great square re-echoed under the mighty tones of the international war song . . . . . .

During this part of the demonstration not only the masses of the participators in the celebration bared their heads, but also the representatives of the diplomatic corps who were present.

Short addresses were then given by Henriett (France), Kolaroff (Bulgaria), and Katayama (Japan).

This was followed by the march past of the Red Army and of the armed workers' columns. The workers of Moscow followed these marching past in two broad columns and bearing with them thousands of standards and flags. Many successful caricatures and symbolic models were carried in these mighty processions.

Revolutionary songs resounded during the whole procession. Enthusiastic cheers were given before the tribunes of the delegates, for the leaders of the Russian revolution, for the Comintern, and for the Fourth World Congress.

Many of the delegates mounted in a captive balloon, and thus obtained an overwhelming survey of festively decorated Moscow with its magnificent buildings. All the main streets were filled with demonstrating masses. No fewer than thirty aeroplanes circled above the Red Square.

All Workers Out

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the streets were still filled with masses of the people streaming towards the Red Square. An unending stream of singing human beings, poured over the wide square. The whole atmosphere was filled with enthusiasm. Not only the communists were there, but the entire proletariat of Moscow.

Evening comes. The Red Square is illuminated. Thousands of red stars shed their light on the multitude. The streets and many of the houses are festively lit up.

The stream ebbs away but slowly.

To-morrow the Fourth Congress will commence its session.

Workers' Defense Union Is Raising Xmas Fund

The season of peace and good will is almost with us. But still hundreds of political prisoners are in federal and state prisons with no hope of release.

One favor capitalism grants her prisoners is a little respite at Christmas from the murderous discipline of the remainder of the year, then a few gifts are permitted to be sent to these men.

Workers are not sentimental about a season the spirit of which is made a mockery of by the very existence of prisons but it is only then that they are permitted to pledge thrir devotion and solidarity to those on the inside.

The Workers' Defense Union is raising a special Christmas Fund to see that all the politicals in every prison get some sort of a Christmas gift. This is the fifth year the defense union has raised Christmas funds and because there are more workers inside this year than ever before they have set out to raise $2,000, which will be just sufficient to assure every man an adequate expression of love and solidarity.

Will you send a contribution quickly? The time is short, act at once. Send contributions to the Christmas Fund of the Workers' Defense Union, 81 East 10th St., New York City.

Debs Helps Russian Orphans

Eugene V. Debs has laid the cornerstone—metaphorically speaking—of a colony of Children's Homes in Russia bearing his name. In response to the appeal for the saving of Russian orphans made by the Friends of Soviet Russia, he has sent a donation of $10 and a letter expressing his enthusiastic endorsement of the work.

Kamenev Sees C.I. at Head of World Labor

MOSCOW, Nov 7.—This eveni[illegible] there took place in the Big Theatr[illegible] a joint session of the All-Russia[illegible] Executive and the Moscow Work[illegible]ers' organizations with the Fourth Congress of the Communist International. The Congress was mo[illegible] enthusiastically greeted by the fou[illegible] thousand people present.

Comrade Kamenev opened the session. He emphasized the fact that Soviet Russia as well as the Communist International is the fighting organization of the world proletariat. The Soviet Power united Russia from Archangel to Batum and from Petrograd to Vladivostock. The Communist International is growing while capitalism is preparing its own grave.

Italians Fight Fascism

Kalinin points out the improvement of the position of the Russian working class.

Zinoviev declares that Soviet Russia has never been as strong as she is at present. The sympathy and support of the non-party elements is growing visibly. Since the demonstration during the S.R. Trial up to the present day a powerful influx of the non-party elements into the communist organizations is noticeable.

Bordiga (Italy) states that the Italian communists will fight Fascism with the methods of Fascism.

A declaration of Berron (France) that the French communists are united and convinced of the necessity of creating a strong communist party is supported by all the French delegates and enthusiastically received by all present.

A delegation of Moscow workers presents the Congress with an artistically executed statue of Lenin. Other factory committees present Lenin with statues of Marx and Engels.

Smeral (Czecho-Slovakia), congratulates the Russian proletariat on the mighty economic achievements of the Soviet Power and promises that the Czecho-Slovakian communists will do everything to hinder the Italian Fascisti from uniting with the South German reaction.

Polish Party Grows

Kolaroff (Bulgaria), points out that the soldiers of the Wrangel army in Bulgaria are turning their backs on the counter-revolution.

Valetzky (Poland): The Com[illegible]munist Party of Poland is [illegible] in strength in spite of the [illegible] terror prevailing.

Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG

The Poor Fish Says: The elections prove that people are never satisfied.

By H. M. WICKS

[illegible] again he assailed labor during the rail strike, and last Friday.

[illegible] before Congress, the [illegible] part was that which [illegible] organized labor. [illegible] he attempted to palliate the farmers who [illegible] their contempt of the [illegible] administration by supporting its enemies at the last election, but he proposed nothing definite. Likewise he twaddled about the [illegible] of rail mileage, but said nothing tangible that can be used as a basis for legislation. But when he came to the discussion of the working class he was perfectly clear and left nothing to the imagination.

Anti-Strike Tribunal

The President prefaced his anti-strike proposals with the assertion that the strikes of last summer and fall were useless and that there was no excuse for their beginning and no justification for their continuation. The distress of the farmer was caused by the strikes, blandly declared Harding, evidently hoping by such sophistry to break up the farmer-labor combination that proved so disastrous to his machine the first Tuesday of November, when many of the Old Guard went down to defeat. The trick may work and it may not work; at any rate it can do no harm to try it. After all, the farmers and workers that can be bamboozled into supporting the so-called liberals in place of the standpatters do not display a degree of intelligence sufficient to cause the experienced politicians who guide the destiny of the present administration a great deal of anxiety.

The insufficiency of power vested in the labor board renders that body ineffective, says Harding. Therefore more effective measures must be adopted in order to spare the public "even the threat of discontinued service" on the railroads.

The President further ruminates to the effect that neither the group of men on the Labor Board representing capital or those representing labor can serve impartially; that the only ones who can serve impartially are the three who represent the "public." So the Presidential proposal is to abolish the Labor Board and empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to create a labor committee for the purpose of deciding disputes dealing with wages and working conditions.

Labor Must Prepare to Fight

Never before has a President of the United States gone so far in his insatiable hatred of labor. This latest proposal of Harding is the most vicious, the most contemptible and the most menacing proposal that has even been made by a high public official and could only have emanated from the disordered brains of the satraps of Elbert H. Gary and other apostles of the "open shop."

This proposal of Harding is evidence of the fact that the ruling class of the United States is going to attempt by legislation and the use of all the powers of government to achieve the victory over labor that the militant vigilance of the working class prevented in the great strike wave that swept the nation for the greater part of this year.

We can get an idea of the type of labor branch of the Interstate Commerce Commission that would be created should the Harding recommendations be carried into effect. He would probably take some of the "lame ducks" of last November—some of the defeated Senators like New of Indiana or Poindexter of Washington—and place them on the government pay roll where they could use their power to reduce labor in America to the level of Chinese coolies.

So menacing are these proposals of Harding that labor must be constantly on the alert to detect the first move toward their consummation. The day that such a proposal is introduced in Congress should be the signal for the rallying of the forces of labor preparatory to hurling defiance at the United States government if the hirelings of capitalism seriously attempt to place such a law upon the statute books. Such a law would reduce the American working class to a level far lower than any slavery the world has ever seen. It would mean conscription of labor in the industries for the benefit of the plundering plutocrats and the complete extermination of every labor organization within the confines of this nation.

Decisive Action Counts

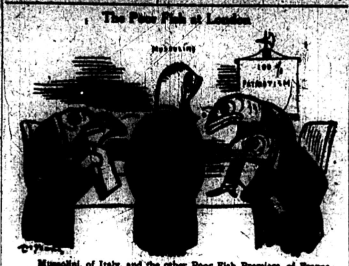
In case such a proposal is ever considered seriously by this or any other Congress the organized workers of this nation must be prepared to act quickly and decisively against the government. The only answer to this culmination of the criminal career of Warren G. Harding and his unspeakably vile administration is a general strike that will paralyze every railroad, every mine, mill and factory in the United States.

Harding is the reptile that boasts of his desire to put teeth in labor laws. Very well, let him put teeth in the Interstate Commerce Commission that will enable it to enforce industrial conscription and labor will rise in its might and knock those teeth down its throat.

There is the ever-present danger of such laws as long as capitalism lasts, and the militants in the labor movement should spare no effort to create such a supreme contempt on the part of the rank and file of the workers for this servile government of capitalism that the mere mention of industrial conscription, under any guise whatsoever, will cause an industrial and political earthquake that will shake the ruling class and its institutions to its very foundation.

If the pompous ignoramus in the White House thinks he can challenge labor with impunity he is doomed to a rude awakening, for the working class of today is not the meek, supine slave class of a few years past and every day that passes sees that working class becoming more militant, until finally the day will come that labor will take control of its own destiny, in spite of all the vapid ravings emanating from the heads of the present government.

The Poor Fish at London



Mussolini, of Italy, and the other Poor Fish Premiers, of France, of Great Britain, of Belgium, and the other capitalist allies, meeting in London, have agreed to disagree and struck out for home waters.

The Italian Poor Fish, as depicted above by Art Young, made the final plea, urging quick action on the slender bait offered by Germany. He said:

"Delay is a serious matter. Within the next three weeks Germany will have added another 200,000,000,000 to her paper money, the European exchanges will go down and all nations will be sadly disillusioned."

Poor Fish Mussolini surely worries about what the small fry back home will do when he returns without the bacon.

Prepare Y. W. L. Observer Tour on Young Communist Congress

Thru strenuous efforts on the part of the Young Workers League membership, sufficient money has been raised to send an observer of the Y. W. L. to the Third Congress of the Young Communist International, recently concluded at Moscow.

Tho definite word has not been received by the national office of the League, no doubt the comrade representing the Young Workers League is on his way back to this country to report on the proceedings of the congress, as well as on conditions of the young workers in Europe.

A call has been sent out by the national office of the Y. W. L. for funds with which to tour the observer so that all the branches of the Y. W. L. possible might have the opportunity of getting a report of the International Congress at first hand.

The Observer will begin his tour in the Eastern cities and then on thru Ohio to Chicago. Later plans will be made for a trip to the Western sections of the League so that these comrades who are handicapped by distance might avail themselves of a talk by the comrade who represented us at the Third Y. C. I. Congress.

Workers Party branches can also arrange meetings for the Young Workers League representative, as no doubt this will offer an opportunity for the adult comrades to schedule some live meetings.

Definite information as to the route of the Y. W. L. Observer can be obtained from the National Office of the Young Workers League at 2517 Fullerton Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER: KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

Don't Forget Prisoners at Holiday Time

By NERMA BERMAN

Secretary New York Branch National Defense Committee

The intelligent worker appreciates the beauty, graciousness and gentility of the spirit of mutual "give and take" of the Christmas and New Year's season. He experiences the most generous impulses and finest sentiments.

A society that denies expression of the noblest thoughts to a class, the greater part of its population—the workers—is inferior and consequently must be changed fundamentally and completely. The class-conscious workers are the impetus for revolutionary organization which will do everything possible to exterminate the parasites—the capitalist class—who swim in abundance.

In the United States, the revolutionary movement is still in its infancy, yet the wealth mongers are shrewd enough to recognize the most militant workers as their enemies and incarcerate them in miserable holes and dungeons scattered thruout the country. Communists are considered the most dangerous element in the class struggle. The list below contains the names of communists and their adrresses in the many jails of this "libetty-loving" land.

Minnie Kalnin, Anna Leisman and Ignats Misher, at the Auburn Prison, 135 State St., Auburn, New York.

Paul Manko, Dannemora State Prison, Dannemora, New York.

Ben Gitlow, Sing Sing State Prison 354 Hunter St., Ossining, New York.

Engelbert Preis, Deportee, Room 206, Ellis Island, New York.

Joseph Kowalski, No. 14882, U. S. Penitentiary, Atlanta, Georgia.

Israel Blankenstein and Joe Martinowich, at Western Penitentiary, Pittsburgh, Pa.

J. O. Bentall, U. S. Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans.

Gene Bechtold, Charles Erickson, Seth Nordling, Norman Tallentire and Joseph Zack, St. Joseph County Jail, St. Joseph Mich.

These workers have fought most valiantly for the change which will lead to knowledge, beauty and power for all and revolutionists and their friends ought to pay tribute to the class war victims even at the cost of sacrifice to themselves. Send packages, sweets, fruit and tobacco. Favors allowed only during the holidays to the prisoners. Many workers cannot afford to send packages. Well they can send cards of greetings and in the meantime strain every effort for the establishment of the Workers' Republic.

SAN QUENTIN, Cal.—"The boys all send their best wishes and regards to the boys in Herrin," is the message dispatched from here by the political prisoners, most of them victims of the California criminal syndicalism law. "I believe that I know one of the Herrin boys who was in the service," one political declared.

[illegible] Investigated

(By The Federated Press)

Three times the American Civil Liberties Union has called upon William J. Burns, head of the government spy system, to tell why federal agents were involved in the arrest and prosecution of the Communists at Bridgman, Mich. Twice there have been evasive and reluctant replies. Then Burns, in an interview published, was quoted as saying:

"There is an organization at the present time in New York called the American Civil Liberties Union, that is seeking to investigate us in order to determine why we had men at Bridgman, Mich.", and adding that this is one of the "difficulties" the department of investigation experiences in "curbing radical activities."

This Burns statement has evoked a third demand from the Civil Liberties Union upon Burns for a real explanation of the activities of his men in a state case.

"The charge against the men who were arrested in the raid at Bridgman," says the Civil Liberties Union's letter, "in which agents of the department of justice participated, is, so far as we are aware, that holding radical opinions, they had the temerity to meet together to discuss them. Such conduct violates no law of the United States and the charge was lodged under a state statute.

"We inquired why federal appropriations were thus being used to repress radical opinion which violates no federal law. After a number of evasive replies from the department—not signed by you but bearing your initials—we were at last told that the men arrested at Bridgman were under surveillance by federal officers for some other supposed federal offense. We then inquired why agents of the department of justice were assisting in the preparations of the cases for trial. To this you again made, not a direct, but an evasive answer.

"We believe it imperative to the end that the public retain confidence in the department of justice, that you make an unequivocal statement about this matter. If, as you say, the charges in the Bridgman case do not involve any violation of federal statutes, federal agents should either be withdrawn from the case, or their presence in it should be explained."

Letter from Lenin to the International Workers Aid

(By F. S. R. Press Service)

Economic assistance by the class conscious workers of the world is the essential need of Soviet Russia at this time, Premier Lenin says in a letter to Willy Munzenberg, secretary of the International Workers Aid. The text of the letter, which is especially interesting in view of the campaign for the sale of stock in the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, has been transmitted by cable to the Friends of Soviet Russia. It reads:

"Dear Comrade Munzenberg: Referring to your report at the Congress of the Communist International I feel urged to point out in a few words the importance of this work. The famine relief activity of the international working class has helped Soviet Russia tremendously to survive the hard days of last year's famine.

Now it is important to heal the wounds which were inflicted by the famine; and first of all to provide for the many thousands of orphaned children and rehabilitate agriculture and industry, which were greatly damaged by the famine. In this respect, too, the brotherly assistance of the international working class has done its share. The International Tractor Colony at Perm, the agricultural and industrial enterprises of the International Workers Aid, the agricultural groups of the Technical Aid Society of America, the floating of the first proletarian loan for Soviet Russia thru the Workers Aid are gratifying beginnings of the fraternal help of the workers in the economic rebuilding of Soviet Russia.

"The action for economic aid which has been so well begun by the International Workers' Aid should be strongly furthered by the workers of the whole world. Besides continual strong political pressure upon the governments of the bourgeois countries with the demand for recognition of the Soviet Government, a broad activity for economic aid by the world proletariat is at present the best and most practical assistance to Soviet Russia in her economic war against the imperialist concerns, and the best support in the socialist construction of its economy.—Vladimir Uljanov Lenin."

Insects Unmask Capitalism and Fight World War All Over Again in New York Theater

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

I have never met Mr. William A. Brady, the theatrical producer, who is offering "The World We Live In" at Jolson's 59th Street Theater. But when I do, and I hope to, I am going to ask him, first of all, how it happened that he dared to [illegible] production of the two brothers, Josef and Karel Capek, Czech Communists.

It is not difficult for Karel's allegory, "R. U. R." the Theater Guild offering at the Frazee Theater, to pass muster with the various strata of our present social order. Various interpretations can be placed upon it, according to inclination. But this joint effort of the two Communist brothers is such a powerful, direct jab at capitalism that Brady must have considered twice before violating the "sanctity of the theater" with this heresy to things as they are.

To be sure the Kapek brothers erect their camouflage. But it is a thin veil of pretense easily penetrated. "The Insect Comedy," the sub-title used, may be acceptable to those who recognize the evils of the present criminal social system and are happy to see it unmasked thru the antics of insects, from butterflies and crickets, to beetles and ants, upon the stage. But it is apt to be a cruel revelation to believers in "the present situation," as Thorstein Veblen, the economist, calls it.

When the curtain goes up we are at once fascinated by the tremendous assurance of Robert Edeson, as "The Vagrant," that the whole universe revolves about him. Man could have no greater conviction of his own individual importance.

But this exalted self-satisfaction takes its quick fall as "The Vagrant" sees duplicated in the struggles of insects, the ambitions of humans.

The Capek brothers sugarcoat their pill. First the butterflies, with their loves and matings. It is a beautiful bit of staging, lavish and provocative of languor, extremely well done and very well acted.

Then the coating falls away and we are confronted by the beetles. The male and female beetle, husband and wife, roll their "pile," their "treasure," their "all" upon the stage, to be sure only a "ball of manure," but in their dialogue they give us a shattering attack on capitalist civilization's whole propaganda to "Save and Have."

I had never known crickets to be as attractive as these male and female crickets about to establish their honeymoon flat in a hole made vacant by another cricket family gobbled up by the more powerful and carnivorous fly. But this honeymoon couple, with all their ambitions for the future, are struck down in their happy youth by this same Ichneumon Fly, who seeks delicacies for its offspring, even as rich and powerful humans prey upon the young of the working class to gorge and beautify their own.

Thus we are carried to the most powerful part of the play, into the ant realm, "The largest Ant State, a world power, the largest democracy," where "all must obey, all must work," duplicating the phraseology of great capitalism's statesmen and its press.

The ants are shown toiling, sweating under a speed-up system that should rouse the envy of the Chicago packers, with their moving, killing and cutting beds, that give labor no instant of rest. It should make Henry Ford jealous, in spite of the perfection of his moving belt and overhead conveyor system that keeps his slaves everlastingly on the go. First the blind ant counts, "One, two, three four," but then it is discovered that work will proceed faster, if the count is "One, two, four," and "One, two, four," it becomes.

But, the Ant State is sourrounded by enemies. "We defeated the black ants," "and starved out the russets," proudly proclaim the military and industrial chiefs of the Ant State. "And subjugated the greys." "Only the yellows are left." "We must starve out the Yellows." "We must starve out all."

But, the Ant State still faces war in the interests of race, industrial interests, colonial interests, world interests, for:—

"Our ants are the most peaceful ants, a nation of peace. . . They only wish for world peace."

But, amid the clang of industry and the lowering clouds of approaching hostilities, the aspirations of the Ant State find words in:

"When we rule over the world we shall conquer time . . . We must quicken the pace, the pace of output . . . Every moment must be quickened, shortened, reckoned out, to an instant, to a hundredth of an instant."

All this and much more comes in short, terse expressions from the lash wielders, the pace makers. An ant worker falls dead in his tracks. The corpse is hustled off with the same efficiency and speed.

"We are a nation of peace. Peace means work. And work means strength. And strength means war!"

Thus the hypocritical pretenses of capitalism are crumpled up, one by one, as the Ant State sends its armies to war against the Yellow Ants because, "We still need a new bit of the world, a bit of the world from the birch tree to the pine tree, and a road between two blades of grass."

Thus the final exultation:

"War! . . War at last!" exclaims the military dictator, as if happily quenching his thirst with human blood, as he prays on bended knees for victory. "At last a war that is forced on us. To arms!"

The Capek brothers leave out no details. There is the kept journalist, the war worker and bond salesman, all cleverly worked into the general massive scheme.

There is a fitting epilogue, "Life and Death," where the smoke of battle has drifted out. A woman is bringing the baby of her sister to be christened, with the hope that it will be luckier than the generation that has gone before it.

The epilogue breathes the conviction of the Communist Capek brothers that humanity will be luckier and happier under the Communism that is coming than it is under Capitalism that still holds most of the world in its slipping grip.

[illegible] when Japan and [illegible] signed an agreement [illegible] that many of us [illegible] have attained a point [illegible] agreements have become [illegible] and where Japan's [illegible] power has not prevented her [illegible] fulfilling this engagement, it is thanks to our diplomacy. [illegible] near future our diplomacy [illegible] be confronted by a task [illegible] importance, a task in[illegible] important interests for us. [illegible] thinking of the conference on [illegible] Near East convened by England [illegible] Lausanne Nov. 13.

[illegible] fully convinced that our diplomacy will be able to maintain its authority equally well on this occasion, and will efficiently defend the interests of all allied republics and of the R. S. F. S. R.

In any case we shall make it our endeavor to reveal to the masses what are the real obstacles, and in what degree these run counter not only to the justifiable desires and endeavours of our state, but of all states interested in the question of the Straits.

With regard to foreign politics I limit myself to these brief remarks, and pass on to the discussion of your activity.

I believe that we have attained most important successes, altho at a [illegible] all: the Labor Code.

It is a tremendous victory for the Soviet power that precisely now, when all governments are [illegible] against the working class, that we can present ourselves with such a code of laws, establishing the fundamentals of labor legislation, as for instance, the eight hour day.

We must reckon with the fact of the states in which a mad capitalist competition is raging, where there are millions and tens of millions of unemployed, where the capitalists are organizing mighty capitalist federations and preparing to attack the working class, our land is the most backward of all, our productive powers are the least developed, and we have the least idea how to work.

This is perhaps an unpleasant truth, but it has to be admitted. But I believe that precisely because we do not seek to veil such facts with fine phrases and official explanations, but admit them candidly, we need not fear to mount the tribune and declare that we have expended more energy than any other state on the removal of these deficiencies, and that we are doing our utmost to overtake the other states with a speed which they do not in the least imagine.

But naturally the speed is not fantastic, we require some years of stubborn work to attain this aim. Nothing can be done in a day. We have had five years of experience, [illegible]

Nobody amongst us believes in a fantastic speed of change, but we do believe in a [illegible] speed, in a speed surpassing the [illegible] of any other historical period of evolution; and when the movement is led by a really revolutionary party, such a speed is an unqualified possibility.

I now come to the problem of the ground law. As you are aware, our first laws immediately after the revolution contained regulations respecting land which, tho not quite technically perfect, nor perhaps juridically so, none the less contained all essentials, all that was of unqualified necessity for the peasant, and ensured his alliance with the working class.

And even if the law which you have now accepted proves to require improvement in this or that regard, we shall be able to carry out these corrections without any special difficulty, just as you have accepted improvements in the code of criminal law at this session.

The land, the living question for the majority, of the population, the peasantry, is for us a fundamental question. In this respect we are far advanced that the Russian peasant knows that not only do we set no brake on proposals towards the alteration of old laws, but we accept these most favorably.

You have also dealt with such questions as the civil code of laws and the general regulations for litigation. In the policy which you [illegible]

[illegible] has also been the endeavor to draw a line of distinction between the justifiable satisfaction of the needs of every citizen living under the new economic policy, and the abuses of the new economic policy, which are law in all other countries, but whose legalization we decline.

It remains for the future to show in how far the corrections which you have just made with this intention, and which you approve, will succeed in their object.

In any case, we do not bind our hands in any way. Should daily experience show that there are abuses upon which we had not calculated, we shall take immediate steps for their removal.

In this respect, as you are aware, such rapidity of legislation is unfortunately unknown in other states. We shall see if the near future will not force these powers to try and keep up with Russia in this respect.

We must also accord some attention to the equally important question of the provincial Soviet congresses and government executive committees. All former systems, legislatures, and constitutions left this question unanswered. It was thought that in the provinces everything would take its old course. We, on the other hand, are convinced that if our revolution has been able to attain many successes, this is solely because we had the power in the provinces in our hands, and because [illegible] with Germany [illegible] until the autumn, in every way gratified those elements among the Allies who resented our peace with Germany)—when as I say, the revolution was able to carry out its work with such rapidity, this was due to the fact that we have always counted upon the peasant population, and have opened new vistas of activity to them; we always expected from the provinces that enthusiasm, which imparted perseverance and speed to our revolution.

I am aware that at that time the provinces went thru troublous times. We were much occupied by the relations of the provinces to the centre, and I will not assert that we were always able to carry out our task in the most ideal manner. The general level of our culture could not permit us to even dream of an ideal solution. But we have the right to assert that we have carried out our task with greater uprightness, truth, and perseverance, than any other state.

I must soon conclude. I shall only touch upon one more question, one of the greatest interest to me, and which should be of interest to you also, tho it is not contained either in the agenda or in the inquiries. This is the question of our [illegible] apparatus [illegible] yet [illegible] new question.

In 1918 we had a census taken of the state apparatus in Moscow. The result showed that there were 231,000 state and Soviet employees in Moscow (including the central state employees and the Moscow municipal employees). Recently, in October, 1922, we undertook a recount, convinced that our distended apparatus had shrunk. The resultant figure was 243,000. This is the result of all our reductions.

This example shows the need of further studies and comparisons. At that time, in the year 1918, as we undertook the census in the first heat of reform, we were not yet in a position to reduce the figures to anything sensible. The civil war left us no leisure whatever for this. We hope that it will now be done.

We are fully convinced that our state apparatus, which suffers from many defects, which is considerably more than twice as large as it need be, which often works against and not for us—we need not be afraid to utter this truth from the tribune of the highest legislative body of our republic—will be improved. Its improvement will require much work and capability.

A start has already been made in the serious consideration of the nature of these improvements, but at present it is only a start, a few articles, some local investigations.

If we all go away from here with fixed resolve to devote much more attention to these questions than we have done, if we are firmly resolved to spend less time at [illegible] bustle, if we really get to [illegible] apparatus and work for [illegible] improvement, it will be [illegible] step forward, and afford [illegible] for our success.

We must have the courage [illegible] that our apparatus is [illegible] The best workers under[illegible] most difficult tasks alike in [illegible] and bourgeois admin[illegible] spheres, and as a rule they [illegible] their work wrongly.

But all the same they have [illegible] stood how to correct themselv how to work. The present rel between these—perhaps only [illegible] brave individuals—and the [illegible] who only sit and sabotage or sabotage, and lose themselv their red tape, these relations suffocating our living cause in a byrinth of red tape.

We must get thoroly to the tom of this matter, as we have yet succeeded in doing. Years years will have to pass over, years and years we shall have learn, for the cultural level of workers is very low, and it is ceedingly difficult for the workers undertake the work of producti new to them. But our sole reli is upon the uprightness and ent siasm of the workers. Years years must pass befor the impro ment of our state apparatus can realized.

I am convinced that if you further devote your powers to same activity as has actuated you the present session, we must inev ably arrive at the very best resu

C.I. Executive Report Given by Zinoviev

By Radio to Imprekorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to "The Worker"

Moscow, Nov. 10.—Morning Session. The session is opened by Kolarov. A number of commissions are appointed, for the French, Italian, Czecho-Slovakian, American, Jugoslavian, Spanish and Negro questions.

Zinoviev then begins his speech, in which he reports on the work of the Executive during the past year, and draws broad outlines for the future tactics of the Comintern.

The Third Congress was followed by a sharp offensive on the part of capitalism along the whole line. The workers suffered many defeats. Russia too had to undergo a terrible time of famine, a fact utilized by the Mensheviki slandering the Soviet Government.

The Comintern has been accused of being a tool in the hands of Soviet Russia. The Second International is however the tool employed by the bourgeoisie against Soviet Russia. Clynes of the English Labor Party and of the General Labor Union, is with Urqhart, and fights on the other side of the barricade.

The working class has taken up a defensive attitude. Therefore our tactics are: go to the masses. Hence the slogan of the united front.

Difficulties in France

Our first great international campaign for the united front did not pass off without great disturbances on the part of the various sections. The greater the masses that leave other parties to join ours, the more difficult is the process of clarification.

Our tactics encountered difficulties in France, in part also in Italy. There is still a lack of proletarian discipline. If this is the case in the preparatory actions, how will it be when days of real fighting come?

Last year the German party lived thru a severe crisis, but has come thru it well, thanks to the aid of the Comintern. Today the German party is one of the firmest and politically clearest sections.

The German and Czecho-Slovakian parties have carried out the tactics of the united front best. They have perhaps not always shown the face of the Party openly enough, but they have maintained the freedom of communist agitation and criticism.

The courses taken by the last railway strike and the shop steward movement in Germany are exemplary for the united front tactics. The German party emerges from this movement with renewed strength.

Altho the number of members has not increased to any great extent, it nevertheless possesses more members today than the Bolsheviki when they seized power. Rapid revolutionary development is the case in Germany. Hence the importance of having a good party there in that country.

French Labor on Defensive

In France the Communist Party is passing thru severe birth pangs. The French proletariat is at present on the defensive. The French party does not yet understand how to lead the workers unitedly to battle. In France the struggle must be better prepared. The French party is still of the opinion that economic struggles are no part of party work.

The 21 points are now being confirmed anew. Despite this, the French press is still very far from carrying out even the first of these 21 conditions.

There are three tendencies in the French party: right, left, and centre. There are still reformist elements remaining in the centre. These must disappear. The left has made many mistakes, but it is the only fraction which has really fought for the tactics of the Comintern. Our sympathy is with this fraction.

There are good working elements in the centre and in the Renoult group. We are willing to meet these half way. The negotiations with all the tendencies justify the confident hope that the French party will retain its unity. We must however criticize its faults with all severity.

Italian S. P. Aided Fascisti

The events in the Italian labor movement constitute an educational example for the whole International. The conflict between the Italian Socialist Party and the Comintern did not arise out of the question of immediate seizure of power; all that was required of the Italian Socialists was to exclude the agents of the bourgeoisie from their ranks, and thus to set their hands free for carrying out revolutionary actions.

The guilt of having cleared the path for Fascism lies at the door of the Italian Socialist Party. Our tactics at Leghorn have proved correct. The workers belonging to the Italian Socialist Party will have to learn that when reformism is granted an inch, it takes a mile.

Save Honor of Italian Labor

The Comintern has also had differences with the Communist Party of Italy. The Italian communists have saved the honor of the proletariat. Remains of anti-parliamentarism still exist in the party. The united front tactics have not been quite thoroly carried out. The slogan of a workers' government came too late. Candid criticism has to be exercised here, too. The Communist Party of Italy is one of the best fighting troops of the International.

The United Communist Party in Czecho-Slovakia came into existence after the Third Congress, various fractions combining.

The party has committed great sins of omission in trade union questions, and that at a time when it already had the support of the majority of organized labor. The united front tactics have been carried out in an exemplary manner. Successful result: the disintegration of the National Socialist fraction.

The Czech party had differences with the Executive regarding the expulsion of the so-called left. The attitude of the Executive does not signify that it considers the left to be in the right or that it intends to support the left politically.

The Executive is, however, of the opinion that expulsion is too severe a punishment for the breach of discipline committed by these comrades. We condemn the breach of discipline committed by these comrades. We condemn the breach of discipline which is not to be compared with that of Levi. For the Czech opposition does not consist of traitors. It must however maintain discipline.

Expulsion from the party is only permitted as a last resort. In our opinion it was resorted to too soon in this case. If the opposition cannot maintain discipline, there is of course no room for it in our ranks.

The Party in Norway

In Norway the Trade Unions form the basis of the party. No individual membership exists here.

The name of the central organ is still the Social Democrat. Articles against us may be found in this paper. Vestiges of syndicalism are still to be found among many communist workmen. Time must be left for evolution, that the social democratic residues be finally swept away.

In Poland the party is illegal, but at the same time a mass party. Here there have also been differences between the party and the Executive, on the subject of the agrarian and nationality question. The Comintern is in favor of the neutralization of the peasantry. The Polish party is not yet sufficiently elastic.

In Roumania the party holds faithfully to the International, despite much persecution. In Jugoslavia the party is also exposed to great difficulties thru persecution. The labor movement however shows signs of revival.

In England development is slow. England is not a country of great political organizations. The lack of revolutionary experience in England is a cause of great difficulty to our party there.

In Austria the party is making progress.

In Hungary the party movement is suffering greatly thru fraction quarrels. The Fourth Congress must put an end to these. This is of special importance, as the labor movement is increasing its influence in Hungary.

In Japan a communist party has been formed. In India we have success to record.

For Centralized World Power

We have also groups in Egypt, Persia, China. This is of the greatest importance for our fight against world imperialism.

The Profintern also reports good results, and these will be even better in the near future. The Amsterdam fraction contemplates a split. We must use our influence towards creating unity in the trade union movement. We must however take measures against the expulsions. When the Amsterdam fraction causes split, we must issue the slogan of unity.

The Cooperative movement also shows favorable progress.

The Communist Youth movement requires new methods if it is to make greater advance.

This is the report of our activity. We have made many mistakes, and await severe criticism. But then united action! We must become a centralized world organization!

Lenin Sends Hearty Greeting to Communist International in Session at Petrograd

COMRADE LENIN'S LETTER TO THE CONGRESS

1. To Comrade Zinoviev, Petrograd, for the IV. World Congress of the Communist International.
2. To the Petrograd Soviets, the delegates of the Workers, Peasants and Red Soldiers.

I exceedingly regret that I cannot be present at the first session of the Congress and that I can only greet you by letter. In spite of the enormous difficulties in the way of the various Communist Parties, the Communist International is growing and is becoming ever stronger. The chief task consists, as hitherto, in winning the majority of the workers. And we will fulfill this task in spite of everything.

The fusion of the 2nd and 2½ Internationals has brought great advantage for the revolutionary movement of the proletariat. Fewer illusions and less deception,—and this is always favorable for the working class.

To the Petrograd workers and their newly elected Soviets who are now receiving the IV. Congress of the Communist International in their city I send my best wishes and warmest greetings. The Petrograd proletariat will also be one of the first on the economic front.

We have heard with joy of the commencement of the economic rebirth of Petrograd.

In reply to your invitation to come to Petrograd, let me say that I hope to come to you in the very near future.

The Soviet Power is celebrating its fifth anniversary in Russia. It stands firmer now than ever before. The civil war is ended. The first economic successes are already in sight. Soviet Russia is highly proud of being able to help the workers of the whole world in their hard struggle for the overthrow of capitalism. The victory will be ours!

Long live the Communist International!

November 4th, 1922.

Vladimir Ulyanov Lenin.

Red Moscow Receives 4th C.I. Congress

By Radio to Imprekorr (Berlin) and Forwarded by Mail to "The Worker"

MOSCOW, Nov. 7.—At 9 o'clock on a beautiful autumn morning, the delegates to the Fourth Congress of the Communist International arrived in Moscow, coming from Petrograd.

The city is richly flagged, the houses festively decorated.

The streets are filled with soldiers of the Red Army, columns of armed proletarians, and processions of demonstrating workers.

At 11 o'clock there was an army review in the Red Square, where Comrade Trotzky addressed a speech to the army, the workers, and the participators in the Congress. He said:

"On this anniversary of the Soviet Republic it is with Germany alone that the republic holds normal relations. All the other great powers have not yet recognized the Soviet government 'de jure.'

"But the working class of all other countries recognizes and fraternally supports the Soviet power. The bourgeois powers are holding back their recognition, for they still hope that even in Russia capitalism will return.

Await World Revolution

"But they wait in vain. Soviet Russia will hold out, and patiently await the development of the world revolution. The Russian workers, the army, and the peasantry, are united, and work in common for the realization of Socialism.

"Soviet Russia's readiness for peace is proved by the disarmament conference held with the neighboring states. Russia wants peace; it is prepared to reduce its Red Army to one half, indeed to a tenth. Lloyd George declared that he would look quietly on and see who would be taken on board the vessel named the 'League of Nations.'

"He has looked quietly on until he himself has gone overboard and fallen into the water. Soviet Russia, on the other hand, still stands firmly. The proof is thus established, that the Soviet power is no mere episode, but an historical fact."

Comrade Trotzky then greeted the Fourth World Congress in the name of the Soviet Republic, the Red Army, and the Red Fleet.

Play the International

The conclusion of Trotzky's speech was the signal for a tremendous storm of applause. The International was then played by eleven bands, and the great square re-echoed under the mighty tones of the international war song . . . . .

During this part of the demonstration not only the masses of the participators in the celebration bared their heads, but also the representatives of the diplomatic corps who were present.

Short addresses were then given by Henriett (France), Kolaroff (Bulgaria), and Katayama (Japan).

This was followed by the march past of the Red Army and of the armed workers' columns. The workers of Moscow followed these marching past in two broad columns and bearing with them thousands of standards and flags. Many successful caricatures and symbolic models were carried in these mighty processions.

Revolutionary songs resounded during the whole procession. Enthusiastic cheers were given before the tribunes of the delegates, for the leaders of the Russian revolution, for the Comintern, and for the Fourth World Congress.

Many of the delegates mounted in a captive balloon, and thus obtained an overwhelming survey of festively decorated Moscow with its magnificent buildings. All the main streets were filled with demonstrating masses. No fewer than thirty aeroplanes circled above the Red Square.

All Workers Out

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the streets were still filled with masses of the people streaming towards the Red Square. An unending stream of singing human beings, poured over the wide square. The whole atmosphere was filled with enthusiasm. Not only the communists were there, but the entire proletariat of Moscow.

Evening comes. The Red Square is illuminated. Thousands of red stars shed their light on the multitude. The streets and many of the houses are festively lit up.

The stream ebbs away but slowly. To-morrow the Fourth Congress will commence its session.

Workers' Defense Union Is Raising Xmas Fund

The season of peace and good will is almost with us. But still hundreds of political prisoners are in federal and state prisons with no hope of release.

One favor capitalism grants her prisoners is a little respite at Christmas from the murderous discipline of the remainder of the year, then a few gifts are permitted to be sent to these men.

Workers are not sentimental about a season the spirit of which is made a mockery of by the very existence of prisons but it is only then that they are permitted to pledge their devotion and solidarity to those on the inside.

The Workers' Defense Union is raising a special Christmas Fund to see that all the politicals in every prison get some sort of a Christmas gift. This is the fifth year the defense union has raised Christmas funds and because there are more workers inside this year than ever before they have set out to raise $6,000, which will be just sufficient to assure every man an adequate expression of love and solidarity.

Will you send a contribution quickly? The time is short, act at once. Send contributions to the Christmas Fund of the Workers' Defense Union, 81 East 10th St., New York City.

MOSCOW, Nov 7.—This eve there took place in the Big Thea a joint session of the All-Russ Executive and the Moscow Workers' organizations with the Fou Congress of the Communist Inte national. The Congress was mo enthusiastically greeted by the four thousand people present.

Comrade Kamenev opened the session. He emphasized the fact that Soviet Russia as well as the Communist International is the fighting organization of the world proletariat. The Soviet Power united Russia from Archangel to Batum and from Petrograd to Vladivostock. The Communist International is growing while capitalism is preparing its own grave.

Zinoviev declares that Soviet Russia has never been as strong as she is at present. The sympathy and support of the non-party elements is growing visibly. Since the demonstration during the S.R. Bordiga (Italy) states that the Italian communists will fight Fascism with the methods of Fascism.

A declaration of Berron (France) that the French communists are united and convinced of the necessity of creating a strong communist party is supported by all the French delegates and enthusiastically received by all present.

A delegation of Moscow workers presents the Congress with an artistically executed statue of Lenin. Other factory committees present Lenin with statues of Marx and Engels.

Smeral (Czecho-Slovakia), congratulates the Russian proletariat on the mighty economic achievements of the Soviet Power and promises that the Czecho-Slovakian communists will do everything to hinder the Italian Fascisti from uniting with the South German reaction.

[illegible] Join New York Local, Workers Party; Increase of One-Third

By C. E. WARE

At the city convention of the Workers Party, Local Greater New York, held last Sunday, Dec. [illegible], the Executive Secretary reported that the membership figures for the Local today stand at [illegible] as against [illegible] five months ago.

The 72 delegates representing 46 branches, [illegible] the recognition of the Russian [illegible] with an enthusiastic and unanimous vote and instructed its delegates to the NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA to urge the incoming Central Executive Committee to carry on in Trade Unions and all working class organizations an active campaign for the recognition of Soviet Russia by the United States.

The convention stated its absolute repudiation of Gompers' political policy for nonpartisanship of labor in politics and in no uncertain terms convicted the Government of being an instrument of the employers in the "open shop drive". It denounced the Daugherty injunction but recognized that state power in the hands of the capitalist class means the use of force and violence in the form of the injunction and militia, against the working class.

A resolution endorsing the formation of a Labor Party which shall consist of "Trade unions and working class organizations and political parties" was unanimously adopted and forwarded as the expression of the convention to the Conference for Progressive Political Action taking place the following day in Cleveland.

Support the R. A. I. C.

THE RUSSIAN - AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CORPORATION —formed on the initiative of the AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA—to aid in the industrial reconstruction of Russia, was pledged the active co-operation of the Local and all branches and members of the local were urged to push the stock selling campaign of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation.

It was pointed out that the Socialist party, consistent with its policy of sabotage against the Russian Government, has not only failed to give its support to the splendid aim of this Corporation but has even featured adverse reports concerning it.

Every Branch should at once take steps to carry out the decision of the Convention and assure the success of the campaign of the R. A. I. C.

Political Prisoners

Regarding POLITICAL AND CLASS WAR PRISONERS the Convention reaffirmed its stand for amnesty and called for support of the National Defense committee and active co-operation of every branch and member with the new Labor Defense Council, which in a resolution receiving the unanimous support of the convention, was hailed as the beginning of a movement from which a General Working Class Defense organization should develop.

Work in the Trade Unions

The work of the Industrial Department was discussed at great length. The position of the Party with regard to AMALGAMATION, and the work to be carried on in the LABOR UNIONS was accepted as stated in the following resolutions:

"Recognizing the industrial form of organization as the necessary step to be adopted in the struggle of the masses against the master class;

"We therefore favor Amalgamation of the existing Unions industrially and we call upon all our members within the Unions to support every movement tending towards Amalgamation."

Regarding the unions the convention stated that:

"Since there are many organisations labor organizations in the various industries such as Clothing, Food, Metals, Textile and Shoes, and the position of the Workers Party towards these unions and the work of our members in them, has been misrepresented, our members in all Independent and A. F. of L. unions are instructed actively to support the program of the Trade Union Educational League and its organization of minority rank and file groups in Independent and A. F. of L. unions so that they shall carry on a campaign of education and agitation for the amalgamation of the various unions, Independent and A. F. of L., into one industrial union for each industry."

The Trade Union Educational League and its official organ the Labor Herald were endorsed as the expression of the militant workers in the labor movement and every member of the Local Greater New York was instructed to carry out the decision of the Workers Party and become members of the T. U. E. L.

Discipline

The breach of discipline of the former members of the Jewish Bureau was settled as far as the local was concerned by the adoption, 56 to 4, of a resolution condemning those members for their action and calling upon the N. E. C. of the Workers Party to take drastic action against them.

The convention was treated to the inevitable exhibition of demagoguery by two delegates who took the floor in opposition to the majority recommendation on a resolution on the Communist International.

After a terrific mental effort on the part of its opponents and a little logic in its support, the majority resolution was passed by a vote of 57 to 1; the resolution adopted by the convention being as follows:

"The Communist International"

WHEREAS, The Workers Party accepts the principle that the class struggle for the emancipation of the working class is an international struggle, and

WHEREAS, The leadership in the International struggle which inspires hope in the hearts of Workers of the world and arous ar in the capitalists of every country is the leadership of the COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, That the city convention of Local Greater New York of the Workers Party of America, declares its sympathy with the principles of the COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL and enters the struggle against American capitalism, the most powerful of national groups, under the inspiration and leadership of the Communist International and on the question of affiliation of the Workers Party of America with the Communist International, that we accept the ruling of the Communist International.

After discussion and minor changes several other resolutions were then adopted.

Recognizing the importance of a concrete educational program the committee on education brought in specific recommendations regarding the holding of classes, lectures, open forums, subjects on which courses should be given and the form of work be taken up in the language branches. This splendid report received the enthusiastic support of the entire convention. It is to be hoped that the Local and its branches will put this program into effect at once.

Following the acceptance of the program as proposed in the WORKER of Dec. 2nd, delegates were elected to the DISTRICT CONVENTION TO TAKE PLACE SUNDAY, DEC. 17th, and the convention adjourned.

If the interest and active participation of the delegates in the convention is followed by similar activity on the part of each and every member this year should see Local New York become the force in the working class movement that a revolutionary party must become if it is to lead the workers in their daily struggles against the capitalist class.

The eyes of all the members of the Workers Party and progressives thruout the labor movement of this section are fastened on the election in District 5, United Mine Workers of America, held Dec. 12th, thruout the district. On the result of this election many things turn. If the Progressive Ticket polls a majority of the votes in this district it will be a feat little sort of miraculous. The "machine" has unlimited resources and the backing of the international. An army of organizers using all the tricks of the professional "payroller" rushed about the fields circulating lies about the candidates and doing everything in their power to confuse the issue.

There is no question but that the Progressive Ticket polled an overwhelming majority. The trouble is that the district constitution is full of jokers. The votes are counted at the district headquarters by the enemies of the Progressives. Every effort will be made to secure an honest count but it is not certain yet what tricks the "machine" will employ.

Eight days are allowed after election before the ballots have to be in and then the tellers may count at their leisure. The rank and file promise however to make it hot for the machine if the vote is not honestly handled this time.

Two things have figured prominently in this campaign. First the signing of the Cleveland Agreement which abandoned the Fayette miners. Second the delay by Feeny, O'Leary and the International in giving adequate relief to the Fayette miners after they had been abandoned by the International and the District. Never was there a more brazen betrayal and right valiantly have the Progressives employed it. The educational campaign in this election has been worth all the sacrifice made.

Book Review

BY H. M. WICKS.

Industrial Revival in Soviet Russia, by A. A. Heller. Published by Thomas Seltzer, New York.

Here is a book of the first magnitude about Russia; the Russia that is struggling with economic forces and bringing these forces under the control of the revolution and in order to perpetuate the revolution.

Many authors, representing every shade of opinion, have told stories of Communist activity in Moscow and Petrograd, but it remained for the present author to go into the towns, peasant villages and industrial communities and depict the Communist struggles taking place there. At least this is the first book of the type that has appeared in the English language and it fulfills a long-felt want.

The book is written in narrative form, recounting the personal experiences of the author in his travels over thousands of miles of Russia. One cannot but envy him his experience when reading of the manner in which he observed Communism penetrate even the remotest sections of the vast territory that was for so long the symbol of cultural and political darkness. Everywhere, we are told, appear reminders of the revolution; at every railroad station, in every place where people gather is the revolution. The revolutionary slogans "The hammer of the workman and the plow of the peasant will conquer economic ruin" and "Efficient labor is the surety of our victory" abound everywhere.

We never thought it possible to write the story of economic reconstruction in the same fascinating manner that one might write of the stirring days of the first movement of the revolution, but this author has proved that it is possible by this work of his.

There is no intelligent worker who will not be intensely interested in the success of ordinary workmen and peasants at the head of industrial enterprises. The chapters dealing with the reorganization of industry is a complete refutation of the myth that the capitalists are the "brains" of industry and that the workers cannot dispense with them without courting disaster.

Of particular interest to trade unionists is the chapter dealing with the transition from war to peace, wherein the conflicting views of Lenin, Trotzky, Shliapnikov, are set forth concerning the role of the unions in the period of readjusting the industrial life of Russia. That chapter alone makes the book invaluable for every workingman who is active in his labor organization and at the same time furnishes basis for refutation of the charges of reactionaries against Soviet Russia in its attitude toward labor unions.

Through 241 pages we see the new society arise from the revolutionary struggle and at the conclusion we are reminded of the statement of someone to the effect that every person is capable of writing at least one book. We do not know whether Comrade Heller has written or will write more, but this one is enough for one man, anyway.

Workers Party Declaration on Soviet Russia

[illegible]

The Russian Proletarian Revolution in November, 1917 [illegible] world. Following out a program that became clear in 1914 when the World War broke out; that gained in clearness in March, 1917, when the czar was dethroned and Kerensky became the leader of Russia; and that became inevitable in November, 1917, when disillusioned and desperate, the Russian workers and peasants demanded "peace and bread", the Russian Bolsheviki took the lead and demonstrated the method and way to proletarian emancipation. Leadership, determination and a plan of action in the interests of the workers and peasants as against the capitalist class and all of its institutions—these three things sealed the Russian working class revolution.

And all over the world, the workers by their support or antagonism evidenced their revolutionary or counter-revolutionary spirit and understanding.

The ranks of the workers divided. Even opponents of the War could not understand or accept a class war culminating in a proletarian class government. Filled with the humbug of "democracy"—that delusion of the capitalist system—they demanded of the proletarian government more "democracy" in the midst of a capitalist world that openly and shamelessly tramples on all "democracy".

The Russian workers well understood this "democracy". They knew that capitalist "democracy" was a fraud—as much a fraud in "free, democratic" America as in czaristic Russia. Acting on a doctrine that was early enunciated by James Madison, President of the United States, that the "first object of government" is the protection of the faculties of men, "from which the rights of property originate", the Russian workers and peasants instituted a government vesting all rights in the working class, and protecting them in these rights. It became one of the "first objects" of this government to suppress the class that hitherto had possessed these rights—the capitalist class—and that assuredly would wage war against the working class for the restitution of these rights.

Hence, unfalteringly and true to the historical mission of the working class, the Russian Soviets, the workers' organs of power, summoned to action by the Russian Bolsheviki, assumed control and established a Government of the Workers, Peasants and Soldiers. A proletarian dictatorship thru a Soviet Government was established—a government using the organized force of the working class, the civil and military power, in defense of the working class and its government.

The Socialists, the great betrayers of the working class in 1914, faced a similar problem in 1918. In November, 1918, the German workers had to decide between a proletarian revolution and a capitalist republic. Acting for the German workers, peasants and soldiers, the German Social-Democracy misled them and betrayed the revolution. It made a pact with the German capitalists. It sold out the revolution and put Stinnes on the throne of Germany. It was 1914, truly, that determined who were the friends and who were the enemies of the working class.

After November, 1917, the Russian workers were obliged to fight for four years against capitalist machinations to destroy their working class government. For four years they made the greatest sacrifices, they faced the greatest dangers, they turned from the pressing task of building up their country to the defense of the Revolution, which was the achievement of so many decades of suffering. Capitalist intrigue within, supported by foreign troops, foreign supplies and foreign gold; a blockade and war conducted against them by the capitalist world; industrial disorganization and technical sabotage—for four years, the Russian workers faced these enemies, while their Red Armies were at the front, fighting, bleeding and dying in order that the Revolution might be preserved.

Despite all this intrigue, Soviet Russia offered peace to the world. Soviet Russia wanted peace in order to rebuild the factories, railroads and bridges that were demolished by the civil war. She wanted peace to reopen the mines and cultivate the fields that were destroyed by the counter-revolutionary armies of Denikin, Kolchak and Wrangel. But peace was not given her: the capitalists of the world were determined that this first attempt of the workers to rule should be blasted.

But Soviet Russia won—no steel could penetrate the steel in the hearts of the soldiers of the Red Armies. Soviet Russia was victorious on the twenty-six fronts on which her armies fought.

Then, in 1921, came the draught with its harrowing, decimating consequences. Whole families were killed by hunger. Entire villages migrated and fled from the scourge. Disease and disaster invaded the country. Soviet Russia passed thru a year of horror that well might have spent her energy. But Soviet Russia was not to be conquered. A century of suffering and deprivation had prepared the Russian workers even for this trial.

Two other factors helped Soviet Russia in these struggles. The capitalist world stands before dissolution. Since the War, every capitalist country has passed thru a period of overproduction, underconsumption and devastating unemployment. Capitalist reconstruction has been a mockery—the workers of Europe are slowly breaking down under the lash of hunger. The international capitalists extracted billions of profit from the miseries and horrors of the War. These billions must be invested. Raw material for the promotion of industry must be found. Soviet Russia and Asia Minor represent the best fields of exploitation. Capitalist greed is stronger even than capitalist intrigue. Hence, one by one the capitalists have sought concessions and rights of exploitation from the Soviet Government. They have done so, despite the fact that the big capitalist governments either refuse to recognize the Soviet Government, or give it only formal recognition. For the capitalists well know that recognition of the Soviet Government will strengthen the workers' confidence in workers' rule and destroy the ridiculous tales about the Workers' Government that have been maliciously circulated about the world.

The people of Asia and Africa are under the domination of the Big Powers. India, Asia Minor, China, Egypt—all of them are primarily agricultural countries similar to Russia under the czars. The workers and peasants of these countries have suffered much and are suffering today from brutal, vicious exploitation and inhuman treatment at the hands of the hirelings in the employ of capitalist regimes. They have seen what the workers and peasants of Russia have accomplished, how they overthrew the rule of the master and established a government of their own.

The Near East, the prey of all the capitalist powers, has looked to Soviet Russia for support. And Soviet Russia, the Government of the Workers and Peasants, has given them the aid that workers always give to persecuted peoples. Soviet Russia stands behind Turkey against the assaults and designs of the capitalist world. The mighty strength of Soviet Russia, gathered during the five years of war of defense against the capitalist governments, has made the Soviet Government the dictator of policy in the Near East. In Siberia, also, Soviet diplomacy has forced the Japanese troops to evacuate the country, so that the Soviet power and influence now extend to the Pacific. Capitalism has suffered new defeats at the hands of the workers.

But the workers of the world still have a tremendous task. For five years especially the revolutionary workers have stood by Soviet Russia in her struggles, and have warded off many a disastrous blow. Two major tasks now stand before them.

1. The workers must help Soviet Russia reconstruct the country. Factories and mines, mills and railroads cannot operate because of the want of machinery. Raw material cannot be transported because the railroads lack rolling stock. Starvation has attacked sections of the country because food could not be transferred from one territory to the other. The capitalists hesitate to invest their surplus billions in Soviet Russia, since they will be subject to laws made by workers and peasants. They know that building up the country will strengthen the Soviet Regime. Hence the workers must invest their savings in Soviet Russia; they must become partners in the big enterprise of building up the country and putting the millions to work.

2. The workers must demand more than ever before, that Soviet Russia be recognized, and that trade relations with her be opened. The American revolutionists of 1776 stated that it is the right of any people to determine the kind of government under which they will live. It is the right of the Russian people to live unmolested by foreign capitalist intrigue under the government of their choosing. By five years of support, despite all attempts to thwart their purpose, the Russian workers and peasants have shown their determination to maintain the form of government that they adopted on November 7, 1917. It is the duty of the workers of the world to support them irrespective of whether they approve of the soviet form of government or not.

It is the task of the revolutionists to agitate and demonstrate in favor of Soviet Russia. In America it is a very important task to carry on this campaign of enlightenment owing to the hostile attitude of the government. Large sections of the American working class also are against Soviet Russia, owing to the slanderous propaganda that has been conducted against her. The reactionary leaders at present at the head of the American Federation of Labor, have misinformed and misled the workers. The malicious propaganda of part of the yellow Socialist press, with the Forward and the N. Y. Call at their front, together with the vicious lying agitation of such renegades as Schlesinger and Hillquit, makes it the imperative duty of all revolutionists to carry the truth to the workers, in order to establish a united front of the workers against imperialistic chicanery. The Workers Party, therefore, will regard it as one of its most important duties to wage an energetic propaganda and agitational campaign in behalf of Soviet Russia for reconstruction, recognition and non-interference in Russian affairs.

The question of navalizing the Great Lakes was settled by the United States and Great Britain by keeping warships off these waters, by neutralizing the lakes.

Now the United States backs Great Britain by declaring that all capitalist nations have a right to decide the question of navalizing the Black Sea, and of course the joint imperialist decision is that all capitalist nations have a right to send their murder machines into the peaceful waters of the Soviet Republic to threaten workers' rule, under the pretense that the Black Sea is an "international highway."

This duplicity is characteristic of the developing imperialist diplomacy of the United States.

"We propose peace to you, and you propose war against us," Tchitcherin, for Russia, told Curzon, for England.

Curzon would not be in a position to make his threats, and plan for new wars against Russia, if his near-bankrupt government was not supported by Washington.

Thus, says the New York Times, "this country at once takes again its place in European affairs."

By "this country," the Times, of course, means the diplomats at Washington and the money changers of Wall Street.

The workers are taking a different view of the situation. Let American labor, in co-operation with British labor, unite now against both their imperialist governments and silence this new threat of war against the rule of their comrades in Red Russia. Labor must and will have the last word, and it will announce the triumph of the workers over their oppressors.

Progressives Progress Backwards

This deals with that group of democrats and republicans in congress who delight in calling themselves "progressives."

Wheeler, of Montana, of course, denies he is either a "progressive," or a "radical." Radicals, he says, want to change the government. He feels he is a conservative. He wants things to remain as they are. Worse than that. He wants to go backwards, 150 years, back to "The Constitution!" and "The Declaration of Independence!" Shipsted, of Minnesota, and others sing the same tune.

LaFollette, of Wisconsin, supposed to be the leader of the progressives, makes progress by trying to push us back to the days of the stage coach and "the village blacksmith."

LaFollette is "agin the trusts," just like Roosevelt before him. He is fighting the proposed Armour-Morris merger of meat packing interests. He wants to fill the nation with competing packing houses, just as we once had a lot of stage coach lines and village blacksmith shops, instead of the national transportation system and trustified steel industry of today.

LaFollette thinks this will help the farmers. And Owen, of Oklahoma, Norris, of Nebraska, and others cry "Amen!"

LaFollette thinks all these competing packing houses will offer the farmers higher prices for their pigs and cattle, for their grain, for their poultry, for their dairy products. And there are a lot of farmers who believe that what LaFollette says is the truth and they follow him. And there is the tragedy.

LaFollette tries to make progress by going backwards. But the forces of evolution make progress, aided occasionally by revolution, by going forward. We are living in an era of greater trusts, not of trust busting. La Follette is 20 years late. Roosevelt and trust busting had their day a score of years ago.

This is not the day for the farmers, or the industrial workers, to be misled by a reactionary program, even when advanced by progressives, for busting the trusts in banks, steel, food, transportation, oil, or any other industrial or financial combination.

This is the day for wiping out private ownership in trustified industry, and its political expression,—the capitalist state. It is the day for advancing to the workers' state, for dispossessing capitalism and ushering in Communism—ownership by all.

Has Schlesinger Been Silenced?'

We have before us "The Advance," official organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and "Justice," official organ of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union.

The spokesman for the "Amalgamated" is filled to the brim with accounts of the triumphal return of Sidney Hillman from Soviet Russia, and his report of the work of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation.

Where Benjamin Schlesinger, head of the "International," has been extremely active in attacking and villifying the great undertaking of the "Amalgamated," we find in this issue of "Justice" not one single word, either for or against.

This at a time when a few words from Schlesinger, according to his usual style, might help bolster up the morale of the weakening attack on the First Workers' Republic. Schlesinger will surely be compelled to answer to Gompers for this delinquency.

Hillman is back. He will tour the country for the R. A. I. C. He will bring the truth to the workers of this country, the truth that will silence forever the villainous calumniators of Soviet Rule who parade as "Socialists" and "spokesmen for labor." It looks as if Schlesinger is among the first to choke upon his own lies.

William Jennings Bryan has endorsed La Follette's group in congress. We knew that someone would come forward to hang crepe on this "progressive" miscarriage.

Pershing Tries to Mop 'em Up

General John J. (Black Jack) Pershing has been on an expedition thru the middle west in an effort to "mop up the reds." In Chicago he had the zealous support of Brig.-Gen. Charles G. (Hell and Maria)-Dawes, who is a banker during business hours.

In fact, "Black Jack's" speech at Chicago was his Armageddon, as he evidently thought. The hero of the oil expedition into Mexico, attacked Governor Small, of Illinois, for his release of Lloyd, Lore, Owens and other Communists. He delivered a broadside against the Herrin coal miners. He again annihilated the Communist convention at Bridgeman, Mich. He predicted war in the Near East and the Far East.

All in all, when he got thru, the representatives of "Chicago's military, commercial, industrial, patriotic and other civic organizations" present, were ready to exhaust themselves in any form of "patriotic service."

Some yelled, "Impeach Small!" The New York Herald reported that one woman wanted to take the Illinois governor "by the nape of the neck and drag him thru the streets until the wind was out of him."

Pershing spoke for the Chicago Association of Commerce, that helped raise $50,000 to "save civilization" in Illinois against the Herrin coal miners, and he announced he is ready to be behind any new armies of deluded workers who will go forth blindly, a la in France, to save "world civilization" once more, this time from the terrible Russians and the Turks. In his own language:

"The Near East is seething with revolution. Altho we desire peace it is not difficult to imagine ourselves again forced into a conflict, as we were in 1917, IN THE DEFENSE OF CIVILIZATION."

Pershing's speech would have made a greater hit during the hectic days of the late war. Now it works like a dud. The bankers, the parasites, the profiteers applaud him. The great masses of labor are silent, or voice their protest when occasion offers.

Increased numbers of workers in this country, and in other lands, are being arrayed in opposition to Pershing's brand of "civilization," with its degrading child labor, its dehumanizing exploitation of men and women wage slaves, its recurring slaughter and maiming of millions in new wars.

Pershing failed to mop up "the reds," and those who sympathize with them, on his recent trip, because it is getting impossible for American capitalism to sell another war to American labor. Against Pershing's "civilization," the workers of all lands are more and more studying the "new civilization," the civilization that is being offered by the Russian Soviet Revolution.

This Capitalist Chaos

London and Lausanne are witnessing the twin failures of the capitalist allies to bring "law and order" out of the world chaos created by the recent war.

The conference at London has broken up. The British imperialists fear the workers of their own country, representing the second political power in the land, and they tremblingly refuse to back French imperialism in its aims to take over the Ruhr, the rich German industrial district.

Thus no basis has been found for the Brussels Conference planned for the near future, at which the Germans were to sit in at their own funeral and help determine the disposition of the corpse.

The Christmas season approaches and the British will not forgive the French their debts, because the United States will not do likewise, and the French refuse to make commensurate concessions to the bankrupt Germans. The debt and reparations problems thus remain as hopeless as ever.

In spite of the fact that the Russian delegates are having as difficult a time breaking into the various "private conferences" at Lausanne, as the Workers Party delegates had in getting a hearing in the Labor Party Conference, at Cleveland, nevertheless, Tchitcherin and his comrades are holding the center of the stage at the Swiss mountain resort.

England is willing to pay almost any price to win the French against the Turks, which means also against the Russians, and this is given as the reason for the British proposal to cancel the French debts. England put her stakes in the Near East on Greece and lost. It now seems as if the French are determined to make the British pay the biggest possible price for a united capitalist front.

In the meantime the New York Times, Dec. 12, gives a column of space to an article with the headline: "Red Army Called Finest in World; German Traveler Says Russia Could Muster 6,000,000 to 'Walk Thru Europe'."

Soviet Russia does not want to walk her Red Army thru Europe or any other part of the world. She wants peace. But she is strong enough to defend herself at home, and powerful enough to insist on her rights abroad.

The chaos within the world capitalist structure is shaking it to pieces without any aid from the outside. That was the story of Genoa and The Hague. It is the story of London and Lausanne.

[illegible] Arbitration

Many [illegible] have been duped into having their differences [illegible] arbitrated.

While [illegible] arbitration, however, the coal miners have allowed [illegible] to be weakened by district settlements. This folly is now being felt in the negotiations for a new settlement to take the place of the present agreement that expires March 31.

The coal operators have a clever proposal. They say to the miners, let us settle by districts. Then disputes remaining unsettled shall be submitted to a national arbitration board appointed by the President.

This means that the mine owners could, thru dilatory tactics, practically force the entire wage question to settlement by a Harding packed board of arbitrators. It was "arbitration" thru the Railroad "Labor" Board, with its members representing the bosses and "the public," that forced the recent railroad strike.

The anthracite miners got their fill of arbitration in 1920, when they were asked by President Wilson to refer their differences with the mine owners to the United States Anthracite Coal Commission.

This commission, in making its decision, disregarded all the testimony submitted by the mine workers. Its findings were opposed to the expert advice of its own neutral economic advisers. It, therefore, fixed wages far below accepted living standards.

Arbitration never settled anything. It is a trap into which traitor labor officials lead their memberships. The owners of industry and government spokesmen have never shown any desire to throw prices and profits into the hopper of arbitration. Only the wages and conditions of labor are to be compromised by arbitration.

The coal miners must never again place the weapon of arbitration in the hands of the mine owners. Neither is the proposal of the miners' officials, led by President Lewis, satisfactory. They urge the old plan of settlement on the basis of an agreement in the central competitive field, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Western Pennsylvania.

The mining industry extends to all sections of the country. Any settlement reached should include all the miners, just as any strike declaration should call 100 percent of all coal diggers to the industrial battle line.

Miners! Oppose arbitration! Favor the general strike of all coal miners! Demand the national agreement for the whole mining industry!

That must be your stand now, and you must stand by it to pave the way for a victory in the struggle that the bosses will force upon you in the spring.

Why This New Outburst?

We are asked by large numbers of our readers to explain the latest outburst against "The Reds in the United States," this time led by Frank A. Munsey's New York Herald.

These daily articles cannot be classified as news, since The Boston Transcript and a string of other kept sheets only recently covered practically the same ground in an extensive broadside. They must, therefore, be considered as propaganda, capitalist propaganda against the rising Communist movement in this country.

Of course, the "Socialist" press, like the New York Call, that believes the war mania is giving way to a return to "peaceful democracy," interprets this new attack as merely a hangover of that orgy of "red baiting" that originated with the Palmer regime under Wilson, and that has come down to us under Daugherty and Burns. We cannot look backward with "The Call." We must look forward to the future struggles of the workers of this country.

Munsey is one of those who urges unity of the two capitalist parties. He sees the rising party of labor. Others see it. They do not want it. But they know it is coming. And they are going to fight it. And they know that the American Communist movement, thru the Workers Party, is carrying on the only militant agitation for political unity of America's workers against their oppressors. So Munsey must discredit the Workers Party, and it is against the Workers Party that most of his propaganda campaign is directed.

It is significant that the Wall Street Journal, organ of great finance, devotes considerable space to a review of all these alleged anti-red revelations under the heading, "Reds Are Active in American Propaganda." Wall Street is interested in plundering labor thru profiteering industry. It isn't looking backward with the "Socialist" Call, to the war days of Palmer and Wilson. It is looking ahead, with those who sponsor it, to the days when the great amalgamation campaign of the Trade Union Educational League will result in greater and more effective struggles of solidified labor against concentrated capital.

To be sure, the capitalist propaganda against "The Reds in America" will help Burns and Daugherty fight the impeachment proceedings against Harding's attorney general. But this can be only a lesser motif.

The slogan, "Amalgamation and a Labor Party," of American militant labor, raised thru the Trade Union Educational League and the Workers Party, is stirring the workers to action. But it is also provoking an angry howling among labor's enemies.

The attacks of the present and the past against labor's militants are as nothing compared to those that are coming. The broadsides of Munsey's Herald and its counterparts thruout the land are useful in that they give us an opportunity to reply. They demand more than ever that we build up great propaganda organs of our own to reply with broadsides of our own. We must not only strengthen the press that we have. We must create a daily Communist press to reach the masses who may today be misled and prejudiced by malicious falsehood, even by admitted facts cleverly turned into misrepresentations for a purpose.

Karl Liebknecht said, "The future belongs to us." But it is only by struggling in the spirit of Karl Liebknecht that we make ourselves worthy of the future that is destined to be ours.

AN ORGAN OF REVOLUTIONARY [illegible] EXPRESSION

[illegible] SATURDAY, DECEMBER [illegible], 1922 [illegible]

abor Party Must Be Forme

nifesto on the Cleveland Conference by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Part

The Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action is at an end and the hopes of labor have again been betrayed. This conference was the outcome of the movement among the indu workers and farmers for independent political action. The industrial workers and farmers have, during the years since the war, received heavy blows from the government. They have learn from their experiences that the government is an instrument thru which the capitalists protect and advance their interests and which they use to fight against the workers and farmers.

The farmers have learned to know this from the legislation by the government which has made worse the exploitation from which they suffer. The industrial worker has learned it thru injunctions, court decisions, railroad labor boards and soldiers, used against them in their struggles to maintain a decent standard of living.

The result of these experiences is that millions of industrial workers and farmers have voiced their demand for a political party which would fight their battles. They demanded a party representing the interests of the industrial workers and farmers to carry on their political struggles against the old political parties and against the employers and exploiters. This desire of the industrial workers and farmers was betrayed by a group of reactionary leaders who sat in the Cleveland Conference.

STRUGGLE AT CLEVELAND

The struggle in the Cleveland Conference was between a group of reactionary trade union officials aided by the Socialist Party, who wish to continue the policy of "rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies of labor" on the Republican and Democratic tickets and the [illegible] industrial workers for an aggressive, militant political party of labor.

The representatives of the railroad unions were against the labor party. The representatives of the organizations of the well-to-do farmers did not want a labor party. The Socialist Party used its strength in the convention against the labor party.

This bloc played the part of the betrayers of the aspirations of the industrial workers in the Cleveland Conference. They organized a machine to control the conference. They used all the parliamentary tricks to gain their end. Thru W. H. Johnston, President of the Machinist's Union, who was chairman of the conference, they headed off every effort to make the conference the means of realizing the fighting political organization which will fight labor's political battles.

These reactionary labor leaders do not want a labor party. The road to public office is easier thru political deals such as the policy of "rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies of labor" on the old party ticket leaves open. They betrayed the interests of the exploited industrial workers and farmers in order to advance their political fortunes.

This group of leaders had participated in the La Follette conference in Washington and they want to make the movement for independent political action by the industrial workers and farmers the tail to the kite of the ambition of La Follette, Borah and other so-called "progressives."

Industrial workers and farmers of the United States! You cannot win relief from the exploitation by the banks, the railroads, the coal barons and industrial magnates thru another "progressive" movement. The La Follette-Borah "progressive" group does not represent the interest of the exploited farmer and industrial workers. It represents the interest of the middle-class, of the well-to-do farmers [illegible] It is a backward, reactionary group because it advocates policies which mean an effort to go backward economically in place of forward.

Should the group which betrayed the industrial workers and farmers at Cleveland gain power it would quickly become as great an enemy of the exploited industrial workers and farmers as the servants of the capitalists who now carry on the government machine in the interest of the capitalists. All these "progressives" want of the industrial workers and farmers is to use them as the means of gaining power—and then they will betray them!

The Socialist Betrayal

Even greater than the betrayal by the Johnston-Stone-Keating "progressive" group at Cleveland was the betrayal of the industrial workers and farmers by the Socialist Party.

The Socialist Party claims to be a working class political organization. The Socialist Party claims that it is for independent political action by the industrial workers and farmers. In the past the Socialist Party has appealed to the workers and farmers to suport it because it represents their class interests.

At the Cleveland Conference the Socialist Party representatives aligned themselves with the reactionary trade union leaders who were fighting the idea of a labor party. Morris Hillquit was the lieutenant of W. H. Johnston, chairman of the conference, in heading off everything which would help the advocates of the labor party.

The Socialist representatives sat

MOSCOW, Nov. 10.—Gregory Zinoviev delivers the second part of his speech on the tactics of the Communist International. He points out that:

Taken as a whole, the economic world situation since the Third Congress confirms our theses of last year. A temporary economic improvement may be noted in America, Japan, England, France and other countries. This does not in the least alter the actual fact of the decay of capitalism in Europe. The crises nowadays are not merely periodical. THERE IS NO SALVATION FOR CAPITALISM.

The objective position is revolutionary. In international politics the contentions become more and more acute. The Entente is falling to pieces

Take Liberties With Constitution

(Federated Press Correspondent)

TUCSON, Ariz.—The late awakening of the business men of this section to the "menace of the reds" was indicated in a talk before the Rotary club by William Blair, district governor, Kiwanis club, in which he urged that the Rotarians and Kiwanians co-operate to overcome the radical tendencies of the times. These, he declares, are bolshevistic and have a tendency to extremes. Liberties are being taken with the constitution of the United States, he said.

New "Labor Party" Drive Launched

The new drive for the Labor Party was launched at the meeting held in New York City at Park Palace, 110th Street, at which three of the Workers Party delegates to Cleveland, C. E. Ruthenberg, William F. Dunne and Ludwig Lore were the speakers. J. Louis Engdahl acted as chairman. Similar meetings will be held in all sections of the country.

A Labor Program vs. a "Progressive Program"

The program adopted by the Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action shows how completely the middle-class "progressive" elements dominated that conference and how far the conference is from expressing the interests of labor. In contrast with it stands the proposed "Program of the Labor Party" presented to the delegates by the Workers Party. Here is the program adopted:

Do You Want This?

The repeal of the Esch-Cummins railroad law and operation of the railroads for the benefit of the people.

The public control of water power in the interest of the people.

The direct election of the President and Vice-President by the people and extension of direct primary laws in all States.

Action by Congress to end the practice of courts of declaring legislation unconstitutional.

Enactment of the Norris-Sinclair Consumers and Financing Corporation bill, designed to increase prices farmers receive and reduce prices consumers pay for the farm products, and the creation of an independent system of food producers' credits.

Increased tax rates on large incomes and inheritances and payment of a soldiers' bonus by restoring the tax on excess profits.

Legislation providing minimum essential standards of employment for women, equality for women and men, while improving existing political social and industrial standards, and State action to insure maximum benefit of Federal maternity and infancy acts.

Or Will You Demand This?

The "Labor Party Program" offered by the Workers Party delegates was as follows:

The impression gained by casual readers of the story was that witnesses for the prosecution, which is being financed to the extent of $50,000 by the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, are in danger of their lives if they say anything adverse to the union miners on trial. But this impression was not substantiated by any definite evidence.

[illegible] the imperialist adventures of the American bankers and financial lords. Imperialism turned Europe into a shambles from 1914 to 1918 in which ten million lives and hundreds of billions of wealth were destroyed. In spite of the League of Nations which was to end war, in spite of the Washington Conference treaties, imperialism is threatening the world with another orgy of bloodshed and destruction, and in this new imperialist struggle the government of the United States is playing the most aggressive part.

It is in the struggle against the wage-workers, against the workers in the labor unions, however, that the government has shown most clearly that it is a government of the exploiters, fighting the battles of the exploiting class against the oppressed and exploited workers.

Government injunctions have been issued against organized labor by the scores in the great industrial struggles since the end of the war. A federal judge tried to destroy the United Mine Workers by declaring it an outlaw organization. The Daugherty injunction, which still stands as the law of the land, swept away all the rights of the railway shopmen, free speech, free press, freedom of assemblage, the right to organize, the right

Federal soldiers were used against the miners of West Virginia. Federal troops were used to help beat the mine workers and steel workers into submission in the strikes of 1919. State militia sprang to arms in aid of the exploiters in many states in the great industrial struggles of 1922. Private armies of armed guards are maintained by the employers. Frame-ups against militant workers are regularly used to railroad such workers to prison.

These facts prove that the government of the United States, under both Republican and Democratic administrations, is virtually a dictatorship of Wall Street, of the bankers, railroad kings, coal barons and industrial magnates to maintain the system of oppression and exploitation under which the wage-workers and farmers suffer. The only answer which the wage-workers and farmers can make to this dictatorship which upholds capitalist robbery and oppression, is to organize their political power independent of the capitalist parties and to enter the struggle to wrest political power from the hands of their exploiters.

The Labor Party enters the political arena as the expression of the [illegible] the Constitution provisions which they hoped would forever protect the interests of their class.

A majority of the people of the United States cannot change the Constitution. The Constitution contains a series of checks and balances which are intended to make it impossible for a majority antagonistic to the ruling class to make its will effective. The members of the House of Representatives are elected every two years, the President every four years, the members of the Senate every six years, so that a complete change of the government can only be made thru elections spread over six years. The Senate has a veto over the decisions of the House, the President can veto the actions of both bodies, and over and above the House, Senate and President stands the Supreme Court which can nullify laws which all three unite in passing.

Millions of workers are disfranchised thru naturalization laws. Hundreds of thousands of citizens cannot vote because of residential qualifications which fall most heavily upon workers who must move from [illegible] Under these conditions to talk of "democracy" is to throw sand in the eyes of the workers. [illegible] "American Democracy" is a fraud. Such formal democracy as is written into the Constitution and the laws of the country is camouflage to hide the real character of the rule of the capitalists.

The Labor Party will support such measures as the direct election of the president, the abolition of the senate and the veto power of the president and the ending of the right of the Supreme Court to declare laws unconstitutional. It realizes, however, that such measures cannot change the essential character of the government as an instrument of the exploiters for use against the workers. In order that the government may become an instrument of the workers' struggles against their exploiters the whole machinery of the existing government must be replaced by organs of government springing out of the workers' organizations.

INDUSTRIAL

To strengthen the workers in their struggle for better wages and working conditions the Labor Party will carry on the fight for legislation to prevent the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes; to prohibit the use of troops during strikes; for the abolition of all industrial courts and government boards to regulate wages

[illegible] service in the army during the World War.

POLITICAL

The Labor Party will work for the restoration of the unrestricted right of freedom of speech, press and assemblage. Toward this end it will seek to repeal all so-called criminal syndicalism and sedition laws. It will seek to liberalize the naturalization laws and to abolish residential qualification of the suffrage.

The Labor Party will exert all its strength against the militarism which seeks to build up a great military and naval establishment in this country. The Washington agreement is already a scrap of paper. The building of other than battleships is continuing at an increasing rate. Proposals for increase of the army, for new conscription laws, for building air force are continually emanating from the agents of the exploiters in the government. Against this and the enormous bureaucracy and spy system maintained by the federal government the Labor Party will fight with all its power.

The Labor Party declares itself against the restriction of immigration and against the registration of aliens. Such registration can only be the basis of persecution of the alien workers.

Chicago Labor Hits Socialists, Renews Its Fight for Labor Party

By EARL R. BROWDER

Editor, The Labor Herald

CHICAGO.—The Chicago Federation of Labor is not going along with any such scab, dual organization to the Gompers' policies of the American Federation of Labor as the Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action, declared [illegible] John Fitzpatrick, on reporting to the federation on what happened in the gathering at the [illegible] metropolis.

"How the Socialists can do so is beyond my understanding. We were willing to go into conference with all other groups to try to work out a common understanding and common direction but when in Cleveland they definitely adopted a constitution which follows the Non-Partisan plan of working with the Republican and Democratic parties they became scab and dual to Sam Gompers.

"The Chicago Federation will have nothing to do with such a policy. If we have to go along that reactionary path we will be regular and go with the A. F. of L. But we are not weakening in our position that there must be definitely a Workers' Political Party. We are going right ahead".

Secretary Edward N. Nockels also reported and told about the methods of control used by the political fakers. They controlled the committees by appointment and then refused to report out resolutions. Even in the A. F. of L., this kind of method is not used. They at least report out a substitute resolution for those they do not like.

He told about James Oneal, Socialist, voting in committee to not report out the resolution for a Labor Party on the grounds that the time was not ripe for independent political action.

This was received with laughter and boos by the delegates of the Federation.

The gathering which was a regular meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor enthusiastically supported the attitude of their delegates who represented the Farmer-Labor party [illegible] Cleveland.

When a Socialist tried to defend the idea that a Labor Party was impossible of success, he received a [illegible] reception.

The Chicago Federation demonstrated that the movement for a Labor Party is going right ahead and that the sabotage of the reactionary officials in alliance with the Socialist Party will not be allowed to stop the work which has been begun.

When Workers Party members, delegates to the Federation, spoke of their party's suport to the Labor Party movement and pledged continued energetic activity they were received with applause.

Vote for Labor Party Divided Conference at Cleveland Into "Lefts" and "Rights"

NOTE:—This is the concluding article by William F. Dunne on the Conference for Progressive Political Action at Cleveland. It tells of the debate and vote on the resolution calling for the organization of a Labor Party. It arrived too late for publication in last week's issue.

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The Conference for Progressive Political Action defeated the Labor Party resolution introduced by Robert M. Buck, of Chicago, by a vote of 52 to 64, after a stormy session lasting over three hours. This, the closing session of the Conference, was an entire reversal of the apathy that has marked this gathering.

Debate on the Labor Party resolution split the Conference into very definite Right and Left Wing groups. The Socialist Party delegates took no part in the discussion, not a single one of them took the floor.

James Oneal, their representative on the resolution committee, voted against the Labor Party resolution in committee despite the fact that "The New York Call," previous to the Conference, had stated the position of the Socialist Party delegation as being for clear-cut, independent political action by the farmers and workers.

Revelations made on the floor during the debate, and statements by committee members proved that thruout the entire Conference, Socialist Party delegates played with the most reactionary wing of the Conference, such as the officers of international unions and others opposing the labor party.

The ablest speech of the evening was made by R. D. Cramer, of Minneapolis, who pointed out that previous attempts at independent political action have failed because they did not represent the class interests of the groups who launched them.

He showed that the tendency at this time is to force alignment of exploiters and producers around their economic interests.

He pointed out the fact that entering the primaries of the old Parties, and running candidates under their banner resulted only in befogging the minds of the workers, and retarding working class organization.

Norman Thomas, of "The Nation," Robert M. Buck and John Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor put up a splendid fight for the resolution. Fitzpatrick pointed out the fact that thru the Democrat and Republican Parties the interests behind them had succeeded in brutalizing a large proportion of the population. He produced figures to show the extent of mental and physical defectiveness among the wage earners as a result of the unchallenged rule by these groups.

Principal opposition to the resolution on the floor came from the officials of the railway unions. B. M. Jewel, president of the railway department of the American Federation of Labor, based his argument on the fact that the railwaymen wanted something now. He did not explain how the program of the majority would bring immediate relief when its most harmless provision would require at least two years to enact.

The closing session clearly showed that the militant groups of the wage earners and farmers want a political party of their own and that the inertia of men in official positions is the chief obstacle in the way.

Considerable light was thrown on the attitude of the farmers and workers in the Northwest thru two communications which were read during the discussion. One was from the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, the other was from the Non-Partisan League of that State. Both communications stated that the organizations had sent no delegates to the Conference because they felt that the Conference was committed to a line of action they believed hopeless. This, with the surprising strength developed by the Labor Party supporters in the closing session of the Conference, leaves no doubt that very soon the sentiment for independent political action by the producers will crystalize into action.

James Oneal read a statement on behalf of the Socialist Party delegation repudiating the assertions made by Edward Keating relative to the Workers Party being un-American, etc. The statement said the Socialist Party was not opposed to seating the Workers Party for this reason, but that they believed it to be a disruptive force. The delegates present were challenged to deny that the Workers Party was disruptive. Jack Brandon, representing the World War Veterans took up the challenge and was punished for his temerity by being denied the floor for the rest of the evening.

A fight was made by the Left Wing to get the other resolutions, such as those demanding recognition of Soviet Russia, amnesty for political prisoners, before the Conference, but all these matters were referred to the National Committee for action.

The most radical action on the part of the Conference was the taking up of a collection just before adjournment to help defray expenses. In this one thing, at least, the Conference adopted the tactics of the Workers Party.

The really important results of the Conference were obtained entirely against the wishes of its dominant group. They are: first, placing the Workers Party on the map as one of the most important factors in political life of the wage earner and farmers; second, isolating the Socialist Party from the militant trade union elements and definitely aligning it with officialdom on the political, as well as the industrial field; third, it showed that only by artificial methods and brazen trickery has the launching of a party representing the class interests of the toilers in industry and on the farms been delayed.

It's Here, Seven Reel Movie Film That Shows Russia Thru the Shadows

By WILLILAM F. KRUSE

The seven reel motion picture, "Russia Thru the Shadows," presented by the Friends of Soviet Russia as an aid in its campaign for the Russian Orphans' School-Homes, was given a private showing at the Civic Club.

Two hundred representatives of the press, and of organizations sympathetic toward the Russian cause, attended this showing.

The film was enthusiastically received and a glorious success is predicted for it when its road dates begin.

The first of these was at South Bend, Ind., Dec. 19-20, in connection with a three-day bazaar that enlisted the support of the entire city.

The film begins with the Czar's regime, flashing some fine world war pictures in which the conscript army is shown in action. The overthrow of the Czar and the Kerensky government follows, great mass demonstrations move across the screen, the Bolsheviks are shown at work to bring order out of chaos.

The second part shows the armies of intervention moving across the mountains and their defeat by the Red Army. The famine area is shown in harrowing detail, followed by the gloriously successful relief work and agricultural reconstruction.

Applications for the showing of the film have been received from all parts of the country and as fast as censorship provisions are complied with the picture will be routed. Some slight objection was raised against a few of the "labor titles" by the New York censors but no change in the film was demanded. One complete set of film will be sent to Canada where interest in relief activity is every bit as high as in the States.

Anyone interested in getting this picture shown should communicate at once with the Pictorial Department, Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 W. 13th Street, New York.

Amalgamation in Great Britain

The Daily Herald, London, reports that, by overwhelming majorities, the members of the National Union of General Workers, the National Amalgamated Union of Labor, and the Municipal Employes' Association have decided to amalgamate. It is claimed that this amalgamation will create the biggest labor union in the world. The organizations in question have Will Thorne, J. N. Bell and P. J. Jevenan as secretaries, the first two being members of the British Parliament, elected by the Labor Party.

What Happened at Cleveland?

Wm. F. Dunne, Labor Editor of THE WORKER, will give an intimate report on the Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action, Friday, Dec. 29, at the Amalgamated Foodworkers' Hall, 133 W. 51st St., at the regular meeting of the West Side Branch, Workers Party. All members of the Workers Party are invited to attend and hear of the Holy Alliance consummated between the "S. P." and the Gompers' machine. Comrade Dunne was a delegate from the Workers Party but was not seated. Admission is free.

Where the oil is, look out for war.

Protecting Morgan's Billions

America went into the world-war to collect the billions that J. Pierpont Morgan and Co. with other banking interests had loaned privately to the Paris allies during the three war years 1914-1917.

The United States government is now called upon to loan a billion and a half dollars to Germany. This is only another move to help Morgan, to safeguard his loans in France. Morgan has been to Washington to talk the matter over with Hughes and Harding. The German ambassador, Wiedfelt, himself a capitalist, has been in New York in conference with Morgan.

Communists have been urging the extension of credits to Soviet Russia. Then why not favor a loan to Germany?

Communists know that every cent extended in credits to the Workers' Republic will be used to reconstruct its industry and agriculture and develop its vast natural resources.

A reconstructed Russia would send a vast stream of foodstuffs and raw materials into Western Europe, the only salvation from the chaos produced by the recent universal slaughter.

A billion and a half dollars to Germany would not benefit the masses of the German people. That loan would be passed on immediately to France, and she would use it to maintain her great military machine, also to pay off her debts to the House of Morgan. Wall Street's financial overlord joins the heads of the governments in the United States, Great Britain and Italy in considering French imperialism gone insane in its desire to occupy the Ruhr, the German industrial, coal and iron district. They all see, what France is blind to, that French invasion of the Ruhr would complete the chaos in Germany, and reflect itself in the wrecking of the French financial fabric.

American workers will not get enthusiastic about a billion and a half dollars taken out of the fruits of their labors and turned over to Stinnes, Cuno and Co., in Germany, in league with Morgan and the bankers of London, Paris and Rome, to keep not only the workers of Germany, but of all the world in continued subjection to a "stabilized" capitalism.

Let America's toiling men and women, therefore, increase their demands for a loan and credits to Soviet Russia. Let them oppose this Christmas gift to Morgan and the bankers of Europe to strengthen their oppression of labor everywhere. Soviet Russia alone can really save Europe and set civilization on the road to new and greater achievements for the happiness and welfare of mankind.

Marcel Cachin and Vaillant-Couturier, French Communists, have been sentenced to pay fines of 2,000 francs and to six months imprisonment for publishing an anti-conscription article in the Communist paper, Le Conscrit. They are both members of the French chamber of deputies, and are supposed to be immune from punishment on that account. But little things like that are not supposed to stand in the way where Communists are concerned.

Among the numerous gatherings held in Moscow incidental to the Fourth Congress of the Communist International was the participation by representatives of 14 countries in the [illegible] co-operative societies. Longuet Still with Us Making Cheap, Bombastic Attacks Against Communism

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

Georges Clemenceau, apostle of human slaughter, has returned to his "dear France," where he was premier during the war.

But Jean Longuet remains for a little while longer as a barrage against the alliance of America's workers with rising Communism in Soviet Russia.

And Albert Thomas, the French "Socialist" munitions minister during the war, who is now the labor expert of the League of Nations, the Black International, has arrived and is sojourning in our midst. Surely these are all "respectable men".

Clemenceau raised the horror of a Russian - German - Turkish alliance against the capitalist allies. Longuet, under American "Socialist" auspices, attacks the Communist International. Thomas would smother revolutionary labor aspirations with false hopes for a universal eight-hour day. What a trinity! What a bulwark for things as they are.

I went to hear Longuet speak to workers in Brooklyn on "Russia and World Socialism". What I heard was a cheap attack on Communism, no reason and much fury.

Longuet has lost the enthusiasm I beheld in him 12 years ago at the Copenhagen (1910) Congress of the Second International, its last gathering before the war. He seemed to have lost the faith he once had. He speaks like an aged college professor droning an old lecture, listless, unconvincing.

The Communists have gone over to the Fascisti in Italy, he charged. The Russians tried to stab us in the back at the Conference of the three Internationals at Berlin. Look at the rule they established with the bayonets of the Red Army in Georgia. Thus he continued. No discussion of fundamental divisions between the revolutionary Socialism of the Communists, and the traitor "Socialism" of the Second International. Merely a clap-trap assault. Just a fogging of issues.

Longuet is not important except that, parading as the grandson of Karl Marx, he has won the ear of a few American workers.

I heard Scott Nearing in a Rand School Lecture repeat the same silly attack on the Italian Communists.

And now comes Joseph W. Sharts, the "Socialist Party" of Ohio, editor of the Miami Valley (Dayton) Socialist and chimes in with this anti-Communist chorus to the tune of, "scratch an ultra-radical under the skin and you will find a lieutenant of the bourgeoisie", referring especially to the Italians.

Longuet gave no facts in support of his charge. He was too busy piling up charges to offer any supporting testimony. He had two meetings the same night and couldn't answer questions.

Scott Nearing was cornered, however. His defense of his charge was that labor unions that had formerly supported the Communists had now gone over to the Fascisti, that the mob that might have supported the Communist "dictatorship" was now supporting the Mussolini "dictatorship". No mention of a single Communist of any prominence having deserted to the Fascisti.

It is admitted that some elements of the Italian labor unions have given way under the Fascisti terror. But these are not the Communist elements. No union under Communist control has gone Fascisti. The Italian Communist Party stands as the only bulwark opposing Fascism. It has recently been reinforced by the majority of the Italian Socialist Party, headed by Serrati, editor of the party organ, Avanti, applying for affiliation with the Communist International.

The alliance of the Serrati Socialist elements in the Italian Confederation of Labor with the Communists is giving the forces inspired by the Red International of Labor Unions the whip hand in Italy's central labor body. It is in this crisis that the Right Wing Socialists go cap in hand to the Fascisti fake labor unions and urge co-operation and fusion to combat the Communists. Thus we have the alliance between D'Aragona, the traitor Socialist, and Rossini, the anti-Communist I. W. W. from the United States who is now general secretary of the Fascisti labor unions.

These "Socialists", Longuet, Nearing, Sharts, fail to mention that Italy's military dictator, Mussolini, is a former member of the Italian Socialist Party, that he never belonged to the Italian Communist Party. They fail to state that the Italian Socialists of the Second International, Turati, D'Aragona & Co., sought to join the Mussolini-Fascisti Dictatorship but were refused admission to the government.

It is Communist strength alone that challenges Fascisti rule in Italy and the workers of all countries will learn this in spite of the "Socialist" smoke screen attack.

He Was Stabbed in the Back

Longuet says he was stabbed in the back by the Russian Communists at the Berlin Conference. This was his way of saying that the Russians merely wanted a world united front with other working class elements so that they could convert workers still enlisted under "Socialist" standards to Communism.

This is a confession by Longuet of Socialist inability to get Communist workers to desert their cause for yellow Socialism. Hillquit made a similar confession when he led the fight to keep the delegates of the Workers Party out of the Cleveland Conference for Progressive Political Action. Communists are anxious to make their appeal to the masses. "Socialists" are trying to maintain an unscalable wall around the membership and support they still retain. That is why the Communists are not afraid to urge the united front; why the "Socialists" fear it.

Similarly Longuet's frantic appeal for the Mensheviks of Georgia, who maintained their rule for a little while with the aid of the bayonets of the Paris allies. Longuet has not yet found out, what all the Versailles imperialists have discovered, that the oppressed nations everywhere, especially in the Near East, recognize Soviet Russia as their friend, and that that is why the Soviet Republics of Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan stand solid as a rock for the Red Rule of Communism and show no desire for the Yellow Rule of the Second International "Socialists." Longuet again confesses the hopelessness of his position by resurrecting the ghost of Menshevik Rule in Georgia that was played with and rattled for a time by MacDonald and the Snowdens in England, and by Kautsky, in Germany, Kautsky who is now urging "Socialist" participation in the government of the Industrial Kaiser Stinnes.

Longuet came to the United States with no real message for the American workers. His meetings have aroused no enthusiasm for the brand of "Socialism" he has espoused in common with the American "Socialist" Party. He will leave these shores leaving no regrets behind him.

Labor Defense Council Report

Charles Krumbein, District Organizer, District No. 8, reports that the general defense fund already raised by the Labor Defense Council totals $20,000 nationally, of which about $5,000 was raised within the district, with headquarters in Chicago.

Of this $5,000 about $3,000 was contributed by members of the Workers Party, 30 per cent of the members responding to the day's pay appeal.

Of the $90,000 cash and Liberty Bond bail raised nationally for the victims of the Michigan raids, about $40,000 was furnished by this district.

Local Labor Defense Councils are functioning in Chicago, Ill., Milwaukee and Racine, Wisc. The comrades of Lake County, Ind., are also on the job and doing good work.

In the final session of the conference the Socialist delegates introduced a statement declaring that they were not against the Workers Party delegates because they were "un-American and against the flag", but because they did not believe in the method of democracy—the Socialists apologizing for American democracy after their experience at Albany when their representatives were thrown out of the state legislature because they were Socialists!

Industrial workers and farmers of the United States! The Socialist parties everywhere have shown themselves to be betrayers of the workers. Kerensky betrayed the Russian workers. Scheidemann betrayed the workers of Germany. In Italy the Fascisti rule the workers thru violence and bloodshed because of a Socialist betrayal in time of crisis. The American Socialists, the Hillquits and Bergers do not wait for the time of revolutionary struggle for their betrayals. They betray the workers at the first sign of independent action by the industrial workers and farmers, as in the Cleveland Conference!

The Fight for the Labor Party

The struggle for the formation of a labor party in the Cleveland Conference was carried on by the Farmer - Labor Party delegates, the delegates from the Chicago Federation of Labor and other central labor bodies and state federations, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers delegates and by the Workers Party delegates.

The Workers Party delegates were refused seats in the conference by the Johnston-Keating-Hillquit machine. It was known to this anti-labor party bloc that the Workers Party delegates would carry on an aggressive fight for a labor party, that its delegates would begin the fight at the opening of the conference and fight every inch of the way to the end of the conference.

Such a fight might have won the day even in this conference dominated by the Johnston-Hillquit machine. Thru such a fight many delegates who were uncertain of the right policies for the conference to pursue could have been won for the labor party. The delegates from the United Mine Workers, who played no important part in the conference, might have been compelled to take an open stand for the policy which their organization has endorsed. The delegates from some of the farmers organizations would have been brought into line.

But the reactionary machine knew the danger. They knew that if the Workers Party delegation sat in the convention they might lose in their effort to make the conference a tail to the LaFollette movement. They first tried to bar the Workers Party delegates by dodging the issue thru not reporting their credentials and when forced to take a stand Chairman Johnston railroaded a decision of the credentials committee to bar them without giving the delegates a chance to act on the question.

Altho the Workers Party delegates were barred, their influence upon the conference was not eliminated. The Workers Party literature voicing the demands of the industrial workers and farmers for a labor party was in the hands of the delegates. The Workers Party program for a labor party was presented to the delegates to contrast against the ridiculous "progressive" legislative program adopted by the betrayers of the labor party.

The Labor Party Will Come

Industrial workers and farmers of the United States! The struggle at Cleveland was only the first skirmish in the battle for the Labor Party.

The life experiences of the industrial workers and farmers which have aroused the demand for independent political action will make the demand louder. The use of the governmental power against the workers and farmers will yet arouse such a powerful movement for the labor party that it will sweep all the [illegible]

[illegible] labor party.

The Workers Party calls upon the farmers to place their organizations on record for the labor party, for independent political action of the farmers and industrial workers against their common exploiters.

Industrial workers and farmers! The labor party is a milestone on the road to better things for the industrial workers and farmers. The labor party must be formed if the struggle against those who amass great fortunes out of the labor of farmers and industrial workers is to be won.

The past political movements of the industrial workers and farmers have been lost in the mire of "progressivism." This time labor must build its own party for a winning struggle against its enemy.

Forward to the Labor Party!

Down with "progressivism" and the betrayers of labor!

Forward to the Workers' Republic and the Rule of Labor!

INTO THE LIMELIGHT

By Harry Godfrey

A talented Russian dancer came to the United States not long ago. She danced wonderfully. But New York paid no attention to her. Somebody sent her to a press agent.

"How did you escape from the Bolsheviks?" the press agent asked.

"I didn't," she said. "I just came."

"Yes, you did," he insisted. "The Bolsheviks burned your home, stole your money, murdered your husband, insulted you, and threw you into a dungeon for six months. Then you bribed your jailer, escaped, suffered untold hardships, disguised yourself as a coal heaver, and finally got to the land of freedom."

The next day her picture was in the paper, her name in electric lights on Broadway, and her salary trebled.

Hiram Johnson—"Progressive"

By MAX SHACHTMAN

William J. Burns is one of the most labor-hating government officials of national notoriety. So reactionary is he that even Sam Gompers, who is not very much noted for even a spark of liberalism, is becoming [illegible] in accusing him of most of the crimes in the decalogue before the Ju[illegible] Committee hearings for impeaching the boss of Burns, Harry Daugherty, attorney general.

Yet, in spite of this, at the Dec. 13th hearing before the committee, the man who sprang to the defense and gave a "glowing endorsement" of Burns's character and ability" was none other than the sterling "liberal", the confirmed "progressive", the, in reality, cheap politician and reactionary, Hiram Johnson, Senator from California.

Thru some incomprehensible, tortured logic, Johnson has acquired a sort of fame as a liberal and his defense of the radical-baiter, Burns naturally occasions some surprise in certain circles. But to those who know even the bare outline of his career, there is nothing to be surprised at in his latest outburst, which is but a sequence to his former acts.

Elected in 1910 as Governor on an anti-Southern Pacific R. R. platform, he soon managed to reconcile his petty reform program with the ever-increasing reaction in his state, as exemplified by the dastardly sentence of Ford and Suhr for "participation" in the 1913 Wheatland riots. Johnson could easily have pardoned them, but he gave the pitiful excuse that the I. W. W. had sent him threatening letters.

Later, when Stephens became Governor of California, and Johnson was in the Senate, the latter, who controlled Stephens perfectly, uttered no word against the continued imprisonment of Mooney and Billings, that classic of injustice to labor's own and the vilest frame-up that ever disgraced a nation; nor did he say a word against the Criminal Syndicalism Act or against the imprisonment of its many victims.

All this in spite of the acknowledged fact that a single nod or an apprehensive cough by Johnson to Stephen would have got the instantaneous release of every one of the sacrifices to the Juggernaut of Capitalism.

This is the very same Johnson who with his fellow-Republicans, LaFollette, Borah and Capper, is haunted by the ambition to grace the White House in 1925. Indeed, he was put off at the last Republican convention only by the nomination of the intellectual nonentity from the backwoods of Ohio.

This is the Johnson who is the darling of the ultra-reactionary "M. & M." or the Merchants and Manufacturers organization of California, which is seeking to break the backbone of the labor movement in that state and which has him as its direct representative in the National legislature, where, during the debates over the most indecent tariff in American history, he fought for the protection of the precious native, "infant industries", the California prune, the almond, lemon, bean, pear, etc., etc.

This is Hiram Johnson—"PROGRESSIVE!!"

TAFT, Cal.—Nineteen men have been arrested here in a raid on supposed I. W. W. headquarters and brought to Bakersfield, where they are in jail on charges of criminal syndicalism.

With the Young Workers

Yowls Organize at Providence

The Young Workers' League of Providence, R. I., has re-organized and is making preparations to carry on its activities during the coming winter. The following officers were elected: Organizer, Louis Nardillio; Secretary, Ralph Kominsky; Financial Secretary, Wilma Newberg; Treasurer, August Nagel; Educational Manager, Nathan Lyons; Entertainment Manager, Rose D'Andreas; Music Manager, Joseph Nardillio; Athletic Manager, Joseph Hyman; Dramatic Manager, Albert Innochillio; Librarian, Albert Olson.

The League starts with a membership of 40, and has several good comrades in their membership who will work to make it 100. Their meeting place is at 141 Benefit St., every Sunday night at eight o'clock sharp. All visiting comrades are invited to come to the meetings whenever they are in Providence.

Gitlow, Out on Bail, Is Back in the Fight

Ben Gitlow is out on bail. Recently a writ of error was granted by the Supreme Court of the United States but no bail was allowed. The attorneys took the matter up and finally, Dec. 13, the bail was fixed at $7500, and Ben is back in the fight.

Friends and comrades, the question involved here is more than the freedom of one individual. [illegible] many, where the movement [illegible] perhaps adopted other forms. Its [illegible] is however the same. Aus[illegible] position is also a blow against [illegible] democracy. In Czecho[illegible] the prospects are similar. [illegible] are however transition pe[illegible]. It is the duty of the commun[illegible] to prepare the illegal [illegible]. Such periods are no sign of a [illegible] in the world revolution. On the contrary, the effect is objectively [illegible] revolutionising. The path de[illegible] by the world revolution is not a straight line.

[illegible] there will be a world war.

On the other hand we see Soviet Russia strong as never before. The new economic policy is much more than a mere episode. It has not been caused merely by the economic weakness of Russia and the political weakness of the world proletariat but is founded on important relations of forces between the Russian proletariat and the peasantry and petty bourgeoisie. Other countries, even those farthest on the road of evolution, will have to adopt similar measures for neutralizing the small farmer and the petty bourgeois. The capitalist equilibrium is destroyed. The colonies are in the midst of wars of liberation. In the Near East the crisis is within view. But at the same moment the star of Soviet Russia rises higher and higher.

The capitalist offensive is an international phenomenon. The workers are beginning to counter this offensive with increasing energy. One of the most important events within the labor movement is the union of the 2, and 2½ Internationals. In actual[illegible] means two things: first the [illegible] of the white terror against the communist parties; secondly an increased splitting up of the proletarian forces.

It is not by accident that in capitalist states leading positions are held by one-time Social Democrats of the Second International; Mussolini, Pilsudski, Ebert.

We are fighting for the unity of the trade unions. Regarded historically, reformism is losing the ground from beneath its feet. The influence of Communism increases more and more in the trade unions. Before the reformists leave the trade unions, they shatter these to pieces. Their conduct is such that we might think they were acting on the orders of the bourgeoisie. They are determined that we find the trade unions in ruins. The workers have established their great organizations at the cost of great struggles.

The trade unions are the sole effective weapon possessed by the proletariat. The reformists destroy this weapon. Schisms in the trade unions signify an immense weakening for the workers struggling for freedom.

In the present situation the division of the trade unions is a crime; perhaps a greater crime than treason in [illegible] yet been realised. The united front is no episode in our struggle, but [illegible]

In the present situation the [illegible] is the sole support of the bourgeoisie.

To win the majority of the proletariat is to decide our victory. Many are the successes already to be ascribed to the united front. It was necessary to create communist parties, even at the price of division. We must win the majority. It is our task to save the trade unions.

In our own ranks the united front tactics encounter no difficulties. The one-time opponents of the united front tactics now reply: "We join the united front." Those who want to help the workers must bring about a united front in political and economic actions alike.

The united front does not signify the creation or maintenance of election blocs; neither does it mean amalgamation with Social Democratic organisations. We should rather cut off our right hands than lend such an interpretation to the slogan of the united front.

[illegible] The united front tactics are being applied for in almost every country.

The question of a workers' government only comes in question in countries where the comparative forces permit of the government being taken over.

The workers' government is the concrete application of the united front; it will only be possible to realise it in exceptional cases. The workers' government is not an essential organic period of transition; it does not displace the dictatorship and cannot avoid the sufferings of civil war. The communist groups in the factories and workshops, and among the shop stewards, constitute the criterion for the influence of the Communist Party.

A party which does not know how to bring about a shop steward movement does not know how to actuate great mass movements either. Under present conditions we have to demand unqualified discipline.

[illegible] Revolutions, however, are not only made by following examples, but when circumstances urge revolution. The Russian workers have suffered much. Other workers will have an easier task; they will meet with the support of the sixth part of the globe. We must never forget to emphasize that the way to victory leads thru suffering. (Enthusiastic applause.)

Discussion on Report of Executive

Vajtauer, of the Czecho-Slovakian opposition, holds a polemical speech against Zinoviev's assumption that the attitude taken by the Czecho-Slovakian party has been exemplary in the question of the united front. The party has made many mistakes. Does Zinoviev wish to conceal them? The Czecho-Slovakian opposition has not committed any breach of discipline. Its measures were perhaps necessary to save the party.

Duncan Will Attend N. Y. FSR Bazaar

Isadora Duncan, whose career since her return from Russia recently has been so full of drama, will be present at the big Russian bazaar and exposition of handicraft on the last night, Dec. 23, at the Lyceum, 201 East 86th Street. Her presence will add distinction to the masquerade ball scheduled for that evening. Many other individuals whose sympathy for the first Workers' Republic is well known, will attend the grand closing of the six-day bazaar.

Isadora Duncan will be among the judges who will distribute handsome prizes to the best costumes and masks of the evening. It is expected that there will be as colorful a display of the beautiful and the bizarre in costuming as New York has never witnessed.

Feodor Chaliapin was also expected, but he has written his regrets that he will be out of New York at the time. He expresses himself as completely in harmony with the undertaking and hopeful of its success.

"I am sorry to have to inform the friends of my beloved country," he writes, "that I am unfortunately unable to take part in the generous endeavor to help my brothers."

The bazaar opened on Monday with a large attendance which may be taken as a sure sign that great numbers will attend thruout the week. As there will be a new program every evening, those who attend once can be counted upon to come again.

An inspiring selection of handicraft, including carved wood, painting, lacquer work, embroidery and other arts, was tastefully displayed in characteristically Russian settings. Color, riotously free color, was evident everywhere. The goods themselves, the booths, decorated with original paintings and posters made by the Society for Technical Aid under high class professional direction, the native Russian, Ukrainian and Karelian costumes worn by the committee, the decorations of stage and hall, the costumes of the artists who presented a magnificent entertainment program—color was supreme everywhere.

The crowds readily caught and contributed to the spirit of the occasion. There was no straggling in at late hours, long before eight o'clock the floor was covered with shoppers and merrymakers. Much interest was displayed in the low-priced ingenious toys, while the more expensive silver work, confiscated by the Soviet Government from the shops that had hitherto catered to royalty, also found admiring purchasers.

The local comrades had expected success at the bazaar, but the extent of the patronage and the splendid spirit shown by both committee workers and patrons exceeded their fondest hopes. All proceeds go to benefit the school-homes provided by the F. S. R. thru the International Workers' Relief Committee for the million Russian orphans left as the heritage of war and famine.

Workers Party Committee Collects Over $9,000 for Starving West Virginia Miners; Drive on to Aid Destitute in Pennsylvania

Toward the end of June, 1922, Lawrence Dwyer, of the United Mine Workers, came to New York in behalf of the striking West Virginia miners.

It was Mr. Dwyer's intention to line up organized labor in New York behind the starving miners of West Virginia. The condition prevailing in Beckley was particularly bad as eviction and starvation were threatening to break the brave resistance of the miners to the ruthless coal companies.

Mr. Dwyer, or "Peggy," as he is called, went to the Central Trades and Labor Council, where the response to his appeal was a resolution of "moral" support. This resolution did not, however, feed the starving families back home.

Local New York of the Workers Party, appreciating the gravity of the situation and the need for immediate assistance, sent out a call for a united front of all working-class organizations to support the West Virginia miners.

This proposal of a united front was coldly turned down by the bosses of the C. T. & L. C., who staged a little conference of their own from which the Workers Party was excluded. "Peggy" Dwyer made every effort to bring about the united front, but to no avail. Kehoe and his gang would not listen to it. The conference met and passed more resolutions. What it accomplished in the way of real relief work no one knows. It is rumored that the C. T. & L. C. has collected over $300,000 for the miners.

John Gatherum, Secretary of Dist. No. 29 of the U. M. W., which is in West Virginia, recently sent a letter to the Secretary of the Miners' Relief Committee in which he stated that he had never received this money from the C. T. & L. C. nor was he informed of the receipt of this vast sum by the National Headquarters of the U. M. W. of N. A. The question naturally arises: What was done with this money, if it was actually raised?

Not in the least discouraged by the refusal of the C. T. & L. C. to join in a united front the Workers Party organized a Miners' Relief Committee of which Mr. Dwyer became a member. The Committee immediately got busy and began to canvass individuals, unions and other organizations for funds.

A Tag Day was run (the Jewish Daily Forward urged the public not to contribute), subscription lists were sent out, affairs were held, a mass meeting with miners from West Virginia as the main speakers was arranged, and every means was employed to raise funds. During the period of its activity the committee collected more than $9,000, of which $8,225 has already been sent to West Virginia. The total amount spent in raising this money is about 4 per cent of the total, so that about 95 per cent will go for relief. This expense is for publicity, advertising, printing, rent of halls, office supplies, etc. No salary was paid.

When one compares the verbose resolutions of the C. T. & L. C. and the S. P. with the actual work done by them he should bear in mind what John Gatherum said at a meeting in New York, viz., that the Miners' Relief Committee was the only organization on which he could depend for any steady support.

The Committee is still receiving contributions and intends to continue with its work. It is now raising funds for the relief of the 45,000 miners of Fayette County, Pa.

Class-War Theories

By KARL MARX

"As far as I am concerned, I cannot arrogate to myself the honor of having discovered the existence of the classes in modern society or their struggles with one another. Middle-class historians had long before me described the historical development of this strife of the classes, and the middle-class political economists stated the economic autonomy of the classes.

"I have but added as a new contribution (1) that the existence of classes is bound up with certain historical struggles in the development of production; (2) that the class struggle leads necessarily to the dictatorship of the proletariat; (3) that this dictatorship is itself but the transition of the abolition of all classes and to the creation of a society of free and equal citizens."

Railway Clerks for Amalgamation

F. H. Gross, secretary-treasurer, Southern Railway System Board, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, signs the following statement appearing in the official organ of the union, The Railway Clerk: "At a recent meeting of the Southern Railway System Board of Adjustment, a resolution was adopted concurring in the action of the Dallas Convention in the matter of amalgamation, and requesting the Grand President to use his good offices in bringing about amalgamation with such other Brotherhoods as are favorable to the plan."

Educating the Rail Clerks

"The Railway Clerk," official organ of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, carries a page editorial in its December issue in favor of amalgamation. The article is headed, "Isolation, Co-operation, Amalgamation?"

The Militant Railroaders

The Conference called by the National Committee for the Amalgamation of the Sixteen Standard Railroad Organizations, held in Chicago, Dec. 9-10, was successful beyond the hopes of the most optimistic and enthusiastic militant in the left wing of the trade union movement of this country.

This was the conference that had frightened the politicians and labor officialdom to hurriedly transfer their Conference for Progressive Political Action from Chicago to Cleveland, Dec. 11-12. While the politicians were slipping backward in Cleveland, and doing their best to sabotage the organization of a Labor Party, the gathering of the advance guard of the railroad workers at Chicago was pushing ahead with greater confidence and speed than has ever been displayed by a similar assemblage of American labor.

For once at last we had radical workers at a convention who, while having the final emancipation of the workers from wage slavery as their goal, kept their feet on the solid earth. The leading spirits knew where they were going and they had knowledge of the way to reach the goal. They were trained and practical progressives with many years of dearly bought experience behind them.

These 441 delegates gathered at Chicago displayed a rebellious mood against the reactionary officials of their international unions, but they did not allow their emotions to run away with their good judgment. They did not spend their time railing against crooked and scheming leaders. They took steps to get rid of these officials.

The workers affiliated with the 16 railroad organizations, in general with all organized labor in the United States, may now feel that they have at last begun to grapple seriously with the problem of revolutionizing the trade union movement. The success of the Chicago Conference gives encouragement to greater hopes for similar gatherings of workers in other industries in the days that are not very far ahead.

J. Pierpont Morgan is back from Europe. Watch your pockets.

When the British jobless gained admission to the lobbies of the House of Commons and began singing "The Red Flag," they were ousted by the police. They would have fared no better at the hands of "Flag and Constitution" Keating, at Johnston's Cleveland Conference for "Progressive" Political Action.

After the "kept press" had been assured by the first day's proceedings at Cleveland that the Workers Party delegates would not be seated, the news of the gathering was pushed on the inside pages. The conference had ceased to be "dangerous" to the interests that prey on labor. It had confessed it would not disturb the established order.

Munsey's New York Herald has been interviewing representatives of different tendencies in congress trying to discover wherein they differ. The conclusion drawn in the headline is, "Inquiry in Congress Shows Old Parties Similar in Views." Munsey will begin to note differences, however, immediately the workers begin to speak in congress thru a Labor Party.

"Bill" Burns, Daugherty's prize detective, says that "the reds" are making it difficult for him in this country by establishing schools teaching Communism. Well, "Bill" is a pretty good teacher himself when it comes to teaching the workers how little they can expect from the government at Washington.

The New York Herald assures us that, "No one in the East who has the money to buy coal need suffer from the cold because of coal shortage." We were all aware of that. What Mr. Frank A. Munsey, the steel millionaire, should tell us thru his paper, is what we are to do when we have no money. That would be worth while discussing.

"The Call" is printing a series of articles on Germany that starts out with the claim that the Communists are among the "internal foes of Germany". That ought to endear this "Socialist" sheet a little more to the reactionary officials of American labor, but not to the great rank and file of the thinking workers of this country. Communism is the best friend the workers of Germany have in their present hour of trial.

Our latest impressions gained from reading the kept press reports of the Lausanne "Peace Conference" is that when a capitalist diplomat says something it is a "statesmanlike declaration on behalf of all mankind," but when a spokesman for Soviet Russia gets in a few words of truth it is "Bolshevik propaganda." But most newspaper readers have become accustomed to getting the truth by transposition. So it is becoming easier to nail a kept press falsehood.

Malakka (Java) describes the revolutionary movement in the East. The boycott movement which had been carried out, altho it was not Communist, nevertheless brought revolutionary results. Pan-Islamism is also playing a revolutionary part.

Concluding Words of Zinoviev

There are several kinds of Labor Governments. Every bourgeois government is a capitalist bourgeois government, but not every labor gov- [illegible] must support such a government from time to time.

A second type of labor government is the Social Democratic Government which must eventually be supported by us provisionally.

A third type is the coalition government of Social Democrats, Trade Unions and Communists. This can become the starting point of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

The fourth type, the real Labor Government, is only a pseudonym for the dictatorship.

Every labor government can become the transition point for the dictatorship. It is not the form but the political content that counts. The most important thing is: the bourgeoisie will not willingly resign its privileges. Therefore the overthrow of the bourgeoisie must be first brought about.

With the erection of the labor government two things are to be distin- [illegible] civil war.

The opportunist danger is very great.

Ruth Fischer complains that the Third Congress failed to deal with the Levi group as it deserved. But at the time some of the best elements of the German Communist Party were in this group. It was necessary to isolate Levi in order to save these elements of his group for the party. This has been done.

The Executive had also criticised the errors of the Rathenau action. The united front without the possibility of independent propaganda is suicidal. It was right to fight the monarchists but not to awaken illu- [illegible] Duret. If Duret has erred and wishes to atone for his mistakes, so much the better. His argument that the tactics of the united front are only possible in Germany where we are confronted with strong Social Democratic Parties is not correct. It is much easier to unfold the movement among large unorganized masses, where the revolutionary initiative has greater success. Duret was right when he pointed out the danger of a split. A portion will come to us. We shall submit to them not twenty-one but forty-two conditions.

Bordiga asks what criterion there is for testing whether the majority is with us. There are many criteria. It is not a question of embracing the [illegible] The opposition must either submit or it will have the whole International against it.

Domski claims that the tactics of the united front are not correct for Poland. But it is precisely in Poland where the Polish Socialist Party displays the signboard of a labor government that the united front tactics have good prospects of success. At the time when the Red Army was marching on Warsaw, Domski was against military assistance. That was nationalism in disguise. If the bourgeoisie mutually assist each other with arms, the workers can also do the same. It makes no difference whether it is the Hungarian, Polish, [illegible] (Sustained applause.)

Before the vote on the resolution Duret, Souvarine and Dormoy, in the name of the fractions, declare [illegible] they will vote for the resolution of the Executive to prove their [illegible] to the Communist International.

The resolution expresses full approval of the actions of the Executive and declares the decisions of the Executive, reached in the interval between the 3rd and 4th Congresses [illegible] be binding, and their infringement [illegible] breach of discipline. The strict execution of the 21 points is demanded.

The resolution is adopted by the Congress, the Italian majority abstaining from voting.

[illegible] Established [illegible] Work of [illegible] No. 2 Convention

By H. M. WICKS

[illegible] convention of District No. 2 of [illegible] Party, New York, New [illegible] Connecticut, was held in [illegible] City, Sunday. The 37 [illegible] in attendance were unani[illegible] the opinion that it was a [illegible] in the development of the [illegible]. [illegible] the many resolutions re[illegible] by the Resolutions Committee [illegible] most significant was that [illegible] the determination of the [illegible] continue its propaganda for [illegible] of a Labor Party that [illegible] trade unions and political [illegible] of the working [illegible] spite of the monstrous be[illegible] the rank and file of labor by [illegible] labor tricksters in con[illegible] the recent Cleveland Confer[illegible] Progressive Political Action.

[illegible] resolutions deals with the [illegible] of Soviet Russia, endorse[illegible] the Russian-American Industrial Corporation, the Friends of [illegible] Russia, and special work [illegible] working women.

[illegible] Communist Party

[illegible] resolution that developed [illegible] division was the one [illegible] the question of an open [illegible] Party in America, which [illegible] by a delegate from [illegible] J., on instructions of [illegible] The debate on this ques[illegible] about three hours and [illegible] of the problem were [illegible]

The comrade from Paterson who was compelled by his local to introduce the resolution expressed his personal opposition to it and declared that altho he voted for it, it was only because he obeyed the discipline of his local. The resolution was defeated by a vote of 31 to 4, two of the delegates not voting.

Industrial Activity Increasing

The report of the industrial organizer showed a marked increase on the part of the membership in relation to the trade union activity. In every branch and local industrial organizers are being selected and a complete survey of our membership is being taken in order to apportion the industrial tasks to those capable of participating in such work.

The Trade Union Educational League was endorsed as the one organization that is unifying the left elements in the labor movement in the country and all members were instructed to affiliate with the League and support it actively in every way.

The Industrial Organizer is touring the District and will coordinate the work so that every blow against the reaction in the labor movement in the country and for the creation of more effective forms of organization will count.

Question of the Third International

On the question of the Communist International, it was declared that the Workers Party is a fraternal affiliation of the Third, whose leadership we accept and further declares that the Communist International is the one movement that inspires hope in the heart of the working class and fear in the heart of the capitalist class of the world.

Election of Delegates

In addition to electing a new District Executive Committee, the convention elected delegates to the National Convention of the Workers Party as follows: Ludwig Lore, H. M. Wicks, C. E. Ruthenberg, William F. Dunne, Elmer T. Allison, Alexander Bittleman, Hays, Kemmel, G. Ashkenousi, B. Lipschitz, Edward Lindgren, J. Louis Engdahl and M. J. Olgin.

Push the Labor Defense Council Christmas Drive

"ON CHRISTMAS DAY IN THE YEAR 1922 WE GIVE TO PROTECT AMERICAN LIBERTY."

"WE GIVE TO PRESERVE OUR IDEALS OF FREE SPEECH, FREE PRESS AND FREEDOM OF ASSEMBLAGE."

"WE GIVE TO DEFEND THE VICTIMS OF THE MICHIGAN RED RAIDS WHO ARE BEARING THE BRUNT OF THE STRUGGLE FOR CIVIL LIBERTY."

That is the slogan that echoes and re-echoes thruout the length and breadth of the United States in answer to the Christmas appeal that has been issued by the Labor Defense Council thru its national office in Chicago and thru each of the one hundred local Labor Defense Councils located in one hundred principal cities in all parts of the country.

The Labor Defense Council Christmas Drive, begun last week, is made in a determined effort to raise the funds necessary for the defense of William Z. Foster and nineteen other victims of the raids which took place in Bridgman, Mich. These men are now scheduled to go to trial at St. Joseph, Mich., Jan. 15. The Christmas Drive exploiting the Christmas spirit is scheduled so as to have all possible funds on hand by the time the case begins with which to give to the defendants the best possible legal defense that can be provided and to create the best possible local conditions under which to try the case.

THE WORKER wishes at this time to make an official endorsement of the work of the Labor Defense Council and to urge each of its readers to support to the utmost the defense activity. There is no single issue before the American working class of more importance. There is infinitely more than free speech involved, infinitely more than the liberty of the twenty defendants at stake. It is true that on the result of this case depends in large part the measure of free speech which is to be allowed to militant workers in Michigan and in the United States as a whole. It is true that on the results of this case depends the freedom of twenty of the best militants in the American labor movement.

But there are far greater issues at stake than Free Speech in the abstract or freedom for even the best of militants. THE RESULTS OF THE MICHIGAN CASE WILL DETERMINE IN LARGE PART WHETHER THE LABOR MOVEMENT WILL BE ALLOWED TO MOVE FORWARD COMPARATIVELY FREE FROM THE GUERILLA WARFARE THAT IS BEING WAGED ON IT BY BURNS-DAUGHERTY ANTI-LABOR AGENCY AND ITS HOST OF GUNMEN MANNED DETECTIVE AGENCIES, OR WHETHER WEST VIRGINIA AND THE STEEL CORPORATION OWNED COMMUNITIES IN PENNSYLVANIA ARE TO SERVE AS A MODEL UPON WHICH THE REST OF THE UNITED STATES WILL BASE THEIR ATTITUDE TOWARD POLITICAL AND INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY OF LABOR.

The issue cannot but be clear to all readers of papers such as ours. Is this the time for comparative peaceful development of the labor movement or are Red Raid Days made infamous by A. Mitchell Palmer in 1919-1920 to be made a permanent every-day feature of American life, with its positive resultant of bitter class struggle and open violent warfare? The results of the Michigan case will have definite and immediate bearing on this issue. A conviction in Michigan cannot but have tremendous effect in encouraging the labor-haters to still further depredations on the labor movement. An acquittal in Michigan can call a halt to the campaign which has put hundreds of the best men of labor behind prison bars.

PUSH THE LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL CHRISTMAS DRIVE, IS OUR CHRISTMAS GREETING TO OUR READERS. It is our readers and the readers of similar papers who can put the drive across, who can secure an acquittal for the twenty men on trial. Literature for this drive can be secured from LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL, 166 W. WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL., and from local Labor Defense Councils. New York Office, Room 434, 80 East 11th St.

Robbed of Power, Mine Owners' Tools Attack Workers Party Speaker

great big hulk of a fellow just like the sheriff of one of the old western bad men towns. This person I soon discovered was the Chief of Police. Both he and the Mayor were more than a little drunk.

The Chief of Police had a small-sized cannon in his hand, and together with the Mayor began backing me toward the wall. At the same time both of them demanding to know why I was organizing those damn foreigners against the officials of the local union.

When I tried to explain to them that I was not attacking the local officials whom I did not even know by name, they shoved me up against the wall and began to curse and revile me at the top of their voices.

In the midst of this uproar, three or four other policemen came in with drawn guns. The Mayor then proceeded to beat me up with his fists, finally drawing his automatic threatening to shoot me.

While the Mayor was "doing his bit" a couple of the policemen stood with their guns barrel in hand, ready to crack my skull if I made any effort to defend myself.

I asked to be allowed to go back upstairs, and the Mayor replied, "If you get out of this town alive, you'll be lucky." He then ordered the police to run me out of town. I then asked to be allowed to get my hat and coat. They answered to this last request, with a loud laugh on the part of the upholders of "law and order" together with numerous shoves, kicks, pulls, as they got me out into the street. My back was badly sprained during this ejection.

Immediately we were out in the street one of the policemen fired a shot partly to scare me, because it was pitch dark, and partly to keep the crowd inside the hall from attempting to follow us.

The Mayor then ordered that I be driven down to the river and thrown in, and that if I tried to get back to shore I should be shot.

Then with many shovings, kickings, and unlimited verbal abuse, I was driven thru the mud and underbrush in pitchy darkness to the bank of the river.

Upon reaching the bank of the river there was a consultation between the Mayor and the Chief of Police, and another person, during which they at length decided that they were going a bit too strong.

After this conference they decided that they would take me to the railroad tracks and drive me out of town. Then with more mistreatment and soaking wet from head to foot I was "conducted" back over the same road towards town.

It was while on the way back from the river that I heard the voice of some one who I am quite sure is not on the police force at Zeigler. This person was talking to the Mayor in a rather superior fashion about some people mistaking "liberty for licence" and under the privileges to all Americans seeking to instill insidious propaganda into the foreigners against American institutions. Mayor Hogan took the "hint" and developed the idea immediately to take me down thru town to the city Drug Store where the American Miners congregated in the evening.

The purpose of this exhibition as considerably explained to me by his "Honor" was to turn me over to the American Miners. "They'll hang you when I tell them what you are doing down here." This was the Mayor's version of what would happen. There were other versions such as, "They'll tar and feather him," etc.

Once more I heard the voice of the "mysterious stranger" in conversation with the Mayor. I could not make but what he was saying except a word occasionally. These disconnected words and phrases indicated that the conversation was about some recent developments in the old local No. 992, U. M. W. of A. The Mayor summing up the whole matter said, "We ought to take.......... ......, and ...., and tie them with this ...., (The latter being myself) and hang them together.

When we reached the Drug Store the Mayor went inside, called the American Miners out in front. He then explained to them that I was stirring up "those damn foreigners to fight the local union," and much more of the same kind of stuff, winding up with a very broad invitation to the twelve or fifteen American Miners to take me and do as they pleased with me.

Whenever I tried to answer any of the misstatements, not to mention the purposeful lies of "His Honor," I received a punch or a kick from some of the policemen, who were standing about me with their guns still in their hands.

The Mayor was greatly disappointed when upon his invitation the American Miners stood indifferent to everything that he had said. They just stood there, looked at the Mayor and looked at me, but said nothing.

When the Mayor saw that they were not going to respond, he ordered the police to run me out of town over the railroad, informing me that "You better not show your face around here again, or you'll get shot on sight."

The police then took me out to the railroad tracks, the edge of town, and after repeating Mayor Hogan's warning told me to keep on going. Then to emphasize what they and the Mayor had said, they fired two shots after me, one of which just missed my head.

I have just learned that the men whose names the Mayor mentioned with my own stating that in his opinion we should all three be tied together and hung, are men active in the local union and who have lately defeated the Mayor in his continued efforts to use the local union as a means to his further political advancement.

Mayor Hogan has been so completely exposed before the members of the local union as an enemy of the workers, that he cannot take the floor to speak without the members in the union hooting him down.

The reason for the attack upon me lies in the above fact, that Mayor Hogan and those represented by the "mysterious stranger" above referred—perhaps the mine manager; perhaps the local business men's representative, have completely lost control of the local union which means a great deal in a mining town.

Nov.-Dec. "Liberator"

The Liberator, Nov.-Dec. number, much enlarged, has changed its policy somewhat in so far as it now publishes more articles of a political nature in consonance with the policy of the Workers Party.

This does not of course, exclude the other features for which the Liberator is noted all over the world. There are cartoons by Gropper, Minor, Art Young, Gellert, Adolph Dehn, Lydia Gibson; the usual excellent book reviews and fine poetry and articles. It may be obtained for 30 cents on news stands or from the office, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

WORKERS PARTY

799 Broadway [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] will be the American Fascisti of tomorrow.

Colonel Alvin Owsley, commander of the American Legion, [illegible] assures these skeptics that, "The American Legion stands ready to protect our country's institutions and ideals as the Fascisti deals with the destructionists who menace Italy".

Of course, the "institutions" that Owsley's American (Fascisti) Legion will protect, are the institutions of capitalism, the "ideals" of the present wage slave system, of profiteering and plundering at the expense of the helpless many.

The important thing right now is that this White Guard of the class struggle days to come is receiving the support of prominent officials of labor, and politicians who lean on labor.

Gompers and Berry were shining stars at the New Orleans Convention of the American Legion. Gompers and Berry sat in at the La Follette Conference of "Progressives" at Washington, republicans and democrats, who raise no protest against the Legion threat of a Fascisti Military Dictatorship for the United States. These politicians at Washington prepared the chloroform that put the Cleveland conference to sleep.

In the recent elections in Italy we saw that the politicians of all parties, except the parties of the workers, were with Mussolini and his Fascisti. Let the workers of America remember that labor politicians and labor officials of today, who refuse to join in the development of the workers' political power thru the organization of a Labor Party, are the best agents of Owsley's Legionnaires. Workers! They are your enemies! Watch them! Fight them! You lose with them! You will win without them!

An anti-Bolshevist by the name of Zinoviev was put under arrest by Mussolini's Italian Fascisti because he had a name like that of the chairman of the Communist International. It was only with some difficulty that he quieted the fears of the White Guardists and won his release.

The Truth Isn't in Them

We note in the New York Globe, Dec. 18, a headline typical of the new campaign of falsehood against Soviet Russia. It says, "Russia Starves, But Prepares to Export Huge Grain Cargoes."

The headline appears over two items, one with a Moscow and the other with a White Plains, N. Y., date line. The Moscow item tells of plans to export grain from Russian Black Sea ports, especially Odessa. The White Plains item records the plea made by David A. Brown, recently returned from Soviet Russia, for $100,000,000 from congress at Washington to be turned over to the American Relief Administration to be used in purchasing ploughs, tractors and seed to help reconstruct Russian agriculture. Nowhere is there any mention of any facts that might form a basis for the expression "Russia Starves."

To be sure Russia is still hungry, very hungry. If there are any spots where famine still prevails the Soviet government knows all about it, and it does not seek to hide them.

But the peasants as well as the Soviet Government know that in order to re-establish Russian agriculture, ploughs, tractors and other farm implements, with seeds of many kinds, must be imported. Russian industry has not been sufficiently re-established to meet this need. Capitalist governments and foreign bankers and industrialists will not extend loans or credits. So the Russian peasants must do the best they can,—pull their belts another notch tighter, sell some of their grain in foreign lands and thus secure funds with which to buy the agricultural machinery they need.

The Russian peasants did not reject the food Hoover sent thru the American Relief Administration. If Brown can persuade congress to send $100,000,000 worth of ploughs and tractors in support of their war on hunger, they will welcome the aid.

But they will always remember that it was the "Friends of Soviet Russia" that not only rushed the first relief to fight the famine more than a year ago, but also sent the first tractor unit into the Volga Valley to help liquidate the famine, and to teach the Russian peasantry how to lighten their burdens for all time thru the use of the latest types of agricultural machinery.

Foreign capitalists may also extend credits to Soviet Russia, but the workers in the cities will always remember that aid came to them first thru such workers' organizations as the Russian-American Industrial Corporation launched by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

It is not to be expected that the kept press will give any credit to these efforts to aid Russia. It is understood that they will lie about them. It will do this because the truth is not in them when recording the developments of the workers' struggle for power.

The Japanese Labor Association, of Hawaii, has filed a statement with the Federal Labor Investigation Commission declaring that this U. S. dependency is a "sugar kingdom" ruled politically and economically by a few sugar capitalists. If it will bring any comfort to the Jap sugar workers in Hawaii, we might say that there are a lot of such kingdoms in this country, coal, iron, steel, copper, lumber kingdoms. That is the way capitalism rules.

The Standard Oil Company has given up its plans to exploit the oil resources of Czecho-Slovakia. It has not been able, it says, to make the "proper arrangements" with the government. No doubt the Czecho-Slovakians wouldn't agree to 300 per cent stock dividends.

"Labor" War Premier Falls

It has taken the Australian labor movement eight years to shake itself loose from Premier W. M. Hughes. But it has finally accomplished the task and Hughes goes the way of Lloyd George.

When the war started, Hughes was the labor premier of Australia. He turned jingo like the "Socialists" of Europe, and did his utmost to send the youth of Australia to the trenches in France to fight the battles of the British king against the German kaiser.

He managed to remain in the saddle until the present elections in which he appeared under Nationalist banners, supported by all the forces of jingo reaction.

The results of the elections to the federal house of representatives show the following: Labor Party, 34; Nationalists, 27; Country Party and Liberals, 14. In the last house the Labor Party had only 24 members, the Nationalists, 39, and the Country-Liberals, 17. The Labor Party has also made big gains in the elections to the senate.

While the Labor Party does not have a clear majority, it rises, nevertheless, as a greater and more solidified power, divorced from its nationalistic and compromising influences. It will be heard from in the days to come.

While British diplomats at Lausanne are voicing pious protests against alleged Turkish atrocities in the Near East, three more workers are [illegible] to death in South Africa for participation in the miners' strike on the Rand. They died singing "The Red Flag."

Pawns of the Capitalist Allies

Bonar Law in the British House of Commons refuses increased doles to the unemployed. He pleads inability to pay off the U. S. debts until France, Belgium and Italy pay. Bankrupt France insists on Germany paying, because she must have the money. Italy is on the verge of financial ruin.

Yet these capitalist allies, Great Britain, France and Italy, unwilling to discuss disarmament at Genoa and The Hague, have now denied their pawns, the states bordering on Soviet Russia, the right to conclude a disarmament agreement with the Workers' Republic.

Chitcherin for Soviet Russia, frankly announces that Moscow wants to disband her army and spend all possible funds for reconstruction. Perhaps Finland, Poland, Latvia, Esthonia and Roumania would like to do the same.

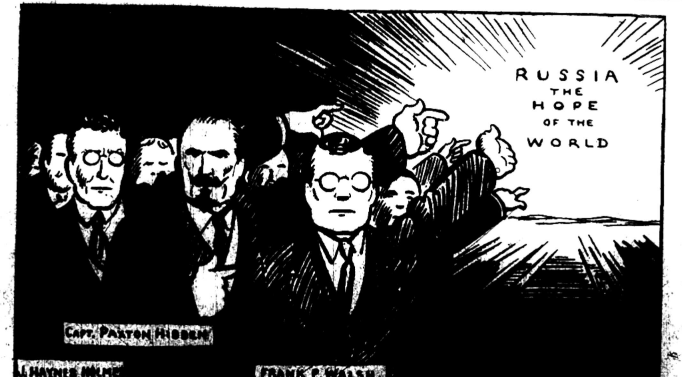
But the capitalist allies must have their buffer states against rising Communism. Germany must be surrounded by a ring of small nations dependent on the Paris imperialists. The war dogs that were kicked out of Soviet Russia must, nevertheless, be kept barking away from neighboring frontiers. So the Moscow Conference between the representatives of Russia and border countries failed to reach definite disarmament proposals.

The workers of the capitalist countries will continue to suffer under the burden of armaments, in spite of Harding's Washington Conference whose child the Five-Power Naval Treaty, has not yet been recognized by either France or Italy. And the United States, thru the General Board of the Navy, is planning to spend $400,000,000 for new warships. That means $4 more for war from every man, woman and child in the land.

Capitalism needs armaments, great navies, huge armies to bolster itself up a little longer.

Workers! End wars! End armaments! Crush capitalism! Usher in the rule of the workers everywhere in harmony with the victorious struggle and high aspirations of your Russian brothers and comrades.

Altho Harding, Hughes and Hoover are still opposing recognition of Soviet Russia, the United States with Turkey, Greece, England, Italy and other countries sent 333 ships to Russian Black Sea ports from January to August. Perhaps the republican administration at Washington will some day wake up to the fact that trade can get along without the flag.



When their voices [illegible] they say:—
FRANK P. WALSH: "Soviet Russia is the strongest government in Europe today, with the best title to live."
PAXTON HIBBEN: "The workers of Soviet Russia are the only workers with a government of the workers, by the workers and for the workers in the world."
JOHN HAYNES HOLMES: "Russia seems the brightest spot of Europe. It is the one place where the future seems a thing of hope and not of dread and terror."

[illegible] Victories

The [illegible], a news agency, quotes Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, to the effect that:

"I know of no political achievement in any country that surpassed the accomplishment of American labor in the campaign just closed."

That makes Gompers' self-proclaimed victory, Nov. 7, 1922, greater even than the Russian Bolshevik Revolution of five years before. Of course, according to Gompers, the recent election of 142 labor members to the British parliament was a mere wheeze.

It is this sort of shallow bombast that is intended to capture some workers in this country. Not a single "Socialist" spoke against it at the Cleveland Conference. James Oneal, the logician if not the magician of the "Socialist" Party voted for just that when he cast his ballot against the Labor Party at Cleveland.

"Parliamentary authority comparable to that in the hands of British labor today can only be gained by breaking away from the present policies of the American Federation of Labor".

Even MacDonald, wedded to the reformist policies of the Second (Socialist) International, sees the futility of chasing rainbows among the capitalist political organizations. British labor graduated from that stage of political impotency 20 years ago. Perhaps the "Socialists", Hillquit, Oneal, Berger and the rest, feel that it will take as long for labor in this country to make the advance achieved by British labor, and so they sit on Gompers' doorstep catching at any crumbs that may come their way.

But the workers of the United States will move ahead, rapidly, because they must, and develop that political strength that will make the pretensions of Gompers and his "Socialists" the forgotten things of the hazy past.

The fight for the American Labor Party has only just begun, but it is making encouraging headway everywhere. Get into the fight for the Labor Party.

"Windy" Linde has blown in from Warsaw. But they are holding him at Ellis Island. Still no sign of that 10,000-word confession of the Wall Street explosion. Perhaps Burns has rushed "Windy" back to the U. S. A. as a star witness for Daugherty in the impeachment proceedings now pending against the attorney general. Who knows?

Xmas Gifts for the Workers

This is the gift-giving season again. It is taken for granted that the gift-giver is welcome. But is this always true?

The capitalist gives the worker low wages, unemployment or long days of intensive labor, unbearable conditions of toil, high prices for all the necessities of life, high prices for food, high rents, high cost of clothes. The worker must be glad to get these gifts for he continues to accept them, sometimes even gladly.

When the worker rebels, the capitalist bears other gifts to those who labor, thru his city, state and national governments, the policemen's club, the state cossacks, the federal troops, Daugherty injunctions, with an occasional Supreme Court decision, Railroad "Labor" Board decree, or Esch-Cummins Law. And the worker accepts them because he submits to them with only an occasional whimper.

Then there comes the Communist. He offers the worker a gift—pointing him the road to power and his own emancipation from all the evils of the present system—the greatest gift of all time.

Communism, thru the delegates of the Workers Party at Cleveland, offered to labor new power thru the class organization of its political power. But the gift was rejected and the gift-bearers expelled. At least no great protest from the masses has been heard against the reactionary Cleveland decisions.

Communism, thru the militants in the labor unions, offers the workers amalgamation, unified organizations for aggressive, winning struggles against their exploiters. But the labor masses still continue to pass this gift by. With few exceptions they still stick to those officials and forms of organizations the kept press of their masters classify as loyal and lawful, to flag and constitution and country.

But there are many and growing indications that the workers are adopting a changing attitude toward the gift-bearers.

The railroad amalgamation conference at Chicago, as well as the terror with which the dictators of the Cleveland political gathering received the delegates of the Workers Party, augurs well for future developments.

The ferment is at work. This holiday season the workers are thinking more than ever upon the gifts offered them, by frantic capitalism, by the growing forces of Communism.

In the hour that labor rejects the hideous offerings of the present savage social order, and accepts Communism, in that hour shall labor receive its greatest gift—FREEDOM.

Our Second Convention

THE WORKER extends sincerest greetings to the delegates assembling for the Second National Convention of the Workers Party.

It joins the party membership thruout the nation in earnest hopes for great accomplishments by this gathering in developing the strength of our movement in all the activities of the American working class.

In one short year the Workers Party has taken its place as a big factor in the struggle of American labor. It has been active in the epoch-making conflicts waged this year for the first time on a national scale by the coal miners and the railroad workers.

It showed itself at Cleveland the only organization of labor definitely and aggressively fighting for an amalgamation of the workers' political power in a Labor Party opposed to the parties of capitalism.

It is the largest independent political unit of the American working class, neither the "Socialist" Party nor the Farmer-Labor Party being able to claim near as many as the 20,000 dues-paying members enrolled in its ranks.

The Workers Party holds its second convention with its international relations definitely established in its fraternal affiliation with the Communist International.

The Workers Party is growing on all fronts because American labor is learning more and more that it is a necessary and vital weapon in the war on capitalism. The party membership, and with it all party activities, is growing. The army of readers of the party's various publications in many languages is rapidly increasing.

It was the difficult task of the first convention of the Workers Party to create an organization for the waging of the open struggle for Communism in spite of the black reaction that then prevailed, that still prevails in these United States.

It is the equally difficult task of the second convention of the Workers Party to definitely determine the developing tactics of the past year thru which the Communist movement has opened an approach to the great masses of the American working class.

We are confident that the second convention will accomplish this task fully as well the first convention performed its duty. Thus, with the opening of the new year, the Workers Party will proceed to greater achievements, to the making of greater progress, toward the day that will mark the passing of an old social system—capitalism—that will herald the dawn of the new social [illegible]
